THE COMPLETE WORKS
OF
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,

WITH A FULL AND COMPREHENSIVE LIFE; A HISTORY OF THE EARLY DRAMA; AN INTRODUCTION TO EACH PLAY; THE READINGS OF FORMER EDITIONS; GLOSSARIAL AND OTHER NOTES, ETC., ETC., FROM THE WORKS OF

COLLIER, KNIGHT, DYCE, DOUCE, HALLIWELL, HUNTER, RICHARDSON, VERPLANCK, AND HUDSON.

EDITED BY GEORGE LONG DUYCKINCK.

PHILADELPHIA:
PORTER & COATES.
PUBLISHERS' PREFACE.

The want of an edition of Shakespeare which would give the student or reader the works of the Great Poet in a convenient form, with large type, unburdened with discursive or critical notes, but only such as would be necessary to a more perfect understanding of the text, has been so often expressed as to induce the publishers to issue the present edition. The text is that of the Collier Folio of 1632.

The preparation of the Notes was confided to the late George Long Duyckinck, Esq., a gentleman of rare taste. It has been the aim, by close condensation, to convey a greater amount of information directly illustrative of the text than has ever been presented in a similar form.

The notes illustrative of obsolete words, expressions, and customs, have been derived from Mr. Collier's first edition, Knight's Pictorial Shakespeare, the works of Dyce, Douce, Halliwell, Hunter, Richardson, and the American editions of Messrs. Verplanck and Hudson, with such aid as Mr. Duyckinck's long acquaintance with the Dramatic and general Literature of the age of Elizabeth and James could furnish.

The head of the Poet, which forms the frontispiece, is a faithful copy of the engraving by Martin Droeshout, which is printed on the title-page of the folios of 1623 and 1632, and upon which Ben Jonson wrote the celebrated lines testifying so decidedly to the faithfulness of the likeness,—a stronger guaranty than can be claimed for any other portrait of the Dramatist existing.

By the addition of the exhaustive Life of Shakespeare, Players' Dedication, and Address to Readers, the Will of Shakespeare, the commendatory verses of men of the time, a thorough History of the Drama and Stage, a full descriptive introduction to each play, ample elucidatory notes, the Poetical Works, and the numerous spirited illustrations, it is believed nothing more can be desired to make this a truly complete edition of the Works of Shakespeare.
THE EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

To the most Noble and Incomparable Paire of Brethren. William Earle of Pembroke, &c.
Lord Chamberlaine to the Kings most Excellent Maiesty.

And Philip Earle of Montgomery, &c. Gentleman of his Maiesties Bed-Chamber.
Both Knights of the most Noble Order of the Garter, and our singular good Lords.

Right Honourable,

HILST we studie to be thankful in our particular, for the many favors we have receiued from your L. L. we are falne upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diuerse things that can bee, feare, and rashnesse; rashnesse in the enterprize, and feare of the succeffe. For, when we valew the places your H. H. sustaine, we cannot but know their dignity greater, then to descend to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have depriu’d our felues of the defence of our Dedication. But since your L. L. haue beene pleas’d to thinke these trifles some-thing, heeretofore; and haue profequuted both them, and their Author liuing, with so much favour: we hope, that (they out-liuing him, and he not hauing the fate, common with some, to be exe-quutor to his owne writings) you will vie the like indulgence toward them, you haue done vnto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any Booke chooie his Patrones, or finde them: This hath done both. For, so much were your L. L. likings of the feueral parts, when they were acte, as before they were publiſhed, the Volume ask’d to be yours. We haue but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians; without ambition either of selfe-profit, or fame; only to kepe the memory of so worthy a Friend, & Fellow alio, as was our SHAKESPEARE, by humble offer of his playes, to your most noble patronage. Wherein, as we haue iustly observd, no man to come neere your L. L. but with a kind of religious addresſe; it hath bin the height of our care, who are the Presenters, to make the preſent worthy of your H. H. by the perfection. But, there we must alſo craue our abilities to be confiderd, my Lords. We cannot go beyond our owne powers. Country hands reach forth milke, creame, fruities, or what they haue: and many Nations (we haue heard) that had not gummes & incense, obtained their requestes with a leauened Cake. It was no fault to approch their Gods, by what means they could: And the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to Temples. In that name therefore, we most humbly confecrate to your H. H. theſe remains of your fervant Shakespeare: that what delight is in them, may be euer your L. L. the reputation his, & the faults ours, if any be committed, by a pavre fo carefull to shew their gratitude both to the liuing, and the dead, as is

Your Lordshippes most bounden,

TO THE GREAT VARIETY OF READERS.

ROM the most able, to him that can but spell: There you are number'd. We had rather you were weighd. Especially, when the fate of all Bookes depends upon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your purfes. Well! it is now publique, & you wil stand for your priuiledges wee know: to read, and cenfure. Do fo, but buy it first. That doth beft commend a Booke, the Stationer faies. Then, how odde foeuer your braines be, or your wifedomes, make your licence the fame, and spare not. Judge your fixe-pen'orth, your shillings worth, your fiue shillings worth at a time, or higher, so you rife to the iuft rates, and welcome. But, what euer you do, Buy. Cenfure will not drive a Trade, or make the Iacke go. And though you be a Magiftrate of wit, and fit on the Stage at Black-Friers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes dailie, know, these Playes haue had their triall alreadie, and tood out all Appeales; and do now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation.

It had bene a thing, we confeffe, worthie to haue bene wished, that the Author himfelfe had liu'd to haue fet forth, and ouerfeen his owne writings; But since it hath bin ordain'd otherwife, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envie his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to haue colletced & publish'd them; and fo to haue publish'd them, as where (before) you were abus'd with diuerfe flolne, and surrepptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and flealthes of injurious impoffers, that expos'd them: even those, are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfec of their limbes; and all the refl, abolute in their numbers, as he conceive them. Who, as he was a happie imitator of Nature, was a moft gentle expreffor of it. His mind and hand went together: And what he thought, he uttered with that eafinesse, that wee haue scarce receiued from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our prouince, who onely gather his works, and giue them you, to praife him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your diuers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be loft. Reade him, therefore; and againe, and againe: And if then you doe not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to vnderftand him. And fo we leve you to other of his Friends, whom if you need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade your felues, and others. And such Readers we wift with him.

Upon the Epitaph of my worthy Friend, the Author, Master William Shakspere, and his Works.

Spectator, this life's shadow is:—to see
The true image, and a lively heer,
Turn reader. But observe his comic vein,
Laugh; and proceed next to a tragic strain,
Then weep:—so,—when thou find'st two contraries,
Two different passions from thy wrapt soul rise,—
Say, (who alone effect such wonders could)
Rare Shakspere to the life thou dost beheld.

In Epitaph on the admirable Dramatic Poet, W. Shakespeare.

What need my Shakspere, for his honour'd bones,
The grave, whose dauber's age in piled stones?
Or that his hallow'd relics should be hid
Under a star-pointing pyramid?
Dear son of memory, great heir of fame,
What need'st thou such dull witness of thy name?
Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a lasting monument:
For whilst, to the shame of slow-endeavouring art,
Thy easy numbers flow; and that each part
Hath, from the leaves of thy unvalued book,
Those Delphic lines with deep impression took;
Then thou, our fancy of herself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving;
And, so sepulchred, in such pomp dost lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

To the Memory of the deceased Author, Master W. Shakespere.

Shakespeare, at length thy pious fellows give
The world thy works; thy works, by which outlive
Thy tomb thy name must; when that stone is rent,
And time doth dim the name of Stratford made out.
Here we alive shall view thee still: this book,
When brass and marble fade, shall make thee look
Fresh to all ages; when posterity
Shall love what's new, think all is prodigy
That is not Shakespeare's, every line, each verse,
Here shall revive, redeem thee from thy hearse.
Nor fire, nor cankering age, as Naso said
Of his, thy wit-brought book shall once invade:

1 An Epitaph on the admirable Dramatic Poet, W. Shakespeare. Three lines, like the preceding, have no name appended to them in the folio, 1623, but the authorship is ascertained by the publication of them in Milton's, in the edition of his Poems in 1645, 5vo. We give them as they stand there, because it is evident that they were then printed from a copy of the folio; that the authoms are interesting, and Malone pointed out only one, and that certainly the least important. Instead of "weak witness" in line 6, the folio 1632 has "dull witness"; instead of "live long monument," in line 8, the folio has "last monuments;" instead of "heart," in line 10, the folio has "part;" an evident misprint; and instead of "itself preserving," in line 13, the folio has "as if her preserving." The last is the difference mentioned by Malone, who also places [John Milton] at the end, as if the name were found in the folio of 1632.

2 Thus when thy faire correct'd by the Roman's shake: I Leonard Digges prefixed a long copy of verses to the edition of Shakespeare's Poems in 1640, 5vo, in which he makes this passage, referring to the "fair correct'd by the Roman's shake," of Shakespeare's plays at that time drew, in comparison with Ben Jon-

No shall I e'er believe or think thee dead,
(Though miss'd) until our bankrupt stage be sped
(Impossible) with some new strain t' out-do
Fashions of Juliet, and her Romeo;
Or till I hear a scene more nobly take,
Than when thy half-world parrying Romans spake.
Till these, till all thy works at last,
Shall with more fire, more feeling, be express'd,
Be sure, (our Shakspere,) thou canst never die,
But, crown'd with laurel, live eternally.

To the Memory of M. W. Shake-speare.

We wonder'd (Shakespeare) that thou wert 'st so soon
From the world's stage to the grave's tiring-room:
We thought thee dead; but this thy printed worth
Tells us, that, spectators, that thou didst set forth
To enter with applause. An actor's art
Can die, and live to act a second part:
That's but an exit of mortality,
This a re-entrance to a plaudite.

To the Memory of my beloved, the Author, Mr. William Shakespeare, and what he hath left us.

To draw no envy (Shakespeare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy book, and fame;
While I confess thy writings to be such,
As another man, nor muse, can praise too much;
"Tis true, and all men's sufferage; but these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise:
For seclis ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right,
Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but groops, and urgeth all by chace;
Or crafty makes might pretend this praise.

And think to ruin, where it seemed to raise;
These natures are like naught in their whole.
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more
But thou art proof against them; and, indeed,
Above th'ill fortune of them, or the need.
I, therefore, will begun—Soul of the age,
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage,
My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee
By Chancer, or Sponsor; or bid Beaumont lie
A little further, to make thee a room:

When, some new day, they would not brook a line
Of tedious, though well-labour'd, Catalogue;
Said no too, was wise: they priz'd more
Honest fago, or the jealous Moor.

And though the Fox and subtil Alchemist,
Long intoxicated, could not quite be mixt,
Though there have shams'd all th' ancients, and might: so.
Their author's merit with a crown of bays,
Yet these some times, even at a friend's desire,
Acted, have scarce defray'd the sea-coal fire,
And door-keepers: when, let Falstaff come,
Hal, Poor's, the rest, you scarce shall have a room,
All is so staid: let but Beatrice
And Benedick be seen, lo! in a trice
The pit, galleries, boxes, all are fall,
To hear Malvolio, that cross-garter'd gall,
Brief, there is nothing in his wit-brought book,
Whose sound we would not hear, on whose worth book,"

4 Referring to lines by William Basfe, then circulating in MS. and printed (as far as is now known) until 1633, when they were falsely imputed to Dr. Donne, in the edition of his poems in that year. All the MSS. of the lines, now extant, differ in minute par-

xi
Thou art a monument without a tomb;
And art alive still, while thy book doth live,
And we have wits to read, and praise to give.
That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses;
I mean, with great but disproportion'd muses:
For, if I thought my judgment were of years,
I should commit thee surely with thy peers;
And tell how far thou didst display the outline,
Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line;
And though thou hastad small Latin, and less Greek,
From thence to honour thee, I would not seek
For names; but call forth thundering \( \text{As} \)chylus, Euripides, and Sophocles, to us, Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead.
To live again, to hear thy buskin tread
And shake a stage; or when thy soles were on,
Leave them room, for the comparison.
Of all that insolent Greece, or haughty Rome,
Sont forth, or since did from their ashes come.
Triumph, my Britain! thou hast one to show,
To whom all scenes of Europe hommage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time;
And all the muses still were in their prime,
When like Apollo he came flaming to warm
Our cars, or like a Mercury to charm.
Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joy'd to wear the dressing of his lines;
Which were so richly span, and woven so fit,
As since she will vouchsafe no other wit.
The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
Neat Terence, witty Phaustus, now not please,
But nature must and desist, till they
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet must I not give Nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part:
For though the poet's matter be,
His art doth give the fashion; and that he,
Who casts to write a living line, must sweat,
(Such as things are) and strike the second best
Upon the muses' nail; till to the same,
And himself with it that he thinks to frame;
Or for the laurel he may gain a soon,
For a good poet's made, as well as born;
And such wert thou. Look, how the father's face Lives in his issue; even so the race.
Of Shakespeare's mind, and manners, brightly shines
In his well-turned and true-filed lines;
In each of his flights, to make a lance,
As brandish'd at the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet Swan of Avon, what a sight it were,
To see thee in our water yet appear;
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames,
That so did take Eliza, and our James.
But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere
Advanced, and made a constellation there;
Shine forth, thou star of poets; and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheer, the dreaming stage;
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath moser'd like night,
And desairs day, but for thy volume's light.

Ben Jonson.

On worthy Master Shakespeare, and his poems.\(^1\)
A mind reflecting ages past, whose clear
And equal surface can make things appear,
Distant a thousand years, and represent
Them in their lively colours, just extent;
To outvie the pasty time, retrieve the sates,
Roll back the heavens, blow up the iron gates
Of death and Lethse, where (confused) lie
Great heaps of rubious mortality;

In that deep dusky dungeon to discern
A royal ghost from churls; by art to learn
The physiognomy of shades, and give Them sudden birth, wondering how oft they live;
What story truly tells, what poets feign
At second hand, and picture without brain,
Sensless and soul-less shows; to give a stage
(Amply, and true with life) voice, action, age,
As Plato's year, and new scene of the world,
Then unto us, or us to them had hurl'd;
To raise our ancient sovereigns from their hearth,
Make kings his subjects; by exchanging verse
Eulive their pale trunks, that the present age
Joys in their joy, and trembles at their rage:
Yet so to temper passion, that our ears
Take pleasure in their pain, and eyes in tears
Both weep and smile; fearful at plots so sad,
Then laughing at our fear; abus'd, and glad
To be abus'd; affected with that truth.
Which we perceive is false, pleas'd in that truth
At which we start, and, by elaborately play
Tortur'd and tickled; by a crab-like way
Time past made pasture, and in ugly soft Disorging up his rav'n for our art.

—While the plebeian imp, from lofty throne,
Creates and rules a world, and works upon Mankind by secret engines; now to move
A chilling pity, then a rigorous love;
To strike up and stroke down, both joy and ire;
To steer their affections; and by heavenly fire
Mould us anew, stol'n from ourselves
This, and much more, who cannot be express'd
But by himself, his tongue, and his own breast,
Was Shakespeare's freehold; which his cunning brain
Improv'd by favour of the nine-fold train;
The buskin's mused, the comic queen, the grand
And harder tone of Clio, nimble hand
And nimbler foot of the melodious pair,
The silver-voiced lady, the most famous
Gulliver, where the thinking shadow shews,
And she whose praise he heavy body chants
These jointly would him, envying one another,
(Obey'd by all as spouse, but loy'd as brother)
And wrought a curious robe, of sable grave
Fresh green, and pleasant yellow, red most brave
And constant blue, rich purple, guiltless white,
The lovely russet, and the sweet bright:
Brandy'd and embroc'd I'd like it, and wound spring
Each leaf match'd with a flower, and each string
Of golden wire, each line of silk; there run
Italian works, whose thread the sisters span;
And there did sing, or seem to sing, the choice
Birds of a foreign note and various voice:
Here hangs a mossy rock; there plays a fair
But chiding fountain, pulc'd; not the air,
Nor clouds, nor thunder, but were living drawn;
Not out of common tiffany or lawn,
But fine materials, which the muse knows.
And only know the countries where they grow.
Now, when they could no longer him enjoy,
In mortal garments pent,—death may destroy,
They say, his body; but his verse shall live,
And more than nature takes our hands shall give
In a less volume, but more strongly bound,
Shakespeare shall breathe and speak; with laurel crown'd,
Which never fades; fed with ambrosian meat,
In a well-lined vesture, rich and neat.
So with this robe they endue him, bid him wear it;
For time shall never stain, nor envy tear it.

The friendly admirer of his endowments.

I. M. S.

\(^1\) On worthy Master Shakespeare, and his Poems.\(^a\) These lines are attributed to M. S. in the folio 1632. "probably Josper Mayne," says Malone. Most probably not, because Mayne has left nothing behind him to lead us to suppose that he could have produced this surpassing praise.

1 M. S. may possibly be John Milton. Student, and no name may have been appended to the other copy of verses by him prefixed to the folio of 1632, in order that his initials should stand at the end of the present. We know of no other poet of the time capable of writing the ensuing lines. We feel morally certain that they are by Milton.

COMMENDATORY VERSES.

Upon the Lines, and Life, of the famous Scenic Poet, Mister W. Shakespeare.

Those hands which you so clapp’d, go now and wring,
You Britons brave; for done are Shake-speare’s days:
His days are done that made the dainty plays,
Which made the Globe of heaven and earth to ring.

Dried is that vein, dried is the Thespian spring,
Turn’d all to tears, and Phoebus clouds his rays;
Which crown’d him poet first, then poet’s king
If tragedies might any prologue have.

All those he made would scarce make one to this;
Where fame, now that he gone is to the grave,
(Death’s public tiring-house) the Nuntius is:
For, though his line of life went soon about,
The life yet of his lines shall never out.

Hugh Holland.

The following are Ben Jonson’s lines on the Portrait of Shakespeare, precisely as they stand on a separate leaf opposite to the title-page of the edition of 1623, and which are reprinted in the same place, with some trifling variation of typography, in the folio of 1632.

TO THE READER.
This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut,
Wherein the Graver had a strife
With Nature, to out-do the life:
O, could he but have drawn his wit
As well in brass, as he hath bit
His face; the Print would then surpass
All, that was ever writ in brass.
But since he cannot, Reader, look
Not at his picture, but his book.

HISTORY
THE ENGLISH DRAMA AND STAGE
TO
THE TIME OF SHAKESPEARE.

In order to make the reader acquainted with the origin of the English stage, such as Shakespeare found it when he became connected with it, it is necessary to mention that a miracle-play or mystery, (as it has been termed in modern times,) is the oldest form of dramatic composition in our language. The stories of productions of this kind were derived from the Sacred Writings, from the pseudo-evangelium, or from the lives and legends of saints and martyrs.

Miracle-plays were common in London in the year 1170; and as early as 1119 the miracle-play of St. Katherine had been represented at Dunstable. It has been conjectured, and indeed in part established, that some of these performances were in French, as well as in Latin; and it was not until the reign of Edward III. that they were generally acted in English. We have three existing series of miracle-plays, all of which have been recently printed; the Towneley collection by the Surtees Club, and those known as the Coventry and Chester pageants by the Shakespeare Society.

The Abbeysford Club has likewise printed, from a manuscript at Oxford, three detached miracle-plays which once, probably, formed a portion of a connected succession of productions of that class and description.

During about 300 years this species of theatrical entertainment seems to have flourished, often under the auspices of the clergy, who used it as the means of religious instruction; but prior to the reign of Henry VI., a new kind of drama had become popular, which by writers of the time was denominated a moral, or moral play, and more recently a morality. It acquired this name from the nature and purpose of the representation, which usually conveyed a lesson for the better conduct of human life, the characters employed not being spiritual, as in miracle-plays, but allegorical, or symbolical. Miracle-plays continued to be represented long after moral plays were introduced, but from a remote date abstract impersonations had by degrees, not now easily traced, found their way into miracle-plays; thus, perhaps, moral plays, consisting only of such characters, grew out of them.

A very remarkable and interesting miracle-play, not founded upon the Sacred Writings, but upon a popular legend, and all the characters of which, with one exception, purport to be real personages, has recently been discovered in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, in a manuscript certainly as old as the later part of the reign of Edward IV. It is perhaps the only specimen of the kind in our language; and as it was unknown to all who have hitherto written on the history of our ancient drama, it will not here be out of place to give some account of the incidents to which it relates, and of the persons concerned in them. The title of the piece, and the year in which the events are supposed to have occurred, are given at the close, where we are told that it is "The Play of the Blessed Sacrament," and that the miracle to which it refers was wrought "in the forest of Arragon, in the famous city of Arahel, in the year of our Lord God 1461." There can be no doubt that the scene of action was imaginary, being fixed merely for the greater satisfaction of the spectators as to the reality of the occurrences, and as little that of a legend of the kind, was of a much older date than that assigned in the manuscript, which was probably near the time when the drama had been represented.

In its form it closely resembles the miracle-plays which had their origin in Scripture-history, and one of the characters, that of the Saviour, common in productions of that class, is introduced into it: the rest of the personages engaged are five Jews, named Jonathas, Jason, Jashob, Masphat, and Malchoz; a Christian merchant called Aristorius, a bishop, Sir Isidore a priest, a physician from the hospital called "Mr. Brundyche," and Colle his servant. The plot relates to the purchase of the Eucharist by the Jews from Aristorius for 100l., under an assurance also that if they find its miraculous powers verified, they will become converts to Christianity. Aristorius, having session of the key of the church, enters it secretly, takes away the Host, and sells it to the Jews. They put it to various tests and torments: they stab "the cake" with their daggers, and it bleeds, while one of the Jews goes mad at the sight. They next attempt to nail it to a post, but the Jew who uses the hammer has his hand torn off, and here the doctor and his servant, Mr. Brundyche and Colle, make their appearance in order to attend the wounded Jew; but after a long comic scene between the quack and his man, highly illustrative of the manners of the time, they are driven out as impostors. The Jews then proceed to boil the Host, but the water turns blood-red, and taking it out of the cauldron with pincers, they throw it into a blazing oven: the oven, after blood has run out "at the crannies," bursts asunder, and an image of the Saviour rising, he addresses the Jews, who are as good as their word, for they are converted on the spot. They kneel to the Christian bishop, and Aristorius having confessed his crime and declared his repentance, is forgiven after a suitable admonition, and a strict charge never again to buy or sell.

This very singular and striking performance is opened, as was usual with miracle-plays, by two Vexillators, who explain the nature of the story about to be represented, in alternate stanzas; and the whole performance is wound up by an epilogue from the bishop, enforcing the moral, which of course was intended to illustrate, and impress upon the audience, the Catechism of the time, the declared belief of the government. Were it necessary to our design, and did space allow of it, we should be strongly tempted to introduce some characteristic extracts from this hitherto unseen production; but we must content ourselves with saying, that the language in several places appears to be older than the reign of Edward IV., or even of Henry VI., and that we might discern, amid the extravagance of the draught of the demon to the period of Wickliff, and the Lollards.

3 In another part of the manuscript it is called "The Play of the Conversion of Sir Jonathas, the Jew, by the Miracle of the Blessed Sacrament," but inferior Jews are converted, beside Sir Jonathas, who is the head of the tribe in the "famous city of Arahel."

It was not until the reign of Elizabeth that miracle-plays were generally abandoned, but in some distant parts of the kingdom they were persevered with even till the time of James I. Miracle-plays, in fact, gradually gave way to moral plays, which presented more variety of situation and character; and moral plays in turn were superseded by a species of mixed drama, which was strictly neither moral play nor historical play, but a combination of both in the same representation.

Of this singular union of discordant materials, no person who has hitherto written upon the history of our dramatic poetry has taken due notice; but it is very necessary not to pass it over, inasmuch as it may be said to have led ultimately to the introduction of tragedy, comedy, and history, as distinct forms of dramatic representation, with the growth of public theatres. No blame for the omission can fairly be imputed to our predecessors, because the earliest specimens of this sort of mixed drama which remain to us have been brought to light within a comparatively few years.

The most important of these is the "Kynge Johan" of Bishop Bale. We are not able to settle with precision the date when it was originally written, but it was evidently performed, with additions and alterations, in the Elizabethan drama of a portion of our national annals, with real characters, to the purposes of the stage. Though performed in the reign of Elizabeth, we may carry back the first composition and representation of "Kynge Johan" to the time of Edward VI.; but, as it has been printed by the Camden Society, it is not necessary that we should enlarge upon it.

The object of Bale's play was, as we have stated, to advance the claims of the reformers; and in the reign of his successor a drama of a similar description, and of a directly opposite tendency, was written and acted. It has never been mentioned, and as it exists only in manuscript of the time, it will not be out of place to quote its title, and to explain briefly in what manner the anonymous author carries out his design. He calls his drama "Repul"; and he adds that it was "made in the year of our Lord 1554, and is capable to cause and carry the advice of our most gracious Sovereign, Queen Mary the First." He was supposed to speak the prologue himself, in the character of "a Poet," and although every person he introduces is in fact called by some abstract name, he avowedly brings forward the Queen herself as "Nemesis, the Goddess of redress and correction," while her kingdom of England is intended by "Respulben," and its inhabitants represented by "People," the Reformation in the Church is distinguished as "Oppression," and Policy, Authority, and Honesty are represented as "Wise Advice," "Wise Power," and "Adulteration." All this is distinctly stated by the author on his title-page, while he also employs the impersonations of Misericordia, Veritas, Justinia, and Pax (agents not uncommonly resorted to in the older miracle-plays) as the friends of "Nemesis," the Queen, and as the supporters of the Roman Catholic religion in her dominions.

As much would be gained by a detail of the import of these intercalations between the characters, represented, it would seem, by boys, who were perhaps the children of the Chapel Royal; for there are traces in the performance that it was originally acted at court. Respulben is a widow greatly injured and abused by Avarice, Insolence, Oppression, and Adulteration; while People, using throughout a rustic dialect, also complain bitterly of their sufferings, especially since the introduction of what had been termed "Reformation" in matters of faith: in the end Justinia brings in Nemesis to effect a total change by restoring the former condition of religious affairs; and the piece closes with the delivery of the offenders to condign punishment. The production was evidently written by a man of education; but, although there are many attempts at humour, and some at variety, both in character and situation, the attempt was very ill-adapted, and could not be very well adapted to please the court by its general tendency, but little calculated to accomplish any other purpose entertained by the writer. In all respects it is much inferior to the "Kynge Johan" of Bale, which it followed in point of date, and to which, perhaps, it was meant to be a counterpart.

The earliest of the performances of dramatic productions of a religious or political character, each party supporting the views and advocating the aims of the author's political opinions, John Heywood, who was a zealous Roman Catholic, and who subsequently suffered for his creed under Edward VI. and Elizabeth, discovered a new species of entertainment, of a highly humorous, and not altogether of an unconstructive kind; which seems to have been very acceptable to the sovereign and nobility, and to have obtained for the author a distinguished character as a court dramatist, and ample rewards as a court dependent. These were properly called "interludes," being short comic pieces, represented ordinarily in the interval between the feast and the banquet; and we may easily believe that they had considerable influence in the settlement of the form which our stage-performances ultimately assumed. Heywood does not appear to have begun writing until after Henry VIII. had been some years on the throne; but, in the latter part of the reign, his plays were much praised, and are numbered among our most valuable specimens of our drama. In the reign of his successor he flourished, and was very successful in his "Magnificence," which, without any improvement, merely carries to a still greater length of absurdity the old style of moral plays, Heywood was writing his "John Tib and Sir John," his "Four Pins," his "Pardoner and Friar," and pieces of that description, which presented both variety of matter and novelty of construction, as well as considerable wit and drollery in the language. He was a very original man, and evinced more admiration than any of his dramatic contemporaries.

To the commencement of the reign of Elizabeth we may refer several theatrical productions which make approaches more or less near, to comedy, tragedy, and history, and still retain many of the known features of moral plays. "Tom

Besides "King Johan," Bale was the author of four extant dramatic productions, which may be looked upon as miracle-plays, both in their form and characters: viz. 1. "The Three Laws of Nature, Moses and Christ," 2. "The Honeycomb of the Temptation of Christ," 3. "The Temple, or the Millenium," and 4. "The Temple of the Passion." He also wrote fourteen other dramatic pieces of various kinds, none of which have come down to us.

John Heywood, who flourished in the reign of Henry VIII., is not to be confounded with some modern editors of Shakespeare's plays, as he founded him, with Thomas Heywood, who became a dramatist more than half a century afterwards, and who continued a writer for the stage until near the date of the closing of the theatres by the Puritans. John Heywood, in all probability, died before Thomas Heywood was born.
Tiler and his Wife" is a comedy in its incidents; but the allegorical personages, Desire, Destiny, Strife, and Patience, connect it immediately with the earlier species of stage-entertainment. "The Conflict of Conscience," on the other hand, is a tragedy on the fate of an historical personage; but Conscience, Hypocrisy, Ambition, and Iniquity, are, in the main, presented as personages intended in the mind of the writer. "Appius and Virginia" is in most respects a history, founded upon facts; but Rumour, Comfort, and Doctrine, are importantly concerned in the representation. These, and other productions of the same class, which it is not necessary to particularise, show the gradual advances made towards a better, because a more natural, species of theatrical composition. Into melodrama, married into the latter part of the seventeenth century, which was the last time that the importance of a single author was universally acknowledged, and which was, even at that early date, may be gathered from the fact, that the original single copy has descended to us\(^1\), and is divided into acts and scenes. The story is one of common, every-day life; and none of the characters are such as people had been accustomed to find in ordinary dramatic entertainments. The piece takes its name from its hero, a young town-gallant, who is mostly enamoured of Linsell, and who is chiefly occupied with his good opinion of himself, his own person and accomplishments by Matthew Merriggy, a poor relation, who attends him in the double capacity of companion and servant. Ralph Roister Doister is in love with a lady of property, called Cunstance, betrothed to Gawin Goodluck, a merchant, who is at sea when the comedy begins, but who returns before it concludes. The main incidents relate to the mode in which the hero, with the tramshaws help of his associate, endeavors to gain the affections of Cunstance. He writes her a letter, which Merriggy reads without a due observance of the punctuation, so that it entirely perverts the meaning of the writer; he visits her while she is surrounded by her female domestics, but he is unceremoniously rejected; he resolves to carry her by force of arms, and makes an assault upon her habitation; but with the assistance of her maids, armed with nags and brooms, she drives him from the attack. Then, her betrothed lover returns, who has been misinformed on the subject of her fidelity, but he is soon reconciled on an explanation of the facts; and Ralph Roister Doister, finding that he has no chance of success, and that he has only been enjoined and laughed at, makes up his mind to be merry at the wedding of Goodluck and Cunstance.

In all this we have no trace of anything like a moral play, with the exception, perhaps, of the character of Matthew Merriggy, which in some of its features, if not of its conduct, is not inapplicable. After "Ralph Roister Doister," the "Vice of the older drama." Were the dialogue modernised, the comedy might be performed, even in our own day, to the satisfaction of many of the usual attendants at our theatres.

In considering the merits of this piece, we are to recollect that Bishop Stilling's "Gammer Gurtin's Needle," which, until late, was held to be our earliest comedy, was written some twenty years before "Ralph Roister Doister." It was not acted at Cambridge until 1566, nine years subsequent to the death of Udal; and it is in every point of view an inferior production. The plot is a mere piece of absurdity, the language is provincial (well fitted, indeed, to the country where the scene is laid, and to the clumsily persons engaged in it) and the manners depicted are chiefly those ofilitarian rustics. The story, such as it is, relates to the loss of a needle with which Gammer Gurtin had mended Hedgecocks breeches, and which is afterwards found by the hero, when he is about to sit down. The humour, generally speaking, is as coarse as the dialogue; and though it is impossible to deny that the author was a man of talents, they were hardly such as could have produced "Ralph Roister Doister."

The drama which we have been accustomed to regard as our earliest tragedy, and which probably has a just claim to the distinction, was acted on 17 January, 1565. It was originally called "Gorboduc," but it was reprinted in 1571 under the title of "Forrexe and Forrex," and a third time in 1590 as "Gorboduc." The first three acts were written by Thomas Norton, and the last two by Thomas Sackville, afterwards Earl of Dorset, and it was performed by the gentlemen of the Inner Temple. Though the form of the Greek drama is observed in "Gorboduc," and each act is laid in a different place, by Philip Sidney, who admitted (in his "Apology of Poetry") that it was "full of stately speeches and well-sounding phrases," could not avoid complaining that the unities of time and place had been disregarded. Thus in the outset and origin of our stage, as regards what may be termed the regular drama, the liberty, which allowed full exercise to the imagination of the audience, and which was afterwards happily curtailed by the assertion and maintained. It is also to be remarked, that "Gorboduc" is the earliest known play in our language in which blank-verse was employed,\(^2\) but of the introduction of blank-verse upon our public stage, we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. It was an important change, which requires to be separately considered.

We have now entered upon the reign of Elizabeth; and although, as we have already observed, moral plays and even miracle-plays were still acted, we shall soon see what a variety of subjects, taken from ancient history, from mythology, fable, and romance, were employed for the purposes of the drama

1 One of the latest pieces without mixture of history or fable, and consequently the latest of the personages, is "The Tale of the Three Men," by George Wapul, printed in 1576: only a single copy of it has been preserved, and that is in the library of the Duke of Devonshire. The title-page relates to the following passage: "The first printed piece of Printed-plot. No-good-neighbourhood, Wastefulness, Christianity, Correction, Courage, Feigned-furtherness, Greediness, Wantonness, and Foolishness.

2 A very interesting epistle from Udal is to be found in Sir Henry Ellis's volume (edited for the Camden Society). "Original Letters of Edmund Spenser," 1822: the letter, Tye in the series, was written in 1589, and is called on the registers of the Stationers' company. We may presume that it was published in that year, or in the next.

The three single copy is without title-page, so that the year when it was printed cannot be ascertained; but Thomas Hacket had a licence in 1549 to print the play. The old page, which is to the extent of 1565, to the extent of 177, is called the third, and the first line of the play states, that it is called on the registers of the Stationers' company. We may presume that it was published in that year, or in the next.

4 Richard Edwards, a very distinguished dramatic poet, who died in 1588, wrote the lost play of "Palamon and Arcite," which he had acted before the Queen of September 16th, 1594, at the example of Sackville and Norton: his "Damon and Pythias" (the play by that had been revived) is in rhyme. See Deedes's Old Plays, last edition, p. 177. Thomas Twine, an actor in "Palamon and Arcite," wrote an epitaph upon its author. "Gammer Gurtin's Needle," and "Gorboduc," the last printed from the second edition, are also given in vol. 1. and ii. of Deedes's Old Plays.
Stephen Gosson, one of the earliest enemies of theatrical performances, writing his "Plays confuted in Five Actions" a little after the period of which we are now speaking, but advertising to the drama as it had existed some years before, tells us, in the Preface of Playes of Pleasure and Profit to the \textit{Greek, the \textit{Ethiopian History, Annals of France, and the Round Table}, as well as \textit{comedies in Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish}, have been trulye ransackt to furnish the play-houses in London." Hence, unquestionably, many of the materials of what is termed our romantic drama were obtained. The accounts of the Master of the Revels between 1558 and 1582 contain the names of French plays presented at court; and it is to be noted, that it was certainly the\textit{practice at a later date}, and it was probably the practice at the time to which we are now advertising, to select for performance before the Queen such pieces as were most in favor with public audiences; consequently the mention of a few of the titles of productions represented before Elizabeth at Greenwich, Whitehall, Richmond, or Nonsuch, will show the character of the popular performances of the day. We derive the following account from Mr. P. Cunningham's \textit{"Extracts from the Revels' Accounts," printed for the Shakespeare Society:}\

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textit{Lady Barbara.} \\  \textit{Philogena.} \\  \textit{Ajax and Ulysses.} \\  \textit{Narcissus.} \\  \textit{Paris and Vienne.} \\  \textit{The Duce of Fortuno.} \\  \textit{Alcumon.} \\  \textit{Quintus Fabius.} \\  \textit{Timeoachs at the Siege of Thebes.} \\  \textit{Hostler and Andromeda.} \\  \textit{Murderous Michael.} \\  \textit{Scipio Africana.} \\  \textit{The History of the Collier.} \\  \textit{The Duke of Milan.} \\  \textit{The History of Error.}
\end{itemize}

These are only a few out of many dramas, establishing the multiplicity of sources to which the poets of the time resorted.\textsuperscript{1} Nevertheless, we find on the same indisputable authority, that moral plays were not yet altogether discarded in the court entertainments; for we read, in the original records, of productions the titles of which prove that they were pieces of that allegorical description, among these are \textit{"Truth, Faithfulness, and Mercy,"} and \textit{"The Marriage of Mind and Measure,"} which is expressly called \textit{"a moral."}

Our main object in referring to these pieces has been to show the great diversity of subjects which had been dramatised before 1580. In 1581 Barnabe Rich published his \textit{"Prophets and Professors,"} consisting of a collection of eight novels; and at the time he inserted the strange address \"to the reader:---\" Now then hast perusd these histories to the end, I doubt not but thou wilt deem of them as they worthily deserve, and think such vanities more fitter to be presented on a stage (as some of them have been) than to be published in print.\textsuperscript{2} The fact is, that three dramas are extant which more or less closely resemble three of Rich's novels, and one of them \textit{Twelfth Night,} another, \textit{"The Weakest goeth to the Wall,"} and the third \textit{the old play of \textit{Philotus}.}\textsuperscript{3}

Upon the manner in which the materials thus procured were thus handled, we have several contemporaneous authorities. George Whetstone, (an author who has principally acquired celebrity by writing an earier drama upon the incidents employed by Shakespeare in his \textit{"Measure for Measure"}) in the dedication of his \textit{"Promos and Cassandra,"} gives a compensating description of the nature of popular theatrical representations in 1578. \textit{The Englishman (he remarks) in this quality is most vain, indiscreet, and out of order. He first grounds his work on impossibilities; then, in three hours, runs through the world, marries, gets children, makes children make children, and then uncommon monsters, and being gods from heaven, and fetcheth devils from hell; and, that which is worst, their ground is not so unperfect as their working indiscreet; not weighing so the people laugh, though they laugh them for their follies to scorn. Many times, to make mirth, they make a clown companion with a king; in their grave comedies they allow the advice of fools; yea, they use one order to the audience, and another to the person. This will be perceived, is an accurate account of the ordinary licence taken in our romantic drama, and of the reliance of poets, long before the time of Shakespeare, upon the imaginations of their auditors.

To the same effect we may quote a work by Stephen Gosson, to which we have before been indebted,--- "Plays confuted in Five Actions,"---which must have been printed about 1580:---\textquoteleft; If a true history (says Gosson) be taken in hand, it is made, like our shadow, longest at the rising and falling of the sun, shortest of all at high noon; for the poets drive it commonly unto such points, as may best show the majesty of their pen in tragical speeches, or set the hearers agog with discourses of love; or paint a few antites to fit their own humours with scoffs and taunts; or bring in a show, to furnish the stage when it is bare." Again, speaking of playing professionally, he adds, upon "true history," he remarks: \textquoteleft; Sometimes you shall see nothing but the adventures of an amorous knight, passing from country to country for the love of his lady, encountering many a terrible monster, made of brown paper, and at his return is so wonderfully changed, that he cannot be known but by some posy in his tablet, or by a broken ring, or a landsknecht, or a piece of cockle-shell. We can believe it; but when Gosson is supposed to have quoted Stratford-upon-Avon, and attached himself to a theatrical company. \textquoteleft; Our tragedies and comedies (says Sidney) are not without cause eried out against, observing neither rules of honest civility, nor skilful poetry. \ldots But if it be so in Gorbonde, how much more in all the rest, where you shall have Asia of the one side, and Africa of the other, and many other under-kingsdoms, that the player, when he cometh, saith, I was never before, nor ever believe the tale will not be conceived. Now you shall have these ladies walk to gather flowers, and then we must believe the stage to be a garden: by and by we hear news of a shipwreck in the same place; then, we are to blame if we accept it not for a rock. Upon the back of that comes out a hideous monster with fire and smoke, and then the miserable beholders are bound to take it for a cave; while, in the meantime, the two armies have run the swords and bucklers, and then what hard heart will not receive it for a pitched field? Now, of time they are much more liberal; for ordinary it is that two young-princes fall in love. after many traverses she is got with child, delivered of a fair boy; he is lost, growth a man, falleth in love, and is ready to get another child, and all this in two bous space; which how absurd it is in sense, even sense any imaginate, and art hath taught, and all ancient examples justifi ed." He afterwards comes to a point previously urged by Whetstone; for Sidney complains that plays were "neither ruinous to the publick estate, nor were they of the ultimate good of the stage, but of the most singular injury to the moral character of the cast, not because the matter so carrieth it, but thrust in the clown by head and shoulders, to play a part in majestical matters with neither decency nor discretion; so as neither the admiration and commendation, nor right sportfulness is by their mongrel trap—comedy obtained."

\textsuperscript{1} \textit{The Play of Fortune,} in the above list, is doubtless the piece which has reached us in a printed shape, as \textit{"The Rare Triumphes of Love and Fortune,"} acted at court, and at Stratford-upon-Avon in 1591; but it did not come from the press until 1590, and the only copy of it is in the library of Lord Fraser Egon. The purpose of the anonymous writer was to compose an entertainment which should possess the great requisite of variety, with as much show as could at that early date be accomplished; and we are to recollect that the court theatres possessed some unusual facilities for the purpose. The \textit{"Induction"} is in blank-verse, but the body of the drama is in rhyme. \textit{The History of the Collier,} also mentioned, was perhaps the comedy subse-

It will be remarked, that with the exception of the instance of "Gorbonde," do writer we have had occasion to cite company plays in connexion with dramatists with stories for the stage; and we may perhaps infer that resort was not had to them for the purposes of the public theatres, until after the date of which we are now speaking.

Having thus briefly adverted to the nature and character of dramatic representations from the earliest times to the year 1588, and having established that our romantic dramas were of singular origin, it is necessary shortly to describe the circumstances under which plays were at different early periods performed.

There were no regular theatres, or buildings permanently constructed for the purposes of the drama, until after 1575. Miracle-plays were sometimes exhibited in churches and in the halls of corporations, but more frequently upon moveable stages, or scaffolds, erected in the open air. Moral plays were also regularly performed, as under the circumstances, excepting that a practice that had grown up, among the nobility and wealthier gentry, of having dramatic entertainments at particular seasons in their own residences. These were sometimes performed by a company of actors retained in the family, and sometimes by itinerant players, who belonged to large towns, or who called themselves the servants of members of the aristocracy. In 14 Eliz. an act was passed by the 1st standing in the preamble the privileges of some baron or nobleman of higher degree, but subjected all others to the penalties inflicted upon vagrants. Therefore, although many companies of players went round the country, and acted as the servants of some of the nobility, they had no legislative protection until 1572. It is a singular fact, that the earliest known company of players, traveling under the name and patronage of one of the nobility, was that of the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III.

Henry VII. had two distinct bodies of "actors of interludes" in his pay, and from henceforward the profession of a player became well understood and recognized. In the later part of the reign of Henry VII., the players of the Dukes of Norfolk and Buckingham, and of the Earls of Arundel, Oxford, and Northumberland, performed at court.

About this period, and somewhat earlier, we also hear of 1 As early as 1465 a company of players had performed at the wedding of a person of the name of Mises, who was nearly related to Sir John Hownard, afterwards Duke of Norfolk. See "Manners and Household Expenses of England," printed by Mr. Botfield, M. P., for the Roxburghe Club in 1514, p. 311.

2 The anonymous MS. play of "Sir Thomas More," written towards the close of the reign of Elizabeth, gives a very correct notion of the mode in which such performances were made by a company of players, and it is stated to be performed, if licensed by some baron or nobleman of higher degree, but subjected all others to the penalties inflicted upon vagrants. Therefore, although many companies of players went round the country, and acted as the servants of some of the nobility, they had no legislative protection until 1572. It is a singular fact, that the earliest known company of players, traveling under the name and patronage of one of the nobility, was that of the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III.

3 For this information we are indebted to Sir N. H. Nicholas, who has the original document in his library. Similar facts might be established from other authorities, both of an earlier and somewhat later date.

4 See Hist. of Engl. Dram. Poetry and the Stage, Vol. I. p. 167. This is a direct account, made by Richard Gibson, who had the reproduction of the dresses, &c., so curious and characteristic, that we quote it in the words, though not in the exact orthography, of the original document. In 1548 was passed a statute, rendered necessary by the peculiar character of some of the dramas publicly represented, although not many years before, the king had himself encouraged such performances at court, by being present at a play in which Luther and his wife were ridiculed. The act prohibits "ballads, plays, rhymes, songs, and other vanities" of a religious or doctrinal tendency, but at the same time carefully provides that the clauses shall not extend to "songs, plays, and interludes" which had for object the reprobating and reproving of vices, and the setting forth of virtue; so always the said songs, plays, or interludes meddle not with the interpretations of Scripture.

In the reign of Henry VIII., and perhaps in that of his predecessor, the gentlemen and singing-boys of the Chapel Royal were employed to act plays and interludes before the court; and afterwards the children of Westminster, St. Paul’s, and Windsor, under their several masters, are not untriedly mentioned in the household books of the respective houses. The little drama of the department of the queen is also noted.

In 1514 the king added a new company to the two companies which had been paid by his father, and the associations of theatrical children. In fact, at this period dramatic entertainments, masques, disguisings, and revels of every description, were carried to a costly excess. Henry VIII. raised the sum, until then paid for a play, from 6l. 13s. 4d. to 10l. William Ryndes, the master of the children of the chapel, on one occasion was paid no less a sum than 200l. in the money of that time, by way of reward; and John Heywood, the author of interludes before mentioned, who was also a player upon the vizards, had a salary of 20l. per annum, in addition to his other emoluments. During seasons of festivity a Lord of Misrule was regularly appointed to superintend the sports, and he also was separately and liberally remunerated. The example of the court was followed by the courtiers, and the companies of the nobility to pay, or acting in various parts of the kingdom under the names of particular noblemen, became extremely numerous. Religious houses gave them encouragement, and even assisted in the getting up and representation of the performances especially shortly before the dissolution of the monasteries in the account-book of the Prior of Dmannow, between March 1532 and July 1536, we find entries of payments to players at Misrule. The last important of the King, and of the Earl of Derby, Essex, and Sussex.
superintendence of all dramatic performances, was created in 1546, and Sir Thomas Cawarden was appointed to it with an annual salary of 104. A person of the name of John Bernard was made Clerk of the Revels, with an allowance of 8d. per day andivery.

It is a remarkable point, established by Mr. Tytler, that Henry VIII. was not yet buried, and Bishop Gardiner and his parishioners were about to sing a dirge for his soul, when the actors of the Earl of Oxford posted bills for the performance of "Southwell's Chronicle," and the construction of any regular theatre on the Baileside; but it shows how early a date that part of the town was selected for such exhibitions. When Mr. Tytler adds, that the players of the Earl of Oxford were "the first that were kept by any nobleman," he falls into an error, because Richard III., and others of the nobility, as already remarked, had companies of players attached to their households.

Very soon after Edward VI. came to the throne, severe measures were taken to restrain not only dramatic performances, but the publication of dramas. Playing and printing plays were first entirely suspended; then, the company of the Earl of Southwell was allowed to perform there, but not without special authority; and, finally, the sign manual, or the names of six of the Privy Council were required to their licenses. The objection stated was, that the plays had a political, not a poetical, purpose. One of the first acts of Mary's government, was to issue a proclamation to put a stop to the performance of interludes calculated to advance the principles of the Reformation; and we may be sure, that the play ordered at the coronation of the queen was of a contrary description. It appears on other authorities, that for two years there was an entire cessation of public dramatic performances; but in this reign the representation of the old Roman Catholic miracle-plays was partially and authoritatively revived.

It is not necessary to detail the proceedings in connexion with theatrical representations at the opening of the reign of Elizabeth. At first plays were disconstraineated, but by degrees they were permitted; and the queen seems at all times to have derived much pleasure from the services of her own players, those of her nobility, and of the different companies of children belonging to Westminster, St. Paul's, Windsor, and the Chapel Royal. The members of the inner court also performed "Gorboduc" on 15th January, 1562; and on February 1st, a historical play, under the name of "John of Gaunt," was represented, but by what company is now where mentioned.

In 1572 the act was passed (which was renewed with additional force in 1597) to restrain the number of itinerant performers. Two years afterwards, the Earl of Leicester obtained from Elizabeth a patent under the great seal, to enable his players James Burbage, John Perkin, John Lanham, William Johnson, and Robert Wilson, to perform "comedies, tragedies, interludes, and stage-plays," in any part of the kingdom, with the exception of the metropolis.

The Lord Mayor and Aldermen succeeded in excluding the players from the strict boundaries of the city, but they were not able to shut them out of the liberties; and it is certain, that in the summer of 1567, when the Earl of Leicester's company was supported by court favour generally, and by the powerful patronage of the Earl of Leicester in particular.

Accordingly, in the year after they had obtained their patent, James Burbage and his fellows took a large house in the precinct of the dissolved monastery of the Black Friars, and converted it into a theatre. This was accomplished in 1576, and it is the first time we hear of any building set apart for theatrical representations. Until then the various companies of actors had been obliged to content themselves with churches, halls, with temporary erections in the streets, or with inn-yards, in which they raised a stage, the spectators standing below, or occupying the galleries that surrounded the open space. Just about the same period, other edifices were built for the exhibition of plays in Shoreditch, one of which was called "The Curtain," and the other "The Rose." These may have been built before the Royal theatre was in operation in 1577. We then see that two buildings close to the walls of the city, and a third within a privileged district in the city, all expressly applied to the purpose of stage-plays, were in use almost immediately after the date of the Patent to the players of the Earl of Leicester. It is extremely likely, though we have no distinct evidence of the fact, that one or more play-houses were opened about the same time at Southwark; and we know that the Rose theatre was standing there not many years afterwards.

John Stockwood, a puritanical preacher, published a sermon in 1578, in which he asserted that there were "eight ordinary places" in and near London for dramatic exhibitions, and that the united profits were not less than £2000 a year at least £20,000 of our present money. Another divine, of the name of White, equally opposed to such performances, preaching in 1576, called the play-houses at that time erected, "sumptuous theatres.

No doubt, the puritanical zeal of these divines had been excited by the opening of the Blackfriars, the Curtain, and the Theatre, in 1576 and 1577, for the exclusive purpose of the drama; and the five additional places, where plays, according to Stockwood, were acted before 1578, were most likely a play-house at Newington-buttocks, or inn-yards, converted occasionally into theatres.

An important fact, in connexion with the manner in which dramatic performances were patronized by Queen Elizabeth, has been recently brought to light. It has been hitherto

1 The original appointment of John Bernard is preserved in the library of St Thomas Phillipes, Bart., to whom we owe the additional information, that this Clerk of the Revels had a house assigned to him, strangely called, in the instrument, "Egypt, and Fleshfield," with a garden which belonged to the dissolved monastery of St. Thomas; the title deeds of the property were those of the Earl of Derby, till 1576, when Sir Thomas Cawarden, as Master of the Revels — We will command you, upon the sight hereof, forthwith to make and deliver out of our Revels, on the payment of our Chaplains, and for the entertainment thereof, as shall be thought meet," &c. The play, although ordered for this occasion, viz. 1st Oct. 1553, was for some inexplicable reason not performed till Christmas.

2 There is a material difference between the warrant under the privy seal, and the patent under the great seal, granted upon this occasion. The former gives the players a right to perform "as well within the city of London and liberties of the same as elsewhere;" but the latter (dated three days afterwards, viz. 10 May, 1571) limits the privilege to the Corporation of London, always opposed to theatrical performances.

3 In 1557 the Boar's Head, Aldgate, had been used for the performance of a drama called "The York Full of News," and Stephen Gosson in his "School of Abuse," 1570, (reprinted by Shakespeare Society) mentions the Belle Saxe and the Bull as inns at which particular plays had been represented. R. Flecknoe, in his "Short View of the State of Poetry," 1694, says that "at this day is to be seen, that the inn-yards of the Cross-Keys, and Bull, in Grace and Bishopsgate Streets, had been into Education, where runs the play, that the Blackfriars, at the Duke of Milan, Aldgate, had belonged to the father of Edward Alleyn.

It has been supposed by some, that the Curtain theatre owed its name to the sign of the Curtain. But it was directed in the audience.

We have before us documents (which on account of their length we cannot insert) showing that such was probably not the fact. We are directed to the history of our Curtain, that the name is assigned to that particular part of the Curtain (perhaps as part of the fortifications of London) before any play-house was built there. For this information we have to offer our thanks to Mr. Edwards himself.

In John Northbrooke's "Treatise," 1604, against "vain plays or interludes," licensed for the press in 1577, the work being then ready for the printer's hands, it has been reprinted by the Shakespeare Society.

4 See the "Memoirs of Edward Alleyn," (published by the Shakespeare Society) p. 9. It seems that the name had been taken from the Orange, a house of public entertainment before it was converted into a theatre. Such was also the case with the Swan, and the Hope, in the same neighbourhood.

5 By Mr. Peter Cunningham, in his Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels, printed for the Shakespeare Society, pp. 32 and supposed that in 1588 she selected one company of twelve performers, to be called "the Queen's players," and that she had two separate associations in her pay, each distinguished as "the Queen's players." Tylney, the master of the revels at the time, records, in one of his accounts, that in March, 1588, he had been sent for by her Majesty to "t• chuse out a company of players." Richard Tarlton and Robert Wilson were placed at the head of that association, which was probably soon afterwards divided into two distinct bodies of performers. In 1590, John Lanham was the leader of one body, 1 and Lawrence Dutton of the other.

We have thus brought our sketch of dramatic performances and performers down to about the same period, the year 1584, which we attempted in 1590, to assume that as the period not, of course, when Shakespeare first joined a theatrical company, but when he began writing original pieces for the stage. This is a matter which is more distinctly considered in the biography of the poet; but it is necessary here to fix upon some date to which we are to extend our introductory account of the progress and condition of theatrical affairs. What we have still to offer will apply to the years from 1583 to 1590.

The accounts of the revels at court about this period afford us little information, and indeed for several years, when such entertainments were certainly required by the Queen, we are without any details either of the pieces performed, or of the cost of preparation. We have such particulars for the years 1581, 1582, 1584, and 1587, but for the intermediate years they are wanting. 2 From the years 1581, 1582, and 1584, give us the following names of dramatic performances of various kinds exhibited before the Queen:

A comedy, called Delight.

The Story of Pompey.

A comedy of Beauty and Housewifry.

Love and Fortune.

History of Ferrar.

History of Telamo.

This list of dramas (the accounts mention that others were acted without supplying their titles) establishes that moral plays had not yet been excluded. 3 The "Game of the Cards" is expressly called "a comedy or moral," in the accounts of 1582; and we may not unreasonably suppose that "Delight," and "Beauty and Housewifry," were of the same class. The "Story of Pompey," and "Agamemnon and Ulysses," were evidently performances founded upon ancient myths, both derived by others from Homer; and others are the names of merchants, and we may feel assured that "Ariodante and Generora" was the story told by Ariosto, which also forms part of the plot of "Much Ado about Nothing." The "History of Ferrar" was doubtless "The History of Error" of the account of 1577, the clerk having written the title by his own hand; and we may reasonably suspect that "Felix and Philomela" was the tale of Felix and Felisina, mentioned in the "Diana" of Montenay. It is thus evident, that the Master of the Revels and the actors exerted themselves to furnish variety for the entertainment of the Queen and her nobility; but we still see no trace ("Corbodex" excepted) of any play at court, the materials for which were obtained from the English Chronicles. It is very certain, however, that anterior to these, such pieces had been written, and acted before public audiences; but those who entered for the court in these matters might not consider it expedient to exhibit, in the presence of the Queen, any play which involved the actions or conduct of her predecessors. The companies of players engaged in these representations were those of the Queen, the Earl of Leicester, Derby, Sussex, Oxford, the Lords Hunsdon and Strange, and the children of the Chapel Royal and St. Paul.

About this date the number of companies of actors performing publicly in and near London seems to have been very considerable. A person, who calls himself "a soldier," writing to Secretary Walsingham, in January, 1588, 4 tells him, that "every day in the week the players' bills are set up in sundry places of the city," and after mentioning the actors of the Queen, the Earl of Leicester, 5 the Earl of Oxford, and the Lord Admiral, he goes on to state that not fewer than two hundred and fifty plays, were exhibited, strutted, strung in their silks about the streets. It may be doubted whether this statement is much exaggerated, re-collecting the many noblemen who had playing under their names at this date, and that each company probably of eighty or ten performers. On the same authority we learn that theatrical representations upon the Sabbath had been forbidden; but this restriction does not seem to have been imposed without a considerable struggle. Before 1581 the Privy Council had issued an order upon the subject, but it was disregarded in some of the suburbs of London; and it was not until after a fatal exhibition of bear-baiting at Page's Garden, upon Sunday, 13 June, 1588, when many persons were killed and wounded by the falling of a scaffold, that the practice of playing, as well as bear-baiting, on the Sabbath was at all generally checked. In 1586, as far as we can judge from the information that has come down to our day, the order which had been issued in this respect was pretty strictly enforced. At this period, and after, plays were not infrequently played at court on Sunday, and the chief difficulty therefore seems to have been to induce the Privy Council to act with energy against similar performances in public theatres.

The annual official statement of the Master of the Revels merely tells us, in general terms, that between Christmas 1586, and Shrove-tide 1587, "seven plays, besides flats of 1585, but chopped a hundred years ago," were performed at these courts, of which Sir Philip, Paull's, the Queen's, and the gentleman of Gray's Inn, were prepared and represented before the Queen at Greenwich. No names of plays are furnished, but in 1587 was printed a tragedy, under the title of "The Misfortunes of Arthur," which purports to have been acted by some of the members of Gray's Inn before the Queen, on 28th Feb., 1587: this, in fact, must be the very production stated in the revels' accounts to have been got up, and performed by these parties; and it requires notice, not merely for its own intrinsic excellence as a drama, but because, in point of date, it is moral play, under the title of "The Contention between Liberalitas and Prodigalitas," printed in 1602, and acted, as appears by the strongest internal evidence, to have been an historical play of "The Famous Henry the Fifth." 6

We see the original letter in Harl. MSS. No. 2-6. The incident, and the manner in which it is accounted for, and the dates of the play, which was proved by Adams three days after the death of the testator, as Tarlton says nothing about his wife in his will, we may presume that she was a widow; and of his son Philip Tarlton, we never hear afterwards. 2

From 1597 to 1604, the most important period as regards Shak- espeare, it does not appear that any official statements by the master of the revels have been preserved. In the same way there is an unfortunate interval between 1604 and 1611.

1 One of the last pieces represented before Queen Elizabeth was a

1 Tarlton, who died, as we have already stated, in Sept., 1585, obtained great celebrity by his performance of the two parts of "Derrick and Misfortunes."

2 Derrick, or Deriche, or Dyrick, have been the names of the title of this play, in some of the copies. Dr. Blount has brought together the following extracts, relating to this period and a little afterwards:

1587 Solut. Histriomus Comitis Leicestrin. ut cum suis ludis magnis

1588 Solut. Histriomus Honoistomatis Domini Howard

1589 Solut. Histriomus, ne indos inhostes esterocient infor

the second play founded upon English history represented at court, as well as the second original theatrical production in blank-verse that has been preserved. The example, in this particular, had been set, as we have already shown, in Gorboduc, fifteen years before; and it is probable, that in that interval not a few of the serious compositions attempted in blank-verse, but had not yet been used on any of our public stages.

The main body of "The Misfortunes of Arthur" was the authorship of Thomas Hughes, a member of Gray's Inn; but some speeches and two choruses (which are in rhyme) were added by William Fulbecke and Francis Flower, while no less a man than Lord Bacon assisted Christopher Yelverton and John Lancaster in the production. The diction of the dunciad, Hughes evidently took Gorboduc as his model, both in subject and style; and, like Sackville and Norton, he adopted the form of the Greek and Roman drama, and adhered more strictly than his predecessors to theunities of time and place. The plot relates to the rebellion of Mordred against his father, king Arthur, and part of the plot is very revolting; on account of the incest between Mordred and his stepmother Guinevere. Mordred's name is a most proper, and there is a vast deal of blood and slaughter throughout, and the catastrophe is the killing of the son by the father, and of the father by the son; so that a more painfully disagreeable story could hardly have been selected. The author, however, possessed a very bold and vigorous genius; his characters are strongly drawn, and the language they employ is consistent with their situations and habits; his blank-verse, both in force and variety, is superior to that of either Sackville or Norton.

It is very clear, that up to the year 1580, about which date Gasson published his "Plays confuted in Five Actions," dramatic performances on the public stages of London were sometimes in prose, but more constantly in rhyme. In his "School of Absurd," 1579, Gasson speaks of "two prose books played at the Bell Savage," but in his "Plays confuted" he tells us, that his "Plays confuted" to the stage, in this and his other continuations are rolled up in rhyme.

With one or two exceptions, all the plays publicly acted of a date anterior to 1550, that have come down to us, are either in prose or in rhyme. The case seems to have been different, as already remarked, with some of the court-shows and private entertainments; but we are now advertising to the pieces represented at such places as the Theatre, the Curtain, Blackfriars, and the Playhouse, as adapted to public amusements, to which the public was indiscriminately admitted.

The earliest work, in which the employment of blank-verse for the purpose of the common stage is noticed, is an epistle by Thomas Nashe introducing to the world his friend Robert Greene's "Menaphon," in 1587: there, in reference to "a vain-glorious tragedian," he says, that they are "most commonly on the stage our dramatists." Greene lives on the stage of the tragedy of "Tamburlaine," whom he accuses of "setting the end of scholarism in an English blank-verse," and who, it should seem, had somewhere accused Greene of not being able to write it.

We learn from various authorities, that Christopher Marlowe was the author of "Tamburlaine the Great," a dramatic work of the highest celebrity and popularity, printed as early as 1598, and affording the first instance of the use of blank-verse in a public theatre: the title-page of the edition 1598, states, that it had been "several times shown upon stages in the city of London." In the preface the author claims to have introduced a new form of composition:

"From jiggings veins of rhyming mother-wits,
And such conceits as downage keeps in pay,
We'll lead you to the stately tent of war," &c.

Accordingly, nearly the whole drama, consisting of a first and second part, is in blank-verse. Hence we see the value of Dryden's loose assertion, in the dedication to Lord Orrery of his "Rival Ladies," in 1664, that, "Shakespeare was the first who, to shun the pains of continual rhyming, invented that kind of writing which we call blank-verse."

The distinction belongs to Marlowe. The genius of Shakespeare's predecessors, and a poet who, if he had lived, might, perhaps, have been a formidable rival of his genius. We have too much reverence for the exhaustless originality of our great dramatist, to think that he cannot afford this, or any other tribute to a poet, who, as far as the public stage is concerned, deserves to be regarded as the inventor of a new style of composition.

That the attempt was viewed with jealousy, there can be no doubt, after what we have quoted from Nashe and Greene. It is most likely that Greene, who was older than Nashe, had previously written various dramas in rhyme; and the bold experiment of Marlowe having been instantly successful, Greene was obliged to abandon his old course, and his extant plays are all in blank-verse. Nash, who had at-Machaut Marlowe in 1587, before 1593 (when Marlowe was killed), had joined him in the production of a blank-verse tragedy on the story of Dido, which was printed in 1594. It has been objected to "Tamburlaine," that it is written in a turgid and ambitious style, such indeed as Nash and Greene ridicule; but we are to recollect that Marlowe was at this time endeavouring to win audiences from the "jiggling veins of rhyming mother-wits," and that, in order to satisfy the ear for loss of the jingle, he was obliged to give what Nashe termed the swavish strain of bragging blank-verse. This consideration will of itself account for breaches of a more correct taste to be found in "Tamburlaine." In the Prologue, besides what we have already quoted, Marlowe tells the audience to expect "high asounding terms," and he did not disappoint expectation. Perhaps the better to reconcile the ordinary frequenter of public theatres to the change, he inserted various scenes of low comedy, which the printer of the edition in 1595 thought it proper to digressing, and far unmeet for the matter. Marlowe likewise sprinkled couples here and there, although it is to be remembered, that having accomplished his object of substituting blank-verse by the first part of "Tamburlaine," he did not, even in the second part, think it necessary by any means so frequently to introduce occasional rhymes. In these plays where there is ground for believing to be the finery works of Shakespeare, the couplets are more frequent, and more far common than in any of the surviving productions of Marlowe. This circumstance is, in part, to be accounted for by the fact (as far as we may so call it) that our great poet retained in some of his performances portions of old rhyming dramas, which he altered and adapted to the stage; but in early plays, which are to be looked upon as entirely his own, Shakespeare appears to have deemed rhyme more necessary to satisfy the ear of his audience than that Marlowe held it when he wrote his "Tamburlaine the Great."

As the first employment of blank-verse upon the public stage by Marlowe is a matter of much importance, in relation to the history of our more ancient drama, and to the subsequent adoption of that form of composition by Shakespeare, we ought not to dismiss it without affording a single specimen from "Tamburlaine the Great." The following is a portion of a speech by the hero to Zenocrate, when first he meets and loves her:

"Disdains Zenocrate to live with me,
O, my true love, to be my followers?
Think you I weigh this treasure more than you?
Not all the gold in India's wealthy arms
Shall buy the meanest soldier in my train.
Zenocrate, fairer than the Love of Jove,
Brighter than the silver Rhodope,
Fairer than whitest snow on Sythian hills,
Thy person is more worth to Tamburlaine,
Than the possession of the Persian crown,
Though my heart break in my mother's womb,
A hundred Tartars shall attend on thee,
Mounted on steeds swifter than Pegasus;
Thy garments shall be made of Median silk,
Engirded with precious jewels of mine own
More rich and valuable than Zenocrate's;
With milk-white harts upon an ivoryosed
Thou shalt be drawn amidst the frozen poles,
And scale the icy mountains lofty tops, Which with thy beauty will be soon dissolv'd."

Nash having alluded to "Tamburlaine" in 1597, it is evident it could hardly have been written later than 1588 or 1586, which is about the period when, without any other, and with much appearance of probability, suppose it that Shakespeare arrived in London. In considering the state of the stage just before our great dramatist became a writer for it, it is clearly, therefore, necessary to advert briefly to the other works of Marlowe, observing in addition, with reference to "Tamburlaine," that it is a historical drama, in which not a single unity is required; time, place, and nation are equally at his command. The scene is laid at once to or from Persia, Scythia, Georgia, and Morocco, as best suited the purpose of the poet.

Marlowe was also, most likely, the author of a play in which the Priest of the Sun was prominent, as Greene mentions it with "Tamburlaine" in 1588, but no such piece is now known: he, however, wrote "The Tragedy of the Life and Death of Doctor Faustus," "The Massacre at Paris," "The rich Jew of Malta," and an English historical play, called "The troublesome King and lamentable Death of Edward the Second," besides aiding Nash in "Dido Queen of Carthage," as already mentioned. If they were not all of them of a date anterior to any of Shakespeare's original works, they were written by a man who had set the example of the employment of blank-verse upon the public stage, and perhaps of the historical and romantic drama in all its leading points. That Shakespeare's "Edward the Second" afford's sufficient proof of both these points: the versification displays, though not perhaps in the same abundance, nearly all the excellences of Shakespeare; and in point of construction, as well as in interest, it bears a strong resemblance to the "Richard the Second" of our great dramatist. It is impossible to read the one without being reminded of the other, and we can have no difficulty in assigning "Edward the Second" to an anterior period.

The same remark, no less applicable to the plays which came from the pen of Robert Greene, who died in September, 1592, when Shakespeare was rising into notice, and exciting the jealousy of dramatists who had previously furnished the public stages. This jealousy broke out on the part of Greene in, if not before, 1592, (in which year his "Groatsworth of Wit," a posthumous work, was published by his contemporary, Henry Chettle), when he complained that Shakespeare had "stolen" a play of his and joined with the feathers of others: he alluded, as we apprehend, to the manner in which Shakespeare had availed himself of the two parts of the "Contention," in the original state, will serve to show the condition of our dramatic literature at that great epoch of our stage-history, when Shakespeare began to acquire celebrity. "The True Tragedy of Richard III." is a drama of about the same period, which has come down to us in a much more imperfect state, the original manuscript having been obviously Edward II." We willingly adopt the qualification of Mr. Hallam upon this point, where he says, "In Introduction to the Literature of Europe," vol. ii., p. 171, edit. 1841, "I am reluctant to admit that Shakespeare's plays are authentically extant, or that we can place a date within a few years of 1592, as to the productions of which we have no record, but which Shakespeare remedied, perhaps, not very long before the death of Greene.

4 They have been accurately reprinted by the Shakespeare Society on the care of Mr. Halliwell, from the earliest impression in 1594 and 1595.
very corrupt. It was printed in 1594, and Shakespeare, finding its in the possession of the company to which he was attached, probably had no scruple in constructing his "Richard the Third" of some of its rude materials. It "seems not unlikely that Robert Greene, and perhaps some other popular dramatists of his day, had been engaged upon "The True Tragedy of Richard III."

The dramatic works published under the name or initials of Robert Greene, or by extraneous testimony ascertained to have been written by him, are "The Prince" (1588), "Hymen's Triumph" (1593), "The Fair Indian" (partly drawn from the poems of Bolando and Ariosto) first printed in 1594; "Frier Bacon and Frier Bungay," also first printed in 1594, and taken from a popular story-book of the time; "Alphonsus King of Arragon," 1594, for which we know of no original; and "James the Fourth" of Scotland, 1593, partly borrowed from history, and partly mere invention. Greene also joined with Thomas Lodge in writing a species of moral-miracle-play, (purporting of the nature of the poem in the hands of the Duke of Devonshire) the first published under the title of "A Looking-Glass for London and England," 1594, derived from sacred history; and to him has also been imputed "George a Greene, the Pioneer of Wakefield," and "The Contention Between Liberty and Prodigiety," the one printed in 1599, and the other in 1602. It may be seriously doubted whether he had any hand in the two dramatic productions above-named as his except in the lines bear comparison with those of Shakespeare. He doubtless began to write for the stage in rhyme, and his blank-verse preserves nearly all the defects of that early form; it reads heavily and monotonously, without variety of pace and inflection, and almost the only difference between it and rhyme is the absence of corresponding sounds at the ends of the lines.

It is generally agreed that his rhyming, quite as striking a degree, be long to another of the dramatists who is entitled to be considered a predecessor of Shakespeare, and whose name has been before introduced—Thomas Lodge. Only one play in which he was assisted has descended to us, and it bears the title of "The Wounds of Civil War, lively set forth in the True Tragedies of Mariana and Sylvia." It was not printed until 1600, after the author's death, in 1590, and we may safely consider his tragedy as a part of the productions of Shakespeare: it was probably written about 1587 or 1588, as a not very successful experiment in blank-verse, in imitation of that style which Marlowe had at once rendered popular.

As regards the dates when his pieces came from the press, John Lyly is entitled to earlier notice than Greene, Lodge, or even Marlowe; and it is possible, as he was ten years older than Shakespeare, that he was a writer before any of them; it does not seem, however, that his dramas were intended for the public stage, but for court-shows or private entertainments. His "Alexander and Campaspe," the best of his productions, was represented at Court, and it was twice printed, in 1584, and again in 1591: it is like most of this author's productions, in prose; but his "We Woman in the Moon" (printed in 1597) is in blank-verse, and the "Maid's Metamorphoses" (1594) is the index of it. Hence it is evident that these dramatic productions generally, whether composed in a refined, affected, and artificial style, can be said to have had any material influence upon stage-entertainments before miscellaneous audiences to London, it is unnecessary for our present purpose to say more regarding them.

George Peele was about the same age as Lyly; but his theatrical productions (with the exception of "The Arraignment of Paris," printed in 1584, and written for the court) are of a different description, having been intended for exhibition at the ordinary theatres. His "Edward the First" he calls a "famous chronicle," and most of the incidents are derived from history: it is, in fact, one of our earliest plays founded upon English annals. It was printed in 1593 and in 1599, but with so many imperfections, that there is no strong reason to believe it was as it stood in the state in which it came from the author's pen. The remarkable feature belonging to it is the unworthy manner in which Peele sacrificed the character of the Queen to his desire to gratify the popular antipathy to the Spaniards: the opening of it is spirited; and affords evidence of the author's skill as a writer of blank-verse. His "Battle of Alcazar" may also be termed a historical drama, in which he has endeavored to write himself an extraordinary scene as to time, incidents, and charactern. It perhaps preceded his "Edward the First" in point of date, (though not printed until 1594,) and the principal event it refers to occurred in 1578. "Sir Clymoon and Clanydes" is merely a romance, in the old form of a rhyming play; and "David and Bethsabe," a scriptural drama, and a great improvement upon older pieces of the same description: Peele here confined himself strictly to the incidents in Holy Writ, and it certainly contains the best specimen of his blank-verse composition. His "Old Wives Tale," in the shape in which it has reached us, seems hardly deserving of criticism, and it would have received little notice but for some remote, and perhaps accidental, resemblance between its story and that of Milton's "Comus."

The "Jerome" of Thomas Kyd is to be looked upon as a specimen of tragedy in blank-verse; the date of its composition is on the testimony of Ben Jonson, may be stated to be prior to 1588, just after Marlowe had produced his "Tamurhane," and when Kyd hesitated to follow his bold step to the full extent of his progress. "Jerome" is therefore partly in blank-verse, and partly in rhyme; the same observation will apply, though not in the same degree, to Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy." It is in truth a second part of..."
"Jerónimo," the story being continued from one play to the other, and managed with considerable dexterity. The interest in the latter is great, and generally well sustained, and some of the characters are drawn with no little art and force. The success of "Jerónimo," doubtless, induced Kyd to write the second part of it immediately; and we may not hesitate in concluding that "The Spanish Tragedy" had been acted before 1590.

Besides Marlowe, Greene, Lodge, Lyly, Peele, and Kyd, there were other dramatists, who may be looked upon as the immediate predecessors of Shakespeare, but few of whose printed works are of an earlier date, as regards composition, than some of those which came from the pen of one or other of these men. Nash was the most distinguished, whose contribution to "Dido," in conjunction with Marlowe, has been before noticed: the portions which came from the pen of Marlowe are, we think, easily to be distinguished from those written by Nash, whose genius does not seem to have been of an imaginative or dramatic, but of a satirical and obligatory character. He produced alone a piece called "Summer's Last Will and Testament," which was written in the autumn of 1592, but not printed until 1600: it bears internal evidence that it was exhibited as a private show, and it could never have been meant for public performance.1 Henry Chettle, who was also senior to Shakespeare, has left behind him a tragedy called "Hoffman," which was not printed until 1630; and he was engaged with Anthony Munday in producing "The游戏"; the latter of these men, Thomas Kyd, was the first of his contemporaries to write a tragedy in English, and his "The Spanish Tragedy" was written in 1588, and was published in 1601. From Henslowe's Diary we learn that both these pieces were written subsequent to the date when Shakespeare had acquired a high reputation. Munday had been a dramatist as early as 1584, when a rhyming translation by him, under the title of "The Two Italian Gentlemen," came from the press; and in the interval between that year and 1602, he wrote the whole or parts of various plays, which have been lost.2 Robert Wilson ought not to be omitted; he seems to have been a prolific dramatist, but only one comedy by him has survived, under the title of "The Cobbler's Prophesy," and it was printed in 1594. According to the evidence of Henslowe, he aided Drayton and Monday in writing "The First Part of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle," printed in 1600; but he must at that date have been old, if he were the same Robert Wilson who was one of the subscribers to the "Catholic Playhouse," and who became one of the leaders of the company called the Queen's Players in 1583. He seems to have been a low comedian, and his "Cobbler's Prophesy" is a piece of drollery of which must have depended in a great degree upon the performers.

With regard to mechanical facilities for the representation of plays before, and indeed long after, the time of Shakespeare, it may be sufficient to state, that our old public theatres were merely round wooden buildings, open to the sky in the audience part of the house, although the stage was covered by a hanging roof: the spectators stood on the ground in front or at the sides, or were accommodated in boxes round the inner circumference of the edifice, or in galleries at a greater elevation. Our ancient stage was unfurnished with movable scenery; and tables, chairs, a few boards for a battlemented wall, or a rude structure for a tomb or an altar, seem to have been nearly all the properties it possessed. It was usually hung round with decayed tapestries; and as there was no other mode of costume, but the necessary arras, the author of the piece, that the player, on his entrance, should take occasion to mention the place of action. When the business of a piece required that the stage should represent two apartments, the effect was accomplished by a curtain, called a traverse, drawn across it; and a sort of balcony in the rear enabled the writer to represent his characters at a window, on the platform of a castle, or on an elevated terrace.

To this simplicity, however, we doubtless owe some of the finest passages in our early plays; for it was part of the business of the dramatist to supply the absence of coloured canvas by grandeur and luxuriance of description. The ear was thus made the substitute for the eye, and the poet's pen, aided by the auditor's imagination, more than supplied the place of the painter's brush. Moveable scenery was unknown in our public theatres until after the Restoration; and, as has been observed elsewhere, "the introduction of it gives the date to the commencement of the decline of our dramatic poetry."4

How far propriety of costume was regarded, we have no sufficient means of deciding; but we apprehend that more attention was paid to it than has been generally supposed, or than was accomplished at a much later and more pluralable time. Shakespeare, however, in this department no outlay was spared: the most costly dresses were purchased, that characters might be consistently habited; and, as a single proof, we may mention, that sometimes more than 20/. were given for a cloak,5 an enormous price, when it is recollected that money was then five or six times as valuable as at present.

We have thus briefly stated all that seems absolutely requisite to give the reader a correct notion of the state of the English drama and stage at the period when, according to the best judgment we can form from such evidence as remains to us, Shakespeare advanced to a forward place among the dramatists of the day. As long ago as 1679 Dryden gave currency to the notion, which we have shown to be mistaken, that Shakespeare "created first the stage," and he repeated it in 1692.6 It is not necessary to the just admiration of our noble dramatist, that we should do injustice to his predecessors or earlier contemporaries: on the contrary, his miraculous powers are best to be estimated by a comparison with his ablest rivals; and if he appear not greatest when his works are placed beside those of Marlowe, Greene, Peele, or Lodge, however distinguished their rank as dramatists, and however deserved their popularity, we shall be content to think, that for more than two centuries the world has been under a delusion as to his claims. He rose to eminence, and he maintained it, amid struggles for equality by men of high genius and varied talents; and with his example ever since before us, no poet of our own, or of any other country, has even approached his excellence. Shakespeare is greatest by a comparison with great ones, or he is nothing.

1 It can be shown to have been represented at Croydon, no doubt at Reddington, the residence of the Carew's, under whose patronage Nash acknowledged himself to have been living. See the dedication to his "Terrors of the Night," 4to, 1594. The date of the death of Nash, who probably took a part in the representation of his "Summer's Last Will and Testament," has been disputed: whether he perished before or after 1601; but the production of a canto upon him, from Fitz-greely's Aesopin, printed in 1601, must put an end to all doubt. See the Introduction to Nash's "Pierce Penelope," 1592, as reprinted for the Shakespeare Society.

2 The only known copy of this comedy is without a title-page, but it was entered at Stationer's Hall in 1594, under the name of "Pierce Penelope," and may be presumed that it was printed about that date.

3 He had some share in writing the first part of the "Life of Sir John Oldcastle," printed in 1594, and we may presume that it was printed about that date.

5 In his Prologue to the alteration of "Troilus and Cressida" 1679, he puts these lines into the mouth of the Ghost of Shakespear—

"Untaught, unpractis'd, in a barbarous age. I found not, but created first the stage,"

In the dedication of the translation of Juvenal, thirteen years after, dryden repeats the same assertion in nearly the same words; "he created the stage among us." Shakespeare did not create the stage, and least of all did he create it such as it existed in the time of Dryden, "it was, in truth, created by no art more, and in a very late age; and whatever improvements Shakespeare introduced, when he began to write for the theatre our romantic drama was completely formed, and firmly established."—Pref. to "The Hist. of Eng. Dram. Poetry and the Stage," vol. i., p. x.

CHAPTER I.

Shakespeare advanced or rewarded by Henry VII. Antiquity of the Shakespeares in Warwickshire, &c. Earliest occurrence of the name at Stratford-upon-Avon. The Trade of John Shakespeare. Richard Shakespeare of Sutcliffe, probably father to John Shakespeare, and certainly tenant to Robert Arden, father of John Shakespeare's wife. Robert Arden's seven daughters. Antiquity and property of the Arden family. Marriage of John Shakespeare and Mary Arden: their circumstances. Purchase of a tenement by John Shakespeare. His progress in the corporation. It has been supposed that some of the paternal ancestors of William Shakespeare were advanced, and rewarded with lands and tenements in Warwickshire, for services rendered to Henry VII. The rolls of that reign have been recently most carefully searched, and the name of Shakespeare, according to any mode of spelling it, does not occur in them.

Many Shakespeares were resident in different parts of Warwickshire, as well as in some of the adjoining counties, at an early date. The register of the Guild of St. Anne of Knolle, or Knowle, beginning in 1407 and ending in 1535, when it was dissolved, contains various repetitions of the name, during the reigns of Henry VI, Edward IV, Richard III, Henry VII, and Henry VIII: we there find a Thomas Shakespeare of Balshalle, or Balsall, Thomas Chaspe, and John Shakespeare of Rowington, Richard Shakespe of Wolsche, together with Joan, Jane, and William Shakespeare, of places not mentioned: an Isabella Shakespeare is also there stated to have been prioriss de Wrazale in the 19th Henry VII. The Shakespeares of Wroxal, of Rowington, and of Balsall, are mentioned by Malone, as well as other persons of the same name at Claverdon and Hampton. He carries back his information regarding the Shakespeares of Warwick no higher than 1602, but a William Shakespeare was drowned in the Avon near Warwick in 1574, a John Shakespeare was resident on "the High Pavement" in 1575, and a Thomas Shakespeare in the same place in 1583.

The earliest date at which we hear of a Shakespeare in the borough of Stratford-upon-Avon is 17th June, 1555, when Thomas Siehe instituted a proceeding in the court of

1. On the authority of a grant of arms from the herald's college to John Shakespeare, which circumstance is considered hereafter.
2. For this information we are indebted to Mr. Staunton, of Longbridge House, near Warwick, the owner of the original Registerium Principium et Sororum Gulielmi Sancte Anne de Knolle, a MS. upon vellum.
3. For the circumstance of the drowning of the nameake of our poet, we are obliged to the Rev. Joseph Hunter. Mr. Charles Dickens was good enough to be the medium of the information respecting the Shakespeares of Warwick, transmitted from Mr. Sandys, who derived it from the land-revenue records of the respective periods.
4. Aubrey's words, in his MS. in the Ashmolean Museum, at Oxford, are these:—"William Shakespeare's father was a butcher, and I have been told heretofore by some of the neighbours, that when he was a boy he exercised his father's trade; but when he killed a calf, he would do it in a high style, and make a speech." This tradition certainly does not read like truth, and at what date Aubrey obtained the bailiff, for the recovery of the sum of 8l. from John Shakespeare, who has always been taken to be the father of our great dramatist. Thomas Siehe was of Arlesmore, near Stratford-upon-Worcester, Warwickshire, and out of record of the suit John Shakespeare is called "glover," in English. Taking it for granted, as we have every reason to do, that this John Shakespeare was the father of the poet, the document satisfied Malone that he was a Glover, and not a butcher, as Aubrey had affirmed, nor a dealer in wool, as Rowe had stated. We think that Malone was right, and the testimony is unquestionably more positive and authentic than the traditions to which we have referred. As it is also the most ancient piece of direct evidence connected with the establishment of the Shakespeare family at Stratford, and as Malone did not copy it quite accurately from the register of the bailiff's court, we quote it as it there stands:

John Shakespeare's trade, "glover," is expressed by the common contraction for the termination of the word; and it is, as usual at the time, spelt with the letter w instead of v. It deserves remark also, that although John Shakespeare is often subsequently mentioned in the records of the corporation of Stratford, no addition ever accompanies his name. We may presume that in 1566, he was established in his business, because on the 30th April of that year he was one of twelve jurymen of a court-leet. His name in the list was at first struck through with a pen, but underneath it the word steet was written, probably by the town-clerk. Thus we find him in 1566 acting as a regular trading inhabitant of the borough of Stratford-upon-Avon.

Little doubt can be entertained that he came from Suttterfield, on Warwick side: and he in two particulars has several new documents before us. It appears from them, that a person of the name of Richard Shakespeare (no where before mentioned) was resident at Suttterfield in 1560; he was tenant of a house and land belonging to his information has not been ascertained: Malone conjectured that Aubrey was in Stratford about 1600; he died about 1700, and, in all probability, obtained his knowledge from the same source as the writer of a letter, dated April 10, 1668, to Mr. Edward Southwell, printed in 1689. It appears from hence that the parish clerk of Stratford, who was "above eighty years old" in 1664, had told Mr. Edward Southwell's correspondent that William Shakespeare had been "bounteous apprentice to a butcher," but he did not say that his father was a butcher, nor did he add any thing as absurd as Aubrey subjoins, respecting the killing of a calf, "in a high style."

Rowe is supposed to have derived his materials from Betterton, the actor, who died in 1710, and who, it is said, went to Stratford to collect such particulars as could be obtained: the date of his visit is not known.

In 1690, a person of the name of Antony Shakespeare lived at Strattefeld, and, as we learn from the Master-book of the county of Warwick for that year in the State Paper Office, he was appointed "hillman."
Robert Arden (or Arden, as the name was anciently spelt, and as it stands in the papers in our hands) of Wilmecote, in the parish of Aston Cantlowe. By a conveyance, dated 21st Dec., 11th Henry VIII, we find that Robert Arden then became possessed of houses and land in Snitterfield, from one Joselyne, and his Frau; from Robert Arden the property descended to his son, and it was in the estate which was occupied by Richard Shakespeare in 1550. We have no distinct evidence upon the point; but if we suppose Richard Shakespeare of Snitterfield to have been the father of John Shakespeare of Stratford, who married Mary Arden, the youngest daughter of Robert Arden, it will easily and naturally explain the manner in which John Shakespeare was introduced to the family of the Ardens, and which so conveniently is called Richard Shakespeare, father of John, and the grandfather of William Shakespeare, was one of the tenants of Robert Arden.

Malone, not having the information we now possess before him, was of opinion that Robert Arden, who married Agnes Webbe, and died in 1566, had only four daughters, but the fact undoubtedly is that he had at least seven. On the 7th and 17th July, 1560, he executed two deeds, by which he made over to Adam Palmer and Hugh Porter, in trust for some of his daughters, certain lands and tenements in Snitterfield. In these deeds he mentions six daughters by name, four of them married and two single:—viz., Agnes Stringer, (who had been twice married, first to John Hewyns,) Joan Lambert, Katherine Etkins, Margaret Webbe, Joseph Arden, and Alicia Arden. Mary, his youngest daughter, was not included, and it is possible that he either made some other provision for her, or, that, by a separate and subsequent deed of trust, he made her an equivalent in Snitterfield for what he had made over to her sisters. It is quite certain, as will be seen hereafter, that Mary Arden brought property in Snitterfield, as part of her fortune, to her husband John Shakespeare.

Although the Ardens were an ancient and considerable family in Warwickshire, which derived its name from the forest of Arden, or Arden, in or near which they had possessions, John Shakespeare either made some other provision for her, or, that, by a separate and subsequent deed of trust, he made her an equivalent in Snitterfield for what he had made over to her sisters. It is quite certain, as will be seen hereafter, that Mary Arden brought property in Snitterfield, as part of her fortune, to her husband John Shakespeare.

The register of this event is in the following form, under the head "Baptisms, Anne Dom. 1557. "The seventh daughter to John Shakspeare." It seems likely that the child was named after her aunt, Joan, married to Edward Lambert of Barton on the Heath. Edward Lambert was related to Edmund Lambert, after whom Shakespeare was registered at Snitterfield in 1546, and he supposed (there is little doubt of the fact) that he was the brother of John Shakespeare. Henry Shakespeare was born in 1560, and Richard Shakespeare in the same village in 1562, and he may have been named brother of John Shakespeare, and all three sons to Richard Shakespeare.

This is re-ordered the more probable by the fact that John Shakespeare christened one of his children (born in 1570) Richard. Malone found the fact that Richard Shakespeare was living at Rowington in 1574.

They are thus described: "Petcum illud maremum nec, et tres quartas terres fortissimam per dominum, cum suis pertinentias, in Snitterfield, quae sunt in tenemento ejusdem Ricardi Henleis, et tertam illud cottinganum nec, cum gardinum et pomarum pertinentias, in Snitterfield, quae sunt in tenemento Hugonis Porter." Adam Palmer, the other doctor, does not seem to have occupied any part of the property of the Robert Arden who died in 1556, and to whose seventh daughter, Mary, John Shakespeare was married.

No registration of that marriage has been discovered, but we need not hesitate in deciding that the ceremony took place in 1557. Mary Arden and her sister Alice were certainly unmarried, when they were appointed "ex officine," under the provisions of the will of their father, in 1560 and the probability seems to be that they were on that account chosen for the office, in preference to their five married sisters, Joan, the first child of John Shakespeare and his wife Mary, was baptized in the church of Stratford upon-Avon on the 15th Sept., 1568, so that we may fix their union towards the close of 1557, about a year after the death of Robert Arden.

It was probably in contemplation of his marriage that, on 21st October, 1557, John Shakespeare became the owner of two copyhold houses in Stratford, one in Greenhill-street, and the other in Henley-street, which were alienated to him by George Turner and Edward West, respectively; the house in Greenhill-street had a garden and croft attached to it, and the house in Henley-street only a garden; and for each he was to pay to the lord of the manor an annual rent of sixpence. In 1567 he was again sworn as a jurymen upon the court-leet, and in the spring of the following year he was amerced in the sum of fourpence for not keeping clean the gutter in front of his dwelling; Fran-is in possession of the original presentation made by these officers on the 4th May in that year, the name of the father of our great dramatist, coming last, after those of Henry Bydly, Lewis sp William, and William Mynske. The most remarkable circumstance connected with it is the number of persons who were amerced in sums varying from 8d. to 2s. William Shakespeare was fined 3s. 4d. for “breaking the assize,” he being a “common baker.” Three other bakers were severely compelled to pay similar amounts on the same occasion, and for the same offence. In September following the date of this report John Shakespeare was elected one of the chamberlains of the borough, a very responsible post, in which he remained two years.

His second child, Margaret, or Margareta, (as the name stands in the register) was baptized on the 24 Dec., 1562, when he was an adult chamberlain. She was buried on 30th April, 1652.

The greatest event, perhaps, in the literary history of the world occurred a year afterwards—William Shakespeare was born. The day of his birth cannot be fixed with absolute certainty, but he was baptized on the 26th April, 1564, and the memorandum in the register is precisely in the following form:—

So that whoever kept the book (in all probability the clerk) either committed a common clerical error, or was no great proficient in the rules of grammar. It seems most likely that our great dramatist had been brought into the world the three days before he was baptized, and it was then the custom to delay the infant’s baptism till the second Sunday following. He is still pointed out by tradition, in Henley-street, as that in which William Shakespeare first saw the light, and we have already shown that his father was the owner of two copy-hold dwellings in Henley-street and Greenhill-street, and we may, perhaps, conclude that the birth took place in the former. John and Mary Shakespeare having previously lost two girls, Joan and Margaret, William was at this time the only child of the parents.

A malignant fever, denominated the plague, broke out at Stratford while William Shakespeare was in extreme fancy: he was not two months old when it made its appearance, having been brought from London, where, according to Stow, (Annuales, p. 1112, edit. 1615.) it raged with great violence throughout the year 1566, and did not so far alate that term could be kept, as usual at Westminster, until June 1567. It is also stated that there were no deaths in Stratford in November and December, 1564, and Malone calculated that it carried off in that interval more than a seventh part of the whole population, consisting of about 1400 inhabitants. It does not appear that it reached any member of the immediate family of John Shakespeare, and it is not at all unlikely that he avoided its ravages by quitting Stratford for Snitterfield, where he owned some property in right of his wife, and where perhaps his father was still living as tenant to Alexander Webe, who, as we have seen, in 1566, had obtained

I. The original memorandum runs thus:—

Francis Berlage, Master Baly that now ys, Ademes Gryny, Mr. ete. hath been to gather these two memorandums, in Chappell Lane, John Shakspere, for not kepyinge of their guttere cleane, they stand anstered.

The above were ameryed, 1d., is placed above the name of each of the parties.

The following are the terms used:—

Item, ther treuty and webelloyd Humphrey Pymly, Roger Sadler, John Taylor, and John Shakspere, constable.

This fact appears from a lease, before noticed, granted on 21st March, 1564, in favour of two members of the corporation, Agnes Arden, for dyverse and sundry confusions, hath demised, granted, &c. to the said Alexander Webe, and to his successors, together for a time of seven years, a cottage, with all appurtenances, in Snitterfield. The cottage and the wert is a half of a yeire in hand whereunto belonging, &c., being in the townes and fyldes of Snitterfield affored: which now are in the occupation of Richardes Shakespeare, John Henley, and John Hargrey. 4 Of course the property formed part of the jointure of Agnes Arden, mentioned in the will of her husband.

Of John Shakespeare, the shoemaker, seems not to have belonged to the reversion, at all events, till many years afterwards, so that the a lease for forty years from his relative, the widow Agnes Arden, of the messuage in which Richard Shakespeare resided.

In order to show that John Shakespeare was at this date in moderate, and probably comfortable, though not in affluent circumstances, Malone adduced a piece of evidence derived from the register of Stratford: it consists of the names of persons in the borough who were interrogationed at the visitation of the plague, contributed various sums to the relief of the poor. The meeting at which it was determined to collect subscriptions with this object was convened in the open air, "At a hall holden in our garden," &c.; no doubt on account of the infection. The donations varied between £3 4d. (given by only one individual of the name of Richard Symes) and 6d.; and the sum against the name of John Shakespeare was entered in the minutes that at that date he was not an alderman; and of twenty-four enumerated five others gave the same amount, while six gave less: the bailiff contributed 2s. 4d., and the head alderman 2s. 6d., while ten more put down either 2s. 6d. or 2s. each, and a person of the name of Botte 1s. These subscriptions were raised on the 30th August, but on the 6th September a further sum seems to have been required, and the bailiff and six aldermen gave 1s. each, Adrian Quincey 1s. 6d., and John Shakespeare and four others 6d. each; only one member of the corporation, Robert Bratt, whose name will afterwards occur, contributed 4d. We are, we think, warranted in concluding, that in 1564 John Shakespeare was an industrious and thriving tradesman.

He continued steadily to advance in rank and importance in the corporation, and was elected one of the fourteen aldermen of Stratford on the 4th July, 1566; but he did not take the usual oath until the 6th September following. The bailiff of the year was Richard Hill, a woollen-dyer; and the father of our poet became the occupant of that situation rather more than three years afterwards, when his son William was about four years and a half old. John Shakespeare was bailiff of Stratford-upon-Avon from Michaelmas 1568, to Michaelmas 1569, the autumn being the customary period of election. In the meantime his wife had brought him another son, who was christened Gilbert, on 13th October, 1566.

Joan seems to have been a favourite name with the Shakespearees; and John Shakespeare is mentioned in the records of the guild of Knowle, in the reign of Henry VIII.; and John and Mary Shakespeare christened their first child, which died an infant, Joan. A third daughter was born to them while John Shakespeare was bailiff, and her they also baptized Joan on 16th April, 1569. For the partiality of the name of Joan, in this instance, upon which some biographers have remarked without being able to explain it, may be accounted for by the fact that a maternal aunt, married to Edward Lambert, was called Joan; and it is very possible that she stood god-mother upon both occasions. Joan Lambert was one of the daughters of Robert Arden, regarding whom, until recently, we have had no information.

We have now traced John Shakespeare through various offices in the borough of Stratford, until he reached the highest distinction which it was in the power of his fellow-townsmen to bestow: he was bailiff, and ex-officio a magistrate.

Two new documents have recently come to light which belong to this period, and which show, beyond all dispute, that although John Shakespeare had risen to a station so respectable as that of bailiff of Stratford, with his name in the commission of the peace, he was not able to write. Malone referred to the records of the borough to establish that in 1566, when John Wheler was called upon by nineteen aldermen and burgesses to undertake the duties of bailiff, John Shakespeare was among twelve other marksmen, including George Whately, the then bailiff, and Roger Arden, his "father and head alderman." There was, therefore, nothing remarkable in this inability to write: and if there were any doubt upon this point, (it being a little ambiguous whether the signature referred to the name of Thomas Dyunn, or of John Shakespeare,) it can never be entertained hereafter, because the Shakespeare Society has put in possession of two warrants, granted by John Shakespeare as bailiff of Stratford, the one dated the 3rd, and the other the 9th December, 11 Elizabeth, for the capture of John Ball and Richard Dalle, on account of debts severally due from them, to both of which his mark was appended. The same fact is established by two other documents, to which we shall have occasion hereafter to advert, belonging to a period ten years subsequent to that of which we are now speaking.

CHAPTER III.

Although John Shakespeare could not write his name it has generally been stated, and believed, that while he was the officer of the borough he obtained a grant of arms from Clarendon Cooke, who was in office from 1566 to 1592. We have considerable doubt of this fact, partly arising out of the circumstance, that although Cooke's original book, in which he entered the arms he granted, has been preserved in the Heralds' College, we find in it no note of any such concession to John Shakespeare. It is true that this book might not contain memoranda of all the arms Cooke had confirmed, but it is a circumstance deserving notice, that in this case such an entry has failed, though these arms was made in 1596, but we cannot help thinking, with Malone, that this instrument was obtained at the personal instance of the poet, who had then actually purchased, or was on the eve of purchasing, New Place (or the "great house," as it was also called) in Stratford. The confirmation states, that the heralds had been "by credible report informed," that "the parents and late antecessors" of John Shakespeare were for their valiant and faithful services advanced and rewarded of the most prudent prince, Henry the Seventh; but, as has been before stated, on examining the rolls of that reign, we can discover no trace of advancement or reward to any person of the name of Shakespeare. It is true that the Ardens, or Arderns, were so "advanced and rewarded," and these, though not strictly the "parents," were certainly the "antecessors" of William Shakespeare's family.

The register of the parish-church contains the subsequent entry:

"1566, October 13, Gilbertus filius Johanne Shakespeare." 1

1 Although John Shakespeare was at this time bailiff, no Mr. or Magister is prefixed to his name in the register, a distinction which appears to have been made after he had served that office.

"1566, April 15, Jane the daughter of John Shakespeare." 2

2 Malone gave both the confirmation and exemplification of arms, but appears to have been made after he had served that office.

3 Malone gives as the parochial one the following print of the state of the originals in the heralds' College:—thus he printed "parent and late antecessor," instead of "parents and late antecessors," in the confirmation; and "whose parent and great-grandfather, and late antecessor," instead of "whose parent, great-grandfather, and late antecessor," in the exemplification. We are bound here to express our acknowledgments to Sir Charles Young, the present Master of Arms, for the trouble he took in minutely collating Malone's copies with the documents themselves. Other errors he pointed out do not require particular notice, as they apply to parts of the instruments not necessary for our argument.

4 Although the Ardens, or Arderns, are mentioned by William Shakespeare in the 16th and 17th years of his reign; and he is spoken of in the grants as Wm. Arden and Henricus Arden, and the other that of bailiff of the lordship of Codnor, and keeper of the park there. He obtained a grant of lands in 33 Henry VII.; viz., the large manor of Yoxall, in the county of Stafford, on condition of a payment of a rent to the King of 4s. per annum.
Shakespeare. In 1599, an exemplification of arms was procured, and in this document it is asserted that the "great grand father of John Shakespeare had been "advanced and rewarded with lands and tenements" by Henry VII. Our poet's "great grand father," by the mother's side, was so "advanced and rewarded," and we know that he did "faithful and approved service" to that "most prudent prince."

Another point, though one of less importance, is, that it is stated, in a note at the foot of the confirmation of 1596, that "the helmet was sent, over which "showeth" was written: if the original patent, under Cooke's hand, had been sent to the Heralds' College in 1596, there could have been little question about it; but the substituted word "showeth" is more indefinite, and may mean only, that the party applying for the confirmation alleged that Cooke had granted such a coat of arms! That William Shakespeare had been granted a grant of arms for himself in 1596 is highly probable, from the fact that he was an actor, (a profession then much looked down upon) and not of a rank in life to entitle him to it; he, therefore, may have very fairly and properly put forward his father's name and claims as having been bailli of Stratford, and a "justice of peace," and coupled that fact with the deserts and rewards of the Arden under bard's title, one of whose "grandfather," and all of whom, by reason of the marriage of his father with an Arden, were his "ancestors."

We only doubt whether John Shakespeare obtained any grant of arms, as has been supposed, in 1565-9; and it is to be observed that the documents relating to this question, still preserved in the Heralds' College, are full of corrections and interlinear marks, particularly as regards the ancestor of John Shakespeare: we are persuaded that when William Shakespeare applied to the office in 1596, Garter of that day, or his assistants, made confusion between the "great grandfather" and the "ancestors" of John, and of William Shakespeare. What is stated, both in the confirmation and exemplification, as to parentage and descent, is true as regards William Shakespeare, but erroneous as regards John Shakespeare.

That William Dethick, garter-kings-at-arms, 1599 was subsequently called to account for having granted coats to persons whose station in society and circumstances gave them no right to distinction. The case of John Shakespeare was one of those complained of in this respect; and had Clarencieux Cooke really put his name in 1565-9 to any such patent as, if it was asserted, had been exhibited to Sir William Dethick a copy of it, some record of it, would probably have remained in the office of arms in 1596; and the production of that alone, proving that he had merely acted on the precedent of Clarencieux Cooke would, to a considerable extent at least, have justified Sir William Dethick. No copy, nor record, was however so produced, but merely a memorandum at the foot of the confirmation of 1596, that an original grant had been sent or shown, which memorandum may have been added when Sir William Dethick's conduct was called in question; and certain other statements are made at the bottom of the same document, which would be material to Garter's vindication, but which are not borne out by facts. One of these statements is, that John Shakespeare, in 1596, was worth 500l., an error certainly as regarded him, but a truth probably as regarded his son.

It is really a matter of little moment whether John Shakespeare did or did not obtain a grant of arms while he was bailiff of Stratford; but we are strongly inclined to think that he was entitled to one. The value of 500l. in 1596, originated with Sir W. Dethick, when he subsequently wanted to make out his own vindication from the charge of having conceded arms to various persons without due caution and inquiry.

In 1570, when William Shakespeare was in his seventh year, his father was in possession, of a field called Ingen, or Ington, meadow, within two miles of Stratford, which he held on a yearly rent. We cannot tell in what year he first rented it, because the instrument proving his tenancy is dated 11th June, 1581, and only states the fact, that on 11th Dec, 1570, it was in his occupation. The annual payment for it was 8l., a considerable sum, certainly, for that time; but if there had been a "good dwelling-house and orchard" upon the field, as Malone conjectured, that circumstance would, in all probability, have been mentioned. We now know that Shakespeare owned it for agricultural purposes, but upon this point we are without information. That he lived in Stratford at the time we infer from the fact, that on the 28th September, 1571, a daughter, named Anne, was baptized at the parish-church. He had thus four children living, two boys and two girls, William, Gilbert, Joan, and Anne, but the last died at an early age, having been buried on 4th April, 1579. It will be remembered that, on the baptism of his daughter Anne, he was, for the first time, called "Magister Shakespeare" in the Latin entry in the Register, a distinction he seems to have acquired by having served the office of bailiff two years before. The same observation will apply to the registration of his fifth child, Richard, who was baptized on 11th March, 1573-4, as the son of "Mr. John Shakespeare." Richard Shakespeare may have been named after his grandfather of Stratford, who perhaps was present on the occasion.

The increase of John Shakespeare's family seems, for some time, to have been accompanied by an increase of his means, and in 1574 he gave Edmund and Emman Hall 46l. for two freehold houses, with gardens and orchards, in Henley-street. It will not be forgotten that he was already the owner of a copyhold tenement in the same street, which he had bought at a small price, in 1556, before his marriage with Mary Arden. To one of the two last-purchased dwellings John Shakespeare is supposed to have removed his family; but, for aught we know, he had lived from the time of his marriage, and continued to live in 1574, in the house in Henley-street, which had been alienated to him eighteen years before. It does not appear that he had ever ported with West's house, so that in 1574 he was the owner of three houses in Henley-street. Forty use the same shield of arms, single, or impaled as aforesaid, during thirteenth and fourteenth century. The motto, as given at the head of the confirmatory, is NON SINE DUCTO. For "Arden of Wellingote" the heralds should have said Arden de Wilemecote. 3 Malone places reliance on the words of the close roll, from which this impression is derived, but he seems to feel that the speaker was not an accurate witness, and that "a good dwelling-house and orchard" would have been specified, and not included in such general terms: they are not mere "appurtenances;"

4 The following are copies of the register of the baptism and burial of Anne Shakespeare:

- 1574 April 3. Name of John Shakespeare was the party to whom the hall was granted to be held argent; and for his crest or cognizance a falcon with wings displayed, standing on a wreath of his crown, having a helm, mantles and tassels attached to it, would probably have remained in the office of arms. In the confirmation, as well as in the exemplification, it is stated that the arms are "depicted in the margin," and in the latter reference is made to another escutcheon, in which the arms of Shakespeare are impaled with the surnames of Arden of Wellingote, signifying thereby that they may and shall be lawfull for the said John Shakespeare, gene., "sure and
It is, we apprehend, indisputable that soon after this date the title of John Shakespeare's affairs began to turn, and that he experienced disappointments and losses which seriously affected his pecuniary circumstances. Malone was in possession of several important facts upon this subject, and recently a strong piece of confirmatory testimony has been presented to us which was in the hands of Malone, applicable to the beginning of 1578. At a borough ball on the 29th Jan, in that year, it was ordered that every alderman in Stratford should pay 6s. 8d., and every burgess 3s. 4d. towards "the furniture of three pike-men, two bill-men, and one arer." Now, although John Shakespeare was not only an alderman, but had been chosen "head alderman" in 1571, he was allowed to contribute only 3s. 4d., as if he had been merely a burgess: Humphrey Plynley, another alderman, paid 5s., while John Walker, Thomas Brodgen, and Anthony Turner contributed 2s. 6d. each, William Bracce 2s., and Robert Bratt "nothing in this place." It is possible that Bratt had been called upon to furnish a contribution in some other place, or perhaps the words are to be taken to mean, that he was excused altogether; and it is to be remarked that the allotment to the poor in Sept., 1664, Bratt was the only individual who gave no more than fourpence.

In November, 1578, it was required that every alderman should "pay weekly to the relief of the poor 4d."

John Shakespeare and Robert Bratt were excepted: they were "not to be taxed to pay any thing," while two others (one of those Alderman Plynley) were rated at 3d. a week.

In March, 1578-9, when another call was made upon the town, for the purpose of purchasing corslets, calivers, &c., the name of John Shakespeare was found, at the end of the account, in a list of persons whose "sums were unpaid and unaccounted for." Another fact tends strongly to the conclusion that in 1578 John Shakespeare was distressed for money: he owed a baker of the name of Roger Sadler 5s., for which Edmund Lambert, and a person of the name of Cornish, had become security: Sadler died, and in his will, dated 14th November, 1578, he included the following among the debts due to him:—Item of Edmund Lambert and Cornish, for the debt of Mr. John Shacksper, 5s.

Malone conjectured that Edmund Lambert was some relation to Mary Shakespeare, and there can be little doubt of it, as an Edward Lambert had married her sister Joan Arden. To Edmund Lambert John Shakespeare, in 1578, mortgaged his wife's estate in Ashton Cantlow, called Asbyes, for 40I., an additional circumstance to prove that he had no more money than was required to meet his necessities about this date seems to have been, that in 1579 he parted with his wife's interest in two tenements in Sittenfield to Robert Webbe for the small sum of 4I. This is a striking confirmation of John Shakespeare's embarrassments, with which Malone was not acquainted; but the original deed, with the bond for the fulfillment of covenants, (both bearing date 15th Oct., 1579) subjoined to the disquisition of John Shakespeare and Mary Shakespeare, and sealed with their respective seals, is in the hands of the Shakespeare Society. His houses in Stratford descended to his son, but they may have been mortgaged at this period, and it is indisputable that John Shakespeare divested himself, in 1578 and 1579, of the landed property his wife had brought him, being in the end driven to the extremity of raising the trifling sum of 4I. by the sale of her share of two messuages in Sittenfield.

It has been supposed that he might not at this time reside in Stratford-upon-Avon, and that for this reason he only contributed 3s. 4d. for pikemen, &c., and nothing to the poor of the town, in 1578. This notion is refuted by the fact, that in the deed for the sale of his wife's property in Sittenfield to Webbe, in 1578, he is called "John Shackspeare of Stratford-upon-Avon," and in the bond for the performance of covenants, "Johnsham Shackspeare de Stratfordup-Avon, in co. Worcs." Had he been resident at Stratford, or at Sittenfield he would hardly have been described as of Stratford-upon-Avon. Another point requiring notice in connexion with these two newly-discovered documents is, that in both John Shakespeare is termed "yeoman," and not Glover: perhaps in 1579, although he continued to occupy a house in Stratford, he had relinquished his original trade, and having embarked in agricultural pursuits, to which he had not been educated, had been unsuccessful. This may appear not an unusual mode of accounting for some of his difficulties. In the midst of them, in the spring of 1580, another son, named Edmund, (perhaps after Edmund Lambert, the mortgagee of Asbyes) was born, and christened at the parish church.

CHAPTER IV.

Education of William Shakespeare: probably at the free-school of Stratford. At what time, and under what circumstances, he left school. Possibly an assistant in the school, and afterward in an attorney's office, before he received his legal education. His marriage with Anne Hathaway. The preliminary bond given by Fulke Gauden and John Richardson. Birth of Susanna, the first child of William Shakespeare and wife Anne. William Shakespeare's opinion on the marriage of persons of disproportionate age. His domestic circumstances. Anne Hathaway's family.

At the period of the sale of their Sittenfield property by his father and mother, William Shakespeare was in his sixteenth year, and in what way he had been educated is more matter of conjecture. It is highly probable that he was at the free-school of Stratford, founded by Thomas Jolly in the reign of Edward IV., and subsequently chartered by Edward VI.; but we are destitute of all evidence beyond Rowe's assertion. Of course, we know nothing of the time when he might have been first sent there; but if so sent between 1570 and 1578, Walter Roche, Thomas Hunt, and Thomas Jenkins, were successively masters, and from them he must have derived the rudiments of his Latin and Greek. Thackeray said that at this date Shakespeare could not read, write or cipher, but only "the kind of is quite certain from the proof we have adduced, that neither of them could write; but this very deficiency might render them more desirous that their eldest son, at least, if not their children in general, should receive the best education circumstances would allow. The free grammar-school of Stratford afforded an opportunity of which, it is not unlikely, the parents of William Shakespeare made use of themselves.

As we are ignorant of the time when he went to school, we are also in the dark as to the period when he left it. Rowe, indeed, has told us that the poverty of John Shakespeare, and the necessity of employing his son profitably at home, induced him, at an early age, to withdraw him from school, as there is no evidence that he ever received any benefit from that institution. Moreover, the evidence, as we have seen, that Shakespeare did not understand Latin and Greek, proves that it was not intended that he should receive an education beyond that which could be obtained in a grammar-school.

The seal affixed by John Shakespeare has his initials I S upon it, while that appended to the mark of his wife represents a rudely-graved horse. The mark of Mary Shakespeare seems to have been intended for an unexecuted imitation of the letter M. With reference to the word "cozen," used throughout the indenture, it is to be refrom the place of instruction. Such may have been the case; but in considering the question, we must not leave out of view the fact that the education of the son of a member of the corporation would cost nothing; so that, if the father's embarrassments, the expense of continuing studies there could not have entered into the calculation; he must have been taken away, as a rule, in order to aid his father in the maintenance of his family, considering, after the death of his father, Anne in 1579, and the birth of his son Edmund in 1580, of his wife and five children. However, we are without the power of confirming or contradicting Rowe's statement.

 Aubrey has positively asserted, in his MSS., in the Ashmolean Museum, that "in his younger years Shakespeare had been a schoolmaster in the country; and the truth may be, though we are not aware that the speculation has ever been handled, that being a young man of abilities, and rapid in the acquisition of knowledge, he had been employed by Jenkins (the master of the school from 1577 to 1580, if not for a longer period) to aid him in the instruction of the juvenile boys. Such a course is certainly not very unusual, and it may serve to account for this part of Aubrey's narrative."

We decided to concur with Malone in thinking that, after Shakespeare left the free-school, he was employed in the capacity of an attorney. Proofs of something like a legal education are to be found in many of his plays; and it may be safely asserted, that they do not occur anything like so frequently in the dramatic productions of his contemporaries. We doubt if, in the whole works of Marlowe, Greene, Peele, Jonson, Heywood, Chapman, Marston, Dekker, and Webster, many legal terms and allusions are to be found, as in only six or eight plays by Shakespeare; and, moreover, they are applied with much technical exactness and propriety. Malone has accumulated some of these.

1 The narrowness of his father's circumstances, and the want of means to support his son, forced his father to withdraw him from school, and unhappily prevented his farther preference."—Rowe's Life.

Aubrey cite "Mr. Beeston" as his authority, and as persons of that name were connected with theatres before the death of Shakespeare, and long afterwards, we ought to trace the transaction with the more respect. Richard Rolland, in consulting to his Diary, was employed in the same capacity. We learn from the encomiums of the "Menaphon," that Shakespeare was "author of two, and a part of three, and was under consideration for a fourth." The "Hamlet," to which Shakespeare alludes, must much remember the players have always been the only drama, which was in existence long before Shakespeare had been the old drama, which was in existence long before Shakespeare had been the old drama, which was in existence long before Shakespeare had been the old drama, which was in existence long before Shakespeare had been the old drama, which was in existence long before Shakespeare had been the old drama, which was in existence long before Shakespeare had been the old drama.

The invention, divested of useless formal contractions, runs thus:

"Noverint universi personae, non Felix Sandells de Stratford faber, sed Thomas Newenham in comitate Warwick, agricola, et Johanne,使其信以Chronin non propter reputationem suam, sed propter suam honestatem, et suam open and open heart. had an excellent fancy, and that he was neither bold, nor gentle, nor expressive, nor withal with that which sometimes it was never in my power to write, sufragium passum est, as Augustus said, of Herodotus. His wit was in his power; would the use of it had been too bad."—Josephus.

"Hence he proceeds to instance a passage in "Julius Caesar." Ben Jonson, then, in corroborating this, was there was ever more in him to be praised, than to be contemned and pardoned." Consistently with what Ben Jonson and his followers, in the following address to "the dear father of Stratford, Mr. and Mrs. Condell," to the great variety of Readers," before he had judged at the time of the "10th of December."—"His mind and hand went together, and his thought he entertained with the readiness, that we have scarce received from his pen in his papers."
ceremony was performed, but certainly not at Stratford-upon-Avon, to which both the parties belonged, where the churchmen resided, and where if it had been registered, it would have been recorded. The object of the bond was to obtain such a dispensation from the bishop of Worcester as would authorize a clergyman to unite the bride and groom after only a single publication of the banns; and it is not to be concealed or denied, that the whole proceeding seems to indicate haste and secrecy. However, it ought not to escape notice that the seal used when the bond was executed, although damaged, has upon it the initials R. H., as if it had belonged to himself, and several passages in Shakespeare’s plays have been pointed out by Malone, and repeated by other biographers, which seem to point directly at the evils resulting from unions in which the parties were “mislaid in respect of years.” The most remarkable of these is certainly the well-known speech of the Duke to Viola, in “Twelfth Night,” (act ii. sc. 4) where he says,

“Let still the woman take
An elder than herself: so wears she to him;
So sways she level in her husband’s heart:
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our families are great and uniform,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and worn,
Than women’s are.”

Afterwards the Duke adds,

“Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent.”

Whether these lines did or did not originate in the author’s reflections upon his own marriage, they are so applicable to his own case, that it seems impossible he should have written them without recalling the circumstances at leading his lady union, and the disparity of years between himself and his wife. Such, we know, was the confirmed opinion of Coleridge, expressed on two distinct occasions in his lectures, and such we think will be the conclusion at which most readers will arrive:—“I cannot hesitate in believing,” observed Coleridge in 1816, “that in this passage from ‘Twelfth Night,’ Shakespeare meant to give a caution arising out of his own experience; and, but for the fact of the discrepancy of years between himself and his wife, I doubt much whether the dialogue between Viola and the Duke would have received this turn!” It is incident to our nature that youths, just advancing to manhood, should feel with peculiar strength the attraction of women whose charms have reached the full-blown summer of beauty; but we cannot think that it was so necessary a consequence, as some have supposed, that Anne Hathaway should have possessed peculiar personal advantages. It may be remarked, that poets have often appeared comparatively indifferent to the features and persons of their mistresses, since, in proportion to the strength of their imaginative faculty, they have been able to supply all physical deficiencies. Coleridge was aware, if not from his own particular case, from reasons of example, that the beauty of the objects of the affection of poets was sometimes more fanciful than real, and his notion was, that Anne Hathaway was a woman, with whom the boish Shakespeare had fallen in love, perhaps from proximity of residence and frequency of intercourse, and that she had not any peculiar recommendations of a personal description. The truth, however, is, that we have no evidence either way; and when Oldys remarks upon the 93rd sonnet, that it seems to him a confidential letter to his “dear wife, on some suspicion of her infidelity,” it is clear that he was under an entire mistake as to the individual, the lines,

“So shall I live supposing thou art true
Like a deceived husband; so love’s face
May still seem love to me,”

were most certainly not applied to his wife; and Oldys could have had no other ground for asserting that Anne Hathaway was “beautiful,” than general supposition, and the erroneous belief that a sonnet like that from which we have made a brief quotation had Shakespeare’s wife for its object.

The present may not be an improper opportunity for remarking (if, indeed, the remark might not be entirely spared, and the reader left to draw his own inferences) that the balance of such imperfect information as remains to us leads us to the opinion that Shakespeare was not a very happy married man. The disparity in age between himself and his wife from the first was such, that she could not “sway level in his husband’s heart;” and the disadvantage, for certain time at least, more apparent as they advanced in years; may we say also, that the peculiar circumstances attending their marriage, and the birth of their first child, would not tend, even in the most grateful and considerate mind, to increase that respect which is the chief source of confidence and comfort in domestic life. To this may be added the fact (by whatever circumstances it may have been occasioned, which we shall not consider presently) that Shakespeare quitting his home at Stratford a very few years after he had become a husband and a father, and that although he revisited his native town frequently, and ultimately settled there with his family, there is no proof that his wife ever returned with him to London, or resided with him during any of his lengthened sojourns in the metropolis: that she may have done so is very possible; and in 1609 he certainly paid a weekly poor-rate to an amount that may indicate that he occupied a house in Southwark, he found it from the way in which he is described that he “lived in a boyish manner.” This is certainly decisive against the supposition that Shakespeare was an “imaginative being” who would render “personal charms” in his wife less necessary to his happiness.

1 Malone conjectured that the marriage took place at Weston, or Bilston, near Wolverhampton, where Shakespeare was born, and stated therefrom that the marriage was a clandestine one. A more recent search in the registers of some other churches in the neighbourhood of Stratford has not added peculiar personal advantages. It may be remarked, that poets have often appeared comparatively indifferent to the features and persons of their mistresses, since, in proportion to the strength of their imaginative faculty, they

2 Rowe tells us, (and we are without any other authority) that Hathaway was “said to have been a substantial yeoman,” and he was most likely in possession of a seat, such as John Shakespeare had used in 1579.

3 The fact is registered in this form:—

4 We derive this opinion from our own notes of what fell from Coleridge upon the occasion in question. The lectures, upon which as was then engaged, were delivered, are from one belonging to the Globe tavern, a Fleet-street. He repeated the same sentiment in

5 The Rev. Mr. Dyce, in his Life of Shakespeare, prefixed to the Aldine edition of his Poems, 12mo. 1852. p. x. It comprises all the indications that our poet then gave that he was the author of the sonnets.

6 When the Rev. Mr. Dyce observes that “it is unlikely that a woman devoid of personal charms should have won the youthful affections of so imaginative a boy as Shakspeare,” he has no notion of the mere fact that Shakespeare was an “imaginative being” would render “personal charms” in his wife less necessary to his happiness.

7 In his MS. notes to Langbaine, in the British Museum, as quoted by Steevens. See “Malone’s Shakespeare, by Boswell,” vol. xx. 296.

8 We have noticed this matter more at length hereafter, with reference to the question, whether Shakespeare, in 1605, were not rated to the poor of Southwark in respect of his tenement property, and not for any dwelling-house which he occupied.
in the town-hall, if that could be granted to them, or elsewhere. It so happened that the earliest record of the presentation of any plays in Stratford-upon-Avon, the probable date in the year when John Shakespeare was dead, is the precise year not stated, but it was in 1584 when "the Queen's Players" (meaning presumably at this date, one company of her "Interlude Players") retained under that name by her father-in-law (garter-bearer) received 9s. out of the corporate funds, while the Earl of Worcester's servants in the same year obtained only 12s. In 1573, just before the grant of the royal licence to them, the Earl of Leicester's Players, of whom James Burbage was the treasurer, received 6s. 8d.; and in the next year the companies acting under the names of the Earls of Warwick and Worcester obtained 17s. 6d. and 9d. respectively. It is unnecessary to state precisely the number of plays exhibited at various times by the bailiff, aldermen, and burgesses, but we may notice, that in 1574 the players of the Earls of Leicester and Warwick again exhibited; and in 1579 we hear of a company in Stratford patronized by one of the noble neighborhood, (in a very unusual circumstance) the Countess of Essex, "Lord Strange's men" (at this date not players, but tumblers), also exhibited in the same year. In 1580 the Earl of Derby's players were rewarded. The same encouragement was given to the companies of the Earls of Warwick and Berkeley in 1583; but in 1582 we only hear of the Earl of Worcester's players having been in the town. In 1585 the earl of Berkeley's players, and those of Lord Chamberlain, performed in Stratford, while, in the next few years, companies appear to have visited the borough. In 1586 the "players" (without mentioning any name) exhibited; and in 1587 no fewer than five associations were rewarded: viz. the Queen's Players, and those of the Earls of Essex, Leicester, and Stafford, with another company, the noblemen countenancing them not being named.

It is to be remarked that several of the players, with whom Shakespeare was afterwards connected, appear to have come originally from Stratford or its neighborhood. A family of the house of Burbage was resident in Stratford, and one member of it attained to the highest dignity in the corporation; in the muster-book of the county of Warwick, in 1569, preserved in the State-paper office, we meet in various places with the name of Burbage, Slye, and Hume, although not with the same Christian names as those of the actors in Shakespeare's plays. The general combination of Nicholas Tooley is, however, found there; and he was a well-known member of the company to which Shakespeare was attached. It is very distinctly ascertained that James Burbage, the father of the celebrated Richard Burbage (the representative of many of the heroes in the works of our great dramatist) and one of the original builders of the Blackfriars theatre, migrated to London from that part of the kingdom, and the name of Thomas Greene may be connected with the fact. He was familiar to all who are acquainted with the detailed history of our stage at that period. Many supposed that Thomas Greene might have introduced Shakespeare to the theatre, and at an early date it was certainly a member of the company called the Lord Chamberlain's servants; how long he continued we are without information, although we know that he came, and perhaps not long after 1589, an actor in the rival association under Alleyn, and that he was one of Queen Anne's Players when, on the accession of James I, she took a company under her patronage. If any introduction to the Lord Chamberlain's servants had been necessary for Shakespeare then, and this early date, he could easily have procured it from several other quarters. The frequent performances of various associations of actors in Stratford and elsewhere, and the taste for theatricals thereby produced, may have had the effect of drawing not a few young men in Warwickshire from their homes, to follow the attractive and profitable profession; and such may have been the case with Shakespeare, without supposing that domestic differences, arising out of disparity of age or any other cause, influenced his determination, or that he was driven away by the terror of Sir Thomas Walsingham's spy, or the mis-stated date of the Revels. It has been matter of speculation, and mere speculation, for nobody has pretended to bring forward a surmise upon the question whether Shakespeare visited Kenilworth in the battle, when Queen Elizabeth was entertained there by the Duke of Leicester in 1575, and whether the Earl of Strange; with his train and pageantry he then witnessed did not give a colour to his mind, and a direction to his pursuits. Considering that he was then only in his eleventh year, that we cannot believe he found his way into that gaudy and august assembly. Kenilworth was four miles distant: John Shakespeare, though he had been bailiff, and was still held an alderman of Stratford, was not a man of sufficient rank and importance to be there in any official capacity, and he probably had not means to equip himself and his son for such an exhibition. It may be very well as a matter of fancy to indulge such a notion, but it seems to us, every reasonable person, against it. That Shakespeare was the cause of the elaborate preparations, and of the magnificent entertainments, there can be no doubt, for it was an event calculated to create a strong sensation in the public archives.

Nicholas Tooley, was of Bourningle, and he is said to have been possessed of 29½ goods. We are indebted to Mr. Lowndes for directing our attention to this document, which he only recently discovery in the public archives. It has been conjectured, but we believe, upon no evidence beyond the following entry in the register of deaths at Stratford, that Greene was in some way related to Shakespeare. 1593. March 6. Thomas Greene, alias Shakespeare.

This was perhaps the father of Thomas Greene, the actor, who was a comedian of great reputation and popularity, and became manager of the "City Gallants," in a character called "Bull's Head," a sort of the Queen's Players, in which it occurs, with the constantly repeated phrase, "Tu quoque," and which was printed in 1611. The Revels of 1660 is also said to be "Quoquyo"; it was printed in 1614, under the double title of "Greene's Tu Quoque, or the City Gallant," and which, it is believed, was written by Thomas Greene, but it may be doubted, whether it was this the comedian, for it is a very respectable copy of the early manuscript. 1593. August 4. Thomas Greene, alias Shakespeare, the younger, who was a comedian, at Stratford, and one of them was a solicitor acted in London.

1 Upon this point we differ from the Rev. Mr. Halpin in his incriminating testimony was printed by the Church Society. Bishop Percy, in his "Essay upon the Revels," printed several passages from the "Essay upon the Revels," and which he printed in 1754, under the title of "An Essay upon the Revels," and which he printed in 1754. The Revels of 1660 is also said to be "Quoquyo," and which was written by Thomas Greene, but it may be doubted, whether it was this the comedian.

2 The Earl of Warwick, was a gentleman of very early years, and who was the only one of the companies which the Queen had not patronized. It is directed to be formed, consisting of a selection of the best actors among the variety of companies which were there exhibited, and the "sundry fees of taxes" were to be paid to his Lordship. The earl's name is given to the companies, and was printed in 1614, under the double title of "Greene's Tu Quoque, or the City Gallant," and which, it is believed, was written by Thomas Greene, but it may be doubted, whether it was this the comedian, for it is a very respectable copy of the early manuscript.

3 Upon this point we differ from the Rev. Mr. Halpin in his incriminating testimony was printed by the Church Society. Bishop Percy, in his "Essay upon the Revels," printed several passages from the "Essay upon the Revels," and which he printed in 1754, under the title of "An Essay upon the Revels," and which he printed in 1754.
The Life of William Shakespeare.

CHAPTER VI

John Shakespeare removed from his situation as alderman of Stratford, and its possible connexion with William Shakespeare's departure for London in the latter end of 1586. William Shakespeare a sharer in the Blackfriars Theatre in 1587. Complains against actors; two companies claimed for bringing Martin Mar-prelate on the stage. Certificate of the sharers in the Blackfriars. Shakespeare, in all probability, a good actor: our older dramatics often players. Shakespeare's earliest compositions for the stage. His "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece," probably written before he came to London.

In reference to the period when our great dramatist abandoned his native town for London, we think that sufficient importance can be attached to the fact, as to substantiate any important incident affecting the life of his father. John Shakespeare was deprived of his own as alderman of Stratford in the autumn of 1586: we say that he was deprived of his gown, not because any resolution precisely warranting these terms was come to by the rest of the corporation, but because it is quite evident that such was the fact, from the tenor of the entry in the records of the borough. On the 8th Sept. 1586, the following memorandum was entered in the register by the town clerk:

At this hall William Smythe and Richard Courte are chosen to be Wardens of the Town of John Wheler, and John Shakespeare; for that Mr. Wheler doth desyer to be put out of the company, and Mr. Shakespeare doth not come to the hallies, when they be warned, nor hath done of a long time.

According to this note, it was Wheler's wish to be removed from his situation of alderman, and had such also been the desire of John Shakespeare, we should, no doubt, have been told so; therefore, we must presume that he was not a consenting, or at all events not a willing party to this proceeding; but there is no doubt, as Malone ascertained from an inspection of the ancient books of the borough, that he had ceased to attend the hallies, when they were "warned" or summoned, from the year 1579 downwards. This date of 1579 is the more important, although Malone was not aware of the fact, because it was the same year in which John Shakespeare was so distressed for money, that he disposed of his wife's small property in Stratford for 4l.

We have thus additional reasons for thinking, that the unpropitious state of John Shakespeare's pecuniary circumstances had induced him to abstain from attending the ordinary meetings of the corporation, and finally led to his removal from the office of alderman. We may, therefore, with some degree of probability that this last event may have had with William Shakespeare's determination to quit Stratford cannot be known from any circumstances that have since come to light, but it will not fail to be remarked, that in point of date the events seem to have been coincident.

Malone "supposed" that our great poet left Stratford "about the year 1586 or 1587," but it seems to us more likely that the event happened in the former than in the latter year. His twins, Hamnet and Judith, were baptized, as we have shown, early in February, 1586, and his father did not cease to be an alderman until about a year and seven months afterwards. The fact, that his son had become a player, may have had something to do with the lower rank his brethren of the bench thought he ought to hold in the corporation; or the resolution of the son to abandon his home may have arisen out of the degradation of the father in his native town; but we cannot help thinking that the two circumstances were in some way connected, and that the period of the departure of William Shakespeare, to seek his fortune in a company of players in the metropolis, may be fixed in the latter end of 1586.

Nevertheless, we do not hear of him in London until three years afterwards, when we find him a sharer in the Blackfriars Theatre. It had been constructed (or, possibly, if not an entirely new building, some large edifice had been adapted to the purpose) upon part of the site of the dissolved monastery, because it was beyond the jurisdiction of the lord mayor and corporation of London, who had always enunciated decided hostility to dramatic representations. The undertaking seems to have been prosperous from the commencement; and in 1589 no fewer than sixteen performers were sharers in it, including, besides Shakespeare and Burbage, Thomas Greene of Stratford-upon-Avon, and Nicholas Todey, also a Warwickshire man: the association was probably thus numerous on account of the flourishing state of the concern, many being desirous to obtain an interest in its receipts. In 1589 some general complaints seem to have quotation from "A Jig," or humorous theatrical ballad, called "The Horse-load of Fools," found in the manuscript in which it has been handed down to us, is stated to have been written by Richard Tarlton, and in all probability was delivered by him before applauding audiences at the Theatre in Shorelind. Tarlton introduces to the spectator a number of puppets, accompanying the exhibition by psalter stanzae upon each, and he thus speaks of one of them:

"This foolo comes from the citizens; Nay, Priests doe not frowse; I know him as well as you By his livery gowne: Of rare horseman-fam'd mad.

"He is a foole by pretence And seruittude, he says; And hates all kinde of wisdome, But most of all in players: Of a veris obstinate famil."e.

"You have him in his livery gowne, But present he can Quantum for a mule or more. Or for an alderman; With a golde chaine in his familie.

"Being borne and bred for a foole, Why should he be wise. It would be like his master not to sit With his brethren of saze; Of a veris longe sardes familie."
been made, that improper measures were introduced into plays; and it is quite certain that "the children of Paul's," as the acting choir-boys of that cathedral were called, and the association of regular professional performers occupying the Theatre in Shoreditch at this date, had introduced Martin Mar-prelate upon their stages, in a manner that had given great concern to the Puritans. Tyndall, the municipally-accustomed, and having brought the matter to the knowledge of Lord Burghley, two bodies of players, those of the Lord Admiral and Lord Strange, (the latter by this time having advanced from tumbler to actors) had been summoned before the lord mayor, and ordered to desist from all performances. The silence of other associations would probably have been beneficial to that exhibiting a sort of certificate of their good conduct, asserting that they had been introduced into the theatre for matters of state and religion, and that no complaint of that kind had ever been preferred against them. This certificate passed into the hands of Lord Ellesmere, then attorney-general, and it has been preserved among his papers. We subjoin a copy of it in a note.

It seems rather strange that this testimonial should have come from the players themselves: we should rather have expected this certificate to be in the character of some disinterested parties; and we are to take it merely as a statement on their own authority, and possibly as a sort of challenge for inquiry. When they say that no complaint of the kind had ever been preferred against them, we are of course to understand that the assertion applies to a time previous to some general representation against theatres, which had been made in 1589, and in which the players were not themselves particularly excluded.

In this document we see the important fact, as regards the biography of Shakespeare, that in 1589 he was, not only an actor, but a sharer in the undertaking at Blackfriars; and whatever inference may be drawn from it, we find that his name, following eleven others, precedes those of Kempe, Johnson, Goodale, and Arunny. Kempe, we know, was the successor of Tarlton (who died in 1598) in comic parts, and must have been an actor of great value and eminence in the company; Johnson, as appears by the royal license, had been one of the theatrical servants of the Earl of Leicester in 1574: of Goodale we have no account, but he bore a Stratford name; and Arunny, though he had been instructed by Tarlton, was perhaps at that date quite young, and of low rank in the association. The situation in the latter part of the century may seem to show that, even in 1589, he was a person of considerable importance in relation to the success of the sharers in Blackfriars theatre. In November, 1589, he was in the middle of his twenty-sixth year, and in the full strength, if not in the highest maturity, of his mental and bodily powers.

We can have no hesitation in believing that he originally came to London, in order to obtain his livelihood by the stage, and that, instead of any other argument, as that he was "inclined naturally to poetry and acting," and the poverty of his father, and the difficulty of obtaining profitable employment in the country for the maintenance of his family, without other motives, may have induced him readily to give way to that inclination. Aubrey, who had probably taken due means to inform himself, adds, that "he did act exceedingly well," and we are convinced that the opinion, that he was a very active and popular performer, and that Shakes-peare was a very moderate performer, is erroneous. It seems likely that for two or three years he employed himself chiefly in the more active duties of the profession he had chosen; and Peele, who was a very practised and popular play-wright, considerably older than Shakespeare, was a member of the company, without saying anything of Winters, regarding whom we know nothing but that at a subsequent time he had become a sharer in the management of the company of the Lord Chamberlain's players, Shakespeare's services as a dramatist may not materially have interfered with his exertions as an actor; but afterwards, when Peele had joined a rival establishment, he may have been much more frequently called upon to employ his pen, and then his value in that department becoming clearly understood, he was less frequently a performer.

Out of the sixteen sharers of which the company he became a member, we are acquainted with that of Mr. Thomas More," (Harl. Coll., No. 7385) which, we may conjecture, was licensed for the stage before 1592.

"The first title-page related in a collection of old playhouse books," of which the earliest extant impression is in 1611, but they were no doubt collected and published very soon after the death of Tarlton in 1589.

When the Rev. Mr. Dyce published his edition of Peele's Works, he was not aware that there was any impression of that author's "Tale of Troy," in 1604, as well as in 1599, containing such variations as show that it must have been corrected and augmented by Peele after its first appearance. The impression of 1604 is the most delightful volume, perhaps, ever printed, not exceeding an inch and a half high by an inch wide, with the following title:—"The Tale of Troy. By G. Peele, M. of Artes in Oxford. Printed by A. H. for T. B., and are to be sold at the sign of the Crown in Newgate Street."

It is curious that the nature of the changes and additions made by Peele after the original publication in the edition of 1604 the poem thus opens:—

"In that world's consummated part, whose waves yet swell With everlasting showers of tears that fell, In joy and sorrow kinds and beds of blood That long was shed, Troy, Neptune's city, stood, Gorgeously built, like to the house of Fame, Or court of Jove, as some describe the same," &c.

The four lines which commence the second page of Mr. Dyce's edition are thus extended in the copy of 1604:

"His court presenting to our human eyes An image of the kind of one, at least, Where ladies troop'd in rich diuagoues dress, Glistening like stars of pure immortal fire. Thus happy, Prian, did thou live of yore, That to thy fortune heavens could add no more."

Peele was dead in 1596, and it is likely that there were one or more intervening impressions of "The Tale of Troy," between 1580 and 1584.
longed to consist in 1589, (besides the usual proportion of liked men, who only took inferior characters) there would be more than a sufficient num ber for the representation of most plays, without the assistance of Shake skpeare. He was, doubtless, soon busily and profitably engaged as a dramatist; and this remark on the raraeness of his appearance on the stage will of course apply more strongly in his after life, when he produced one or more dramas every year.

His instructions to the players in "Hamlet," have often been noticed. He was admirably acquainted with the theory of the art, and if, as Rowe as serts, he only took the short part of the Ghost in this tragedy, we are to recollect that even if he had considered himself competent to it, the study of such a character as Hamlet, (the longest on the stage as it is now acted, and still longer as it was originally written) must have consumed more time than he could well afford to bestow on it, especially when we call to mind that there was a member of the company who had hitherto represented most of the heroes, and whose excellence was as undoubted, as his popularity was extraordinary. To Richard Burbage was therefore assigned the arduous character of the Prince, while the author took the brief, but important part of the Ghost, which required person, deportment, judgment, and voice, with a delivery distinct, solemn, and impressive. All the elements were employed for the due performance of "the buried majesty of Denmark." It may be observed, in passing, that at the period of our drama, such as it existed in the hands of Shakespeare's immediate predecessors, authors were most commonly actors also. Such was the case with Greene, Marlowe, Lodge, Peele, probably Nash, Munday, Wilson, and others: the same practice prevailed with some of their successors, Ben Jonson, Heywood, Webster, Field, &c.; but at a somewhat later date, dramaticists do not usually appear to have trodden the stage. We have no hint that Dekker, Chapman, or Marston, though contemporary with Ben Jonson, were actors; and Massinger, Beaumont, Fletcher, Middleton, Daborne, and Shirley, who may be said to have followed them, as far as we now know, never had anything to do with the performance of their own dramas, or of those of other poets. In their day the two departments of author and actor seem to have been generally distinct, while the condition was certainly the same some years anterior to the demise of Elizabeth.

It is impossible to determine, almost impossible to guess, what Shakespeare had or had not written in 1589. That he had chiefly employed his pen in the revival, alteration, and improvement of existing dramas we are strongly disposed to believe, but that he had not ventured upon original composition it would be much too bold to assert. "The Companions of Errors," was taken to be one of the pieces, which, having been first written, by an inferior dramatist, was heightened and amended by Shakespeare, perhaps about the date of which we are now speaking, and "Love's Labour's Lost," or "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," may have been original compositions brought upon the stage prior to 1590. We also consider it more than probable that "Titus Andronicus" belongs even to an earlier period; but we feel satisfied, that although Shakespeare had by this time given to the productions of poems employed for the stage of his rivals, he could not have written any of his greater works until some years afterwards. With regard to productions unconnected with the stage, there are several pieces among his scattered poems, and some of his sonnets, that indisputably belong to an earlier part of his life. A young man, so gifted, would not, and could not, wait until he was six or twenty before he made considerable and most successful attempts at poetical composition; and it is morally certain that "Venus and Adonis," was in being.

For in a deadly mortal strife,
Striving to stop the breath.

"Of one who was his rival foe,
With his own dagger's blaze,
He groaned, and his hand met first
Pierc't through the eye and bristle.

Which pretty exactly accords with the tradition of the mode in which he came to his end, in a scuffle with a person of the name of Archer: the register of his death at St. Nicholas, Deptford, ascertains the date of his death in "1st June, 1613, of a consumptive sickness, called Archer." He was just dead when Peck wrote his "Honour of the Garter," in 1593, and there spoke of him as "unhappy in his end," and dying for "the want of a son of such noble quality in his family;" Philarist, in Beaumont and Fletcher's play of that name; Amintor, in their "Maid's Tragedy."—See "The Aloney Papers," printed by the Hain brothers, in a subsequent page we have inserted the whole passage relating to his characters from the Epitaph on Burbage. Mr. Rawstorne, in his Life of Shakespeare, prefixed to the edition, in one volume, 1818, was, we believe, the first to remark upon the almost absolute necessity of having a good, if not a great actor, for the part of the Ghost: Shakespeare's name stands first among the players of "Every Man in His Humour," and fifth among those of "Sonnets." 4

4 From a Ms. Epitaph upon Burbage, (who died in 1619,) sold among the books of the late Mr. Heber, we find that he was the original Hamlet, Romeo, Prince Henry, Henry V, Richard III, Macbeth, Brutus, Coriolanus, Shylock, Lear, Pericles, and Othello, in Shakespeare's Plays: in those of other dramatists he was Jeronimo, in Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy," Antonio, in Marston's "Antonio and Mellida," and in Massinger's "The Jew of Malta." The poet of "beauties;" Philaster, in Beaumont and Fletcher's play of that name; Amintor, in their "Maid's Tragedy."—See "The Aloney Papers," printed by the Hain brothers, in a subsequent page we have inserted the whole passage relating to his characters from the Epitaph on Burbage. Mr. Rawstorne, in his Life of Shakespeare, prefixed to the edition, in one volume, 1818, was, we believe, the first to remark upon the almost absolute necessity of having a good, if not a great actor, for the part of the Ghost: Shakespeare's name stands first among the players of "Every Man in His Humour," and fifth among those of "Sonnets." 4

5 It seems from an obscure ballad upon Marlowe's death, (handed down to us in MS., and quoted in "New Particulars regarding the Works of Shakespeare," vo. 1, 1836,) that he had broken his leg while acting at the Curtain Theatre, which was considered a judgment upon him for his irreligious and lawless life.

"Both day and night would he blaspheme,
And day and night would he swear,
As if it was a dream,
Not ending in despair.

A poet he was of repute,
And wroth full many a play;
Now getting to a sudden suit,
Now begging by the way.

He had also a player beene
Upon the Curtain stage.
But setting up in the second scene,
When in his early age.

He was a fellow to all those
That did God's laws reject;
Consenting with the Chaste man's foes,
And men of ill aspect." 5

The ballad consists of twenty-four similar stanzas of Marlowe's death, the author thus writes:

"His lust was lawlees in his life,
And brought about his death.
exhibited the wantonness of lawless passion in "Venus and Adonis," he followed it by the exaltation of matronly chastity in "Lucrece," and there is, we think, nothing in the latter poem which a young man of one or two and twenty, so endowed, might not have written. Neither is it at all impossible that he had done something in connexion with the stage while he was yet resident in his native town, and before he had made up his mind to quit it. If his "dedication for poetry and acting," to repeat Aubrey's words, were so strong, it may have been that he had written and acted. He may have contributed temporary prologues or epilogues, and without supposing him yet to have possessed any extraordinary art as a dramatist—only to be acquired by practice,—he may have inserted speeches and occasional passages in older plays: he may even have assisted some of the companies in getting up, and performing the dramas they represented in or near Stratford. We own that this conjecture appears to us at least plausible, and the Lord Chamberlain's servants (known as the Earl of Leicester's players until 1587) may have experienced his utility in both departments, and may have held out strong inducements to so promising a novice to continue his assistance by accompanying them to London.

What we have here said seems a natural and easy way of accounting for Shakespeare's station as a sharer at the Blackfriars, or as a dramatist in London, to say nothing of the problem to have finally adopted the profession of an actor and to have come to London for the purpose of pursuing it.

CHAPTER VII.

The earliest allusion to Shakespeare in Spenser's " Tears of the Muses," 1591. Proofs of its applicability—What Shakespeare had probably by this date written—Edmund Spenser of Kingsbury, Warwickshire. No other dramatist of the time merited the character given by Spenser. Greene, Kyd, Peele, and others, had not yet risen to attempt it, and we subjoin the first of Spenser's " Tears of the Muses," a poem printed in 1591.

We come now to the earliest known allusion to Shakespeare as a dramatist; and although his surname is not given, we apprehend that there can be no hesitation in applying what is said to him; it is contained in Spenser's "Tears of the Muses," a poem printed in 1591. The application of the passage to Shakespeare has been much contested, but the fraudulent reprint, which also contains various pieces to which it is known, Beaumont had no pretensions. To afford the better means of comparison, and as we know of only one copy of the edition of 1602, we subjoin the title-page prefixed to it: "Salvator mundi: or, a discourse of the true state and inward meaning of Spenser's Tears of the Muses. Imprinted at London for John Hodgetts, &c. 1602." It is almost to be wondered that the getter up of this piece of information did not support it by reference to Shakespeare's obvious knowledge of horses and horsemanship, displayed in so many parts of his works. The description of the horse in "Venus and Adonis," which may be compared with the handling of the animal in "Hamlet," the biographer of the horse-borne anecdote ought to have added, that Shakespeare had the minute and accurate acquaintanceship with the subject from his early observation of the skill of the English nobility and gentility, after they had remonstrated at the play-house door—'

"chiefly skill in riding." The following lines were once said to have been added by Spenser:

"Proper to gentle blood."—Spenser's F. Q. b. ii. c. 4.

We have already stated that although in 1595 only one or named company performed in Stratford, in the very next year there are signs of the Blackfriars company having (in addition to a minor act) five companies were entertained in the borough one of these consisted of the players of the Earl of Leicester, to whom the Blackfriars theatre belonged; and it is very possible that Shakespeare had at that date exhibited his fellow-townsmen in his new professional capacity. Before this time his performances at Stratford may have been merely of an amateur description. It is, at all events, a striking circumstance, that in 1596 only one company performed, and that in 1597 such extraordinary encouragement was given to theatre in London.
difficulty in our mind is, how the lines are to be explained by reference to any other dramatist of the time, even supposing, as we have supposed and believe, that our great poet was at this period only rising into notice as a writer for the stage. We will first quote the lines, literatim as they stand in the edition of 1591, and afterwards say something of the claims of others to the distinction they confer.

"And he the man, whom Nature selfe had made To mock her selfe, and Truth to imitate, With klnudly counter under Mimick shade, Our pleasant Willy, ah ! is dead of late; With whom all joy and joly merriment Is also dealed, and in dolour drest."

"In head thereof scolling Scorrileitie, And scornfull Follie with contempt is crept, Rolling in rynes of shamlcss ribaudrie, Without regard or due Decorum kept: Each idle wit at will presumes to make, And doth the Learner's task upon him take.

"But that same gentle Spirit, from whose pen Large Arreats of mirth and sweete Nectar flowe, Scorning the boldnes of such base-born men, Which dare their follies forth so rashlie throwe, Doth rather choose to sit in idle Cell, Than so himselfe to mockeye to sell."

The most striking of these lines, with reference to our present inquiry, is, "Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late;" and hence, if it stood alone, we might infer that Willy, whoever he might be, was actually dead; but the latter part of the third stanza we have quoted shows us in what sense the word "dead" is to be understood: Willy was "dead" as far as regarded the admirable dramatic talents he had already displayed, which had enabled him, even before 1591, to outstrip all living rivalry, and to afford the most certain indications that still extant things Spenser saw he would accomplish: he was "dead," because he

"Doth rather choose to sit in idle Cell, Than so himselfe to mockeye to sell."

It is to be borne in mind that these stanzas, and six others, are put into the mouth of Thalia, whose lamentations on the degeneracy of the stage, especially in comedy, follows those of Caliope and Melpomene. Rowe, under the impression that the whole passage referred to Shakespeare, introduced it into his "Life," in his first edition of 1709, but silently withdrew it in his second edition of 1714; his reason, perhaps, was that he did not see how, before 1591, Shakespeare could have shown that he merited the character given of him and his productions—

"And he the man, whom Nature selfe had made To mock her selfe, and Truth to imitate."

Spenser knew what the object of his epology was capable of doing, as well, perhaps, as what he had done; and we have established that more than a year before the publication of these lines, Shakespeare had risen to be a distinguished member of the Lord Chamberlain's company, and a sharer in the undertakings at the Blackfriars. Although we feel assured that he had not composed any of his greatest works before 1591, he may have done much, besides what has come down to us, amply to warrant Spenser in applauding him beyond all his theatrical contemporaries. His earliest printed plays, "Romeo and Juliet," "Richard I.," and "Richard III.," bear date in 1597; but it is indisputable that he had at that time written considerably more, and part of what he had so written is contained in the quartos of 1598, never having made his appearance in any earlier form. When Ben Jonson published the large volume of his "Works" in 1616, he excluded several comedies in which he had been aided by other poets, and re-wrote part of "Sejanus," because, as is supposed, Shakespeare, (who performed in it, and whom Jonson terms a "happy genius," had assisted him in the composition of the tragedy as it was originally acted. The player-editors of the re-edition of Shakespeare's "Comedies, Tragedies, and Histories," in 1623, may have thought it right to pursue the same course excepting in the case of the three parts of "Henry VI.:

the poet, or poets, who had contributed to these histories (perhaps Marlowe and Greene) had been then dead thirty years; but with respect to other pieces, persons still living, whether authors or booksellers, might have joint claims upon them, and hence their exclusion.

We only put this as possible circumstance; but we are persuaded that Shakespeare, early in his theatrical life, must have written much, in the way of revivals, alterations, or joint productions with other poets, which has been forever lost. We here, as before, conclude that none of his greatest, original dramatic productions had come from his pen; but if in 1591 he had only brought out "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" and "Love's Labour's Lost," they are so infinitely superior to the best works of his predecessors, that the justice of the tribute paid by Spenser to his genius would at once be admitted.

At all events, if before 1591 he had not accommodated, by any means, all that he was capable of, he had given the clearest indications of high genius, abundantly sufficient to justify the anticipation of Spenser, that he was a man a passage which in itself admirably comprises, and compresses nearly all the excellences of which dramatic poetry is susceptible—the mockery of nature, and the imitation of truth.

Another point not hitherto noticed, because not hitherto known, is, that there is some little ground for thinking that Spenser, if not a Warwickshire man, was at one time resident in Warwickshire, and later in life he may have become associated with Shakespeare. His birth had been naturally placed in 1552, and on the authority of some lines in his "Prothalamion" it has been supposed that he was born in London: East Smithfield, near the Tower, has also been fixed upon as the part of the town where he first drew breath; but the parish registers in that neighbourhood have been searched in vain for a record of the event.

An Edmund Spenser unquestionably dwelt at Kingsbury, in Warwickshire, in 1566, which was the appearance year of the author of "The Faerie Queene" went to Cambridge, and elsewhere. We believe that he was concerned in "The Yorkist Tragedy," and that he may have contributed some parts of "Arne of Peverham" but in spite of the ingenuous letter, published at Edinburgh in 1855, we do not think that he aided Fletcher in writing "The Two Noble Kinsmen," and there is not a single passage in "The Birth of Merlin" which is worthy of his most careless notice.

Of "The first part of Sir John Oldcastle," we have elsewhere spoken; and several other supposititious dramas in the folio of 1623, which certainly would have done little credit to Shakespeare's genius, if not actually written by him, have been written just a century before the date of this poem; and we may be permitted to express a wish that Shakespeare, instead of "The Faerie Queene," could discover some entry of the kind. See his "Supplemental Apology," p. 22. Subsequent investigations, instituted with reference to this question, have led to the same result. Odysseus is responsible for the statement.
was admitted a sizer at Rembroke College. The fact that Edmund Spenser (a rather unusual combination of names!) was an inhabitant of Kingsbury in 1569 is established by the muster-book of Warwickshire, preserved in the state-papers, on which he has been registered, but it does not give the ages of the parties. This Edmund Spenser may possibly have been the father of the poet, (whose Christian name is no where recorded) and if it were the one or the other, it seems to afford a link of connexion, however slight, between Spenser and Shakespeare, of which we have had no previous knowledge. Spenser was at least eleven years older than Shakespeare, but their early residence in Warwickshire points the possibility. As regards character, however, he labours the contrary position with great pertinacity and considerable ingenuity, and it is extraordinary how a man of much reading, and of sound judgment upon many points of literary discussion, could impose upon himself and be led so far from the truth, by the desire to establish a novelty. At all events, he might have contented himself with an endeavour to prove the negative as regards Shakespeare, without going the strange length of attempting to make out the affirmative as regards Lyly.

We do not for an instant admit the right of any of Shakespeare's predecessors or contemporaries to the tribute of Spenser; but Malone might have made out a case for any of them with more plausibility than for Lyly. Greene was a writer of fertile fancy, but choked and smothered by the overlaying of scholastic learning; Kyd was a man of strong natural parts, and a composer of vigorous lines; Lodge was a poet of genius, though not in the department of the drama; Peele had a elegant mind, and was a smooth and agreeable versifier; while Marlowe was gifted with a soaring and a daring spirit, though unchecked by a well-regulated taste; but all had more nature in their dramas than Lyly, who generally chose classical or mythological subjects, and dealt with those subjects with a wearisome monody of style, with thoughts quaint, concealed, and violent, and with an utter absence of force and distinctness in his characterization.

It is not necessary to enter farther into this part of the question, because, we think, it is now established that Spenser's lines might apply to Shakespeare as regards the date of their publication, and indisputably applied with most felicitous exactness to the works he has left behind him.

With regard to the lines which state, that 'Willy

‘Doth rather choose to sit in idle Cell,

Than so himselfe to mockerie to sell,'

we have already shown that in 1589 there must have been some compulsory cessation of theatrical performances, which affected not only offending, but unpolluting companies: hence the certificate, or more properly remonstrance, of the sixteen sharers in the Blackfriars. The choir-boys of Paul were silenced, and their "masters of state and religion" on their stage, when they introduced Martin Mar-priestle into one of their dramas; and the players of the Lord Admiral and Lord Strange were prohibited from acting, as far as we can learn, on a similar ground. The interdiction of performances by the children of Paul's was persevered in for about ten years; and although the public companies (after the completion of some inquires by commissioners specially appointed) were allowed again to follow their vocation, there can be no doubt that there was a temporary suspension of all theatrical exhibitions in London.

This suspension commenced a short time before Spenser wrote his "Tears of the Muses," in which he notices the silence of Shakespeare.

epigram, attributed to Spenser, may have been occasioned by the obstruction by the Lord Treasurer of some additional proof of the date of Shakespeare's death for the use of Malone. First published the anecdote in his "Worth'm," 1592; but sixty years earlier, and within a very short time after the death of Shakespeare, the"Reflected Myth," which we have cited, for we found it not, was written by: he does not name the young man, it is true, but perhaps not quite so young as has been imagined.

The authorship has been already even to speculate where Spenser was at school—possibly at Kingsbury. Dryton was also a Warwickshire man.

If differences of opinion, founded upon discrepancies of contemporaneous or nearly contemporaneous representations, have prevailed respecting the extreme poverty of Spenser at the time of his death, this doubt is very far removed; and a pension of 30s. (one third of our present money) from the royal bounty, which probably he received to the last. At the same time we think there is much plausibility in the story that Lord Burghley stood in the way of some special pecuniary gift from Elizabeth. The Rev. H. J. Todd disbelieves it, and in his "Life of Shakespeare" calls it "a calumny," on the foundation of the pension, without considering, perhaps, that, the extreme to which he has gone in his "Tears of the Muses." If Malone had wished to point out a dramatist of that day to whom the words of Spenser could by no possibility apply, he could not have made a better choice than William Lyly. However, he labours the contrary position with great pertinacity and considerable ingenuity, and it is extraordinary how a man of much reading, and of sound judgment upon many points of literary discussion, could impose upon himself and be led so far from the truth, by the desire to establish a novelty. At all events, he might have contented himself with an endeavour to prove the negative as regards Shakespeare, without going the strange length of attempting to make out the affirmative as regards Lyly.

We do not for an instant admit the right of any of Shakespeare's predecessors or contemporaries to the tribute of Spenser; but Malone might have made out a case for any of them with more plausibility than for Lyly. Greene was a writer of fertile fancy, but choked and smothered by the overlaying of scholastic learning; Kyd was a man of strong natural parts, and a composer of vigorous lines; Lodge was a poet of genius, though not in the department of the drama; Peele had an elegant mind, and was a smooth and agreeable versifier; while Marlowe was gifted with a soaring and a daring spirit, though unchecked by a well-regulated taste; but all had more nature in their dramas than Lyly, who generally chose classical or mythological subjects, and dealt with those subjects with a wearisome monody of style, with thoughts quaint, concealed, and violent, and with an utter absence of force and distinctness in his characterization.

It is not necessary to enter farther into this part of the question, because, we think, it is now established that Spenser's lines might apply to Shakespeare as regards the date of their publication, and indisputably applied with most felicitous exactness to the works he has left behind him. With regard to the lines which state, that 'Willy

Than so himselfe to mockerie to sell,'

we have already shown that in 1589 there must have been some compulsory cessation of theatrical performances, which affected not only offending, but unpolluting companies: hence the certificate, or more properly remonstrance, of the sixteen sharers in the Blackfriars. The choir-boys of Paul were silenced, and their "masters of state and religion" on their stage, when they introduced Martin Mar-priestle into one of their dramas; and the players of the Lord Admiral and Lord Strange were prohibited from acting, as far as we can learn, on a similar ground. The interdiction of performances by the children of Paul's was persevered in for about ten years; and although the public companies (after the completion of some inquires by commissioners specially appointed) were allowed again to follow their vocation, there can be no doubt that there was a temporary suspension of all theatrical exhibitions in London.

We have no means of ascertaining how long the order, inhibiting theatrical performances generally, was persevered in; but the plague broke out in London in 1592, and in the autumn of the year, when the number of deaths was greatest, "the Queen's players," in their progress round the country, whether they wandered when thus prevented from acting in the metropolis, performed at Chesterton, near Cambridge, to the great annoyance of the heads of the university.

It was at this juncture, probably, if indeed he ever were in that country, that Shakespeare visited Italy. Mr. C. Armitage Brown, in his very clever, and in many respects original work, "Shakespeare's Autobiographical Poems," has maintained the affirmative with great confidence, and has brought all one view the internal evidence afforded by the "Twelfth Night," and his "Droll Comedies." External evidence there is none, since not even a tradition of such a visit has descended to us. We own that the internal evidence, in our estimation, is by no means as strong as it appeared to Mr. Brown, who has evinced great ingenuity and ability in the conduct of his case, and has made as much as possible of his proofs. He dwells, among other things, upon the fact, that there were no contemporaneous translations of the truth of the events in "Twelfth Night." But these evidence are founded; but Shakespeare may have understood as much Italian as answered his purpose without having gone to Venice. For the same reason we lay no stress upon the recently-discovered fact, (not known when Mr. Brown wrote) that Shakespeare constructed his "Twelfth Night" with the aid of one or two Italian comedies; they may have found their way into England, and he may have read them in the original language. That Shakespeare was capable of translating with so much ease the surnames, our supposed, we are morally certain; but we think that if he had travelled to Venice, Verona, or Florence, we should have had more distinct and positive testimony of the fact in his works than can be adduced from them.

Other authors of the time have left such evidence behind them as cannot be disputed. Lyly tells us so distinctly in more than one of his pieces, and Rich informs us that he became acquainted with foreign travel, and it extended itself to the other side of the Alps: Daniel goes the length of letting us know where certain of his sonnets were composed; Lodge wrote some of his tracts abroad: Nash gives us the places where he met particular persons; and his friend Greene admits his obligations to Italy and Spain, whither he had travelled early in life in pursuit of letters. In truth, at that period and afterwards, there seems to have been a positive rage for foreign travel, and it extended itself to foreign actors, as well as to poets; for we know that William Kempe was in Rome in 1601, during the interval between the time when, for some unexplained reason, he quitted the company of the Lord Chamberlain's players, and joined that of the Lord Admiral. Although we do not believe that Shakespeare ever was in Italy, we admit that we are without evidence to prove a negative; and he may have gone there without having left behind him any distinct record of the fact. At the date to which we are now advertizing he might certainly have had a convenient opportunity for doing so, in consequence of the temporary prohibition of dramatic performances in London.

Death of Robert Greene in 1592, and publication of his "Greatworth of Wit," by H. Chettle. Greene's address to Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele, and his envious mention of Shakespeare's office to Chettle, are at Chettle's disposal; the apology of the latter in his "Kind-heart's Dream." The character of Shakespeare there given. Second allusion by Spenser to Shakespeare in "Colin Clout's come home again," 1594. The "gentle Shakespeare." Change in the office of his plays 1591 and 1594: his "Richard II," and "Richard III."
duce Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele to cease to write for the stage; and, in the course of his exhortation, Greene bitterly inveighs against "an upstart crow," who had availed himself of the dramatic labours of others, who imagined himself able to write as good blank verse as the acknowledged poet of his contemporaries, who was a Johannes Factotum, and who, in his own opinion, was "the only Shake-scene in a country." All this is clearly levelled at Shakespeare, under the purposely-perverted name of 'Shake-scene,' and the words, 'Tiger's heart wrapp'd in a player's hide," are a parody upon a line in a historical play, (most likely by Greene) "O, tiger's heart wrapp'd in a woman's hide," from which Shakespeare had been permitted to make slight alterations.

From hence it is evident that Shakespeare, near the end of 1592, had established such a reputation, and was so important a rival of the dramatists, who, until he came forward, had kept undisputed possession of the stage, as to excite the envy and enmity of Greene, even during his last and fatal illness. It also, we think, establishes another point not hitherto adverted to, viz. that our great poet possessed such variety of talent, that, for the purposes of the company of which he was a member, he could do anything that he might be called upon to perform: he was the Johannes Factotum of the association: he was an actor, and he was a writer of original plays, an adapter and imposer of those already in existence, (some of them by Greene, Marlowe, Lodge, or Peele) and no doubt he contributed prologues or epilogues, and inserted scenes, speeches or passages on any temporary subject, that could be of assistance to the Lord Chamberlain's servants required few other contributions from rival dramatists: Shakespeare was the Johannes Factotum who could turn his hand to any thing connected with his profession, and who, in all probability, had thrown men like Greene, Lodge, and Peele, and even Marlowe himself, into the shade. In our view, therefore, the quotation we have made from the "Groatworth of Wit," previously so often quoted from it, is natural and proper. That Shakespeare should take offence at this gross and public attack: that he did there is no doubt, for we are told so by Chettle himself, the avowed editor of the "Groatworth of Wit:" he does not indeed mention Shakespeare, but he designates him so intelligibly that there is no room for dispute. Marlowe, also, and, without reason, complained of the manner in which Greene had spoken of him in the same work, but to him Chettle made no apology, while to Shakespeare he offered all the amendments in his power.

His apology to Shakespeare is contained in a tract called "Kind-heart's Dream," which appeared without date, probably on 3 September, 1592, and Chettle tells us in "Kind-heart's Dream," that Greene did, "I about three months" before, it is certain that "Kind-heart's Dream" came out prior to the end of 1592, as we now calculate the year, and about three months before it expired, according to the reckoning of that period. The whole passage relating to Marlowe and Shakespeare is highly interesting, and we therefore extract it entire.

"About three months since died M. Robert Greene, leaving many papers in sundry book-sellers' hands: among others his Greatworth of Wit, in which a letter, written to divers play-makers, is offensively by one or two of them taken: and because on the dead they cannot be avenged, they wilfully forge in their conceits a living author, and after tossit to it and fro, no remedy but it must light on me. How I have, all but as Greene expected, misused the published bitter inveighing against scholars, it hath been very well known: and how in that I dealt, I can sufficiently prove. With neither of them, that take offence, was I acquainted: and with one of them [Marlowe] I could not if I never be a no. Shakespeare whom at that time I did not so much spare, as since I wish I had, for that as I have moderated the heat of living writers, and might have used my own discretion (especially in such a case, the author being dead) that I did not I am as sure as if it was in his own hand, and had not abridged himself; have seen his demeanour no less civil, than he excellent in the quality he professes: besides divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honesty, and in the face of his grace in being his in the first. [Marlowe] whose learning I reverence, and at the persuas of Greene's book struck out what then in conscience I thought I in some dissembled writ, or had it been true, yet to publish it was intolerable, him I would wish to use no worse than I deserve."

The accusation of Greene against Marlowe had reference to the freedom of his religious opinions, of which it is not necessary here to say more: the attack upon Shakespeare we have already inserted and observed upon. In Chettle's apology to the latter, one of the most noticeable points is the tribute he pays to our great dramatist's abilities as an actor: his demeanour no less civil, than he excellent in the quality he professes: the word "quality" was applied, at that date, peculiarly and technically to acting, and the "quality," Shakespeare "professed" was that of an actor.

"His facions grace in writing," is separately adverted to, and admitted, while "his uprightness of dealing" is attested, not only by Chettle's own experience, but by the evidence of others. His "ship" "was a vessel," and Shakespeare for the ensuing assault of Greene shows most decisively the high opinion entertained of him, towards the close of 1592, as an author, an actor, and a man.

We have already inserted Spenser's warm, but not less judicious and well-merited, eulogium of Shakespeare in 1591, when in his " Tears of the Muses" he addresses him as Willy, and designates him "that same gentle spirit, from whose pen Large streames of honnie and sweete nectar flow." If we were to trust printed dates, it would seem that in the same year the author of "The Faerie Queene" gave another proof of his admiration of our great dramatist, when he allude to a passage in "Colin Clout's come home again," which was published with a dedication dated 27th December, 1591; but Malone proved, beyond all cavil, that for 1591 we ought to read 1594, the printer having made an extraordinary blunder. In the poem (after the author has spoken of many living and dead dramatists by their names, as Alabaster and Daniel, and others by fictitious and fanciful appellations) he inserts these lines:

- Malone, with a good deal of research and patience, goes over all the pseudo-names in "Colin Clout: come home again," applying each to poets of the time; but how uncertain and unsatisfactory any attempt of the kind must necessarily he may be illustrated in a single instance. Malone refers the following lines to Arthur rackielding:
The LIFE of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

"And there, though last not least, is Eton; A gentle shepherd may no where be found, Whose Muse, full of high thought's invention, Doth, like himself, heroically sound."

Malone takes unnecessary pains to establish that this passage applies to Shakespeare, although he pertinaciously denied that "our pleasant Willy" of "The Tears of the Muses" was intended for him. We have no doubt on either point; and it is singular, that it should never have struck Malone that the same epithet is given in both cases to the person addressed, and that epithet one which, at a subsequent date, almost constantly accompanied the name of Shakespeare, in "The Tears of the Muses" he is called a 'gentle spirit,' and in "Colin Clout's come home again" we are told that, "A gentle shepherd may no where be found."

In the same feeling Ben Jonson calls him "my gentle Shakespeare," in the noble copy of verses prefixed to the folio of 1623, so that ere long the term became peculiarly applied to our great and amiable dramatist. This coincidence of expression is another circumstance to establish that Spenser, certainly had Shakespeare in his mind when he wrote his "Tears of the Muses" in 1591, and his "Colin Clout's come home again" in 1594. In the latter instance the whole description is nearly as appropriate as in the earlier, with the addition of a line, which has a clear and obvious reference to the patronymic of our poet: his Muse, says Spenser, "Doth, like himself, heroically sound."

These words alone may be taken to show, that between 1591 and 1594 Shakespeare had somewhat changed the character of his compositions: Spenser having applauded him, in his "Tears of the Muses," for unrivalled talents in comedy, (a department of the drama to which Shakespeare had, perhaps, at that date entirely, though not exclusively, devoted himself) in his "Colin Clout" spoke of the "high thought's invention," which then filled Shakespeare's muse, and made him sound as "heroically" as his name. Of his genius, in a loftier strain of poetry than belonged to comedy, our great dramatist, by the year 1594, must have given some remarkable and undeniable proofs. In 1591 he had perhaps written his "Love's Labour's Lost," and "Two Gentlemen of Verona," but in 1593 he had, no doubt, presented to the world some of his great historical plays, his "Richard II." and "Richard III.," both of which, as before remarked, together with "Romeo and Juliet," came from the press in 1597, though the last in a very mangled, imperfect, and unauthentic state. One circumstance may be mentioned, as leading to the belief that "Richard III." was brought out in 1594, viz. that in that year an impression of "The True Tragedy of Richard the Third," (an earlier play of Shakespeare?) was published, that it might not be bought under the notion that it was the new drama by the most popular poet of the day, then in a course of representation. It is most probable that "Richard II." had been composed before "Richard III.," and to either or both of them the lines, "Whose Muse, full of high thought's invention, Doth, like himself, heroically sound," will abundantly apply. The difference in the character of Spenser's tribute to Shakespeare in 1591 and 1594 was occasioned by the difference in the character of his productions.

The passage, in truth, applies to Thomas Churchyard, as he himself informs us in his "Pleasant Discourse of Court and War," 1596: he "tompains of neglect, and tells us that,�... / Who sang so long, until quite hoarse he grew." 1

The platform where all poets thrive, Save one whose voice to hoarse, they say; There is where all are laid bare, As children in a pageant play."

In the same way we might show that Malone was mistaken as to other poets he supposed alluded to by Spenser; but it would lead us too far out of our way. 2

Hence we see that Shakespeare took two names in his "Henry VIII." from persons who bore them in his native town. 3

1 In a passage we have already extracted from Ben Jonson's "Discovers," he mentions Shakespeare's "gentle expressions?" but he is there perhaps referring to his style of composition.

2 We have to express our best thanks to Mr. Lemon for directing our attention to this manuscript, and for supplying us with an analysis of its contents.

3 The first certificate has not been found in the State Paper Office, the most diligent search.

4 Hence we see that Shakespeare took two names in his "Henry VIII." from persons who bore them in his native town.
we are to recollect that it could not be served on Sunday, so that apprehension of that kind need not have kept him away from church on the Sabbath. Neither was it likely that his son, who was at this date profitably employed in London as an actor and author, and who three years before was a sharer in the Blackfriars theatre, would have allowed his father to continue so distressed for money, as not to be able to attend the usual place of divine worship. Therefore, it can be inferred by John Shakespeare's continued interest in pecuniary difficulties at the time his son William quitte Stratford, we altogether reject the notion that his son had permitted his father to live in comparative want, while he himself possessed more than competence.

"Age, sickness, and impotency of body," may indeed have kept John Shakespeare from church, but upon this point we have no information beyond the fact, that if he were born, as Malone supposed, in 1530, he was at this date only sixty-two.

With regard to his religious opinions, it is certain that after he became alderman of Stratford, on 4th July 1565, he must have taken the usual oath required from all protestants; but, according to the records of the borough, it was not administered to him until the 12th September following his election. This trilling circumstance perhaps has the more appeared, as it escape to some of the corporate officers at one court, and to swear in them at the next. So far John Shakespeare may have conformed to the requirements of the law, but it is still possible that he may not have adopted all the new protestant tenets, or that having adopted them, like various other conscientious men, he saw reason afterwards to return to the faith he had abandoned. We have no evidence on this point as regards him, that we are aware of, as regards a person of the name of Thomas Greene, (who, although it seems very unlikely, may have been the same man who was an actor in the company to which Shakespeare belonged, and who was a co-sharer in the Blackfriars Theatre, in 1599) who is described in the certificate of the commissioners as then of a different parish, and who, it is added, had confessed that he had been "reconciled to the Romish religion." The memorandum in these terms—

"It is here to be remembered that one Thomas Greene, of this parish, herefore presented and indicted for a recusant, hath confessed to Mr. Eobt. Burgoyn, one of the commissioners for this service, that an out Preest reconcilied him to the Romish religion, while he was prisoner in Worcestur gaol. This Greene hath not ever since renounced his error.

On the same authority we learn that the wife of Thomas Greene was a "most wilfull recusant," and although we are by no means warranted in forming even an opinion on the question, whether Mary Shakespeare adhered to the ancient faith, it is indisputable, if we may rely upon the representation of the commissioners, that some of her family continued Roman Catholics. In the document under consideration it is stated, that Mrs. Mary Arden and her servant John Browne had been presented to the commissioners as

1 By an account of rents received by Thomas Rogers, Chamber- lord of Stratford, it appears that "John Shakespeare, the Shakespeare poet, having been baillif and head-alderman, was usually styled. Mr. Shakespeare, as we have before remarked. However, it is a confi- dent to be asserted, that the name of Shakespeare or the poet's family is that of Henry Fieldy or Field, whose goods Mr. John Shakes- ppeare was subsequently employed to value: they were therefore in all probability neighbours."

"Shakespeare and his Times," vol. I. p. 8. D. Drake seems to be of the opinion that John Shakespeare may have refrained from answering the corporation calls previous to 1594, on account of his religious opinions.

2 It has the following title:

"A True and perfect Inventory of the Goods and Cattle, which were the Goods and Cattle of Henry Fieldly, late of Stratford-upon-Avon in the County of Warwicke, Tanner, now deceased, bequeathed, by William Shakespeare, the 21st day of August, Anno Domini 1562. By Thomas Trussell, Bevôt man, Mr. John Shakesher, Richard Spencer and others."

The items of the inventory consist of nothing but an enumeration of old bedsteads, painted cloths, and so of no curiosity and of little value. It is to be observed that John Trussel was an attorney of Stratford, and it seems likely that the valuation was made in resoundants, and that they had been so prior to the date of the former return by the same official person.

In considering the subject of the faith of our poet's father, we ought to put entirely out of view the paper upon which Dr. Drake lays some stress; we mean the sort of religious will, or confession of faith, supposed to have been found, about the year 1710, concealed in the tiling of the house John Shakespeare is conjectured to have inhabited. It was written by William Shakespeare (as the name of his house is not attenion, and there are many reasons for believing it to be spurious. Malone once looked upon it as authentic, but he corrected his judgment respecting it afterwards.

Upon the new matter we have here been able to produce, we shall leave the reader to draw his own conclusion, and to decide for himself whether John Shakespeare bore church in 1592, because he was in fear of arrest, because he was "aged, sick, and impotent of body," or because he did not accord in the doctrines of the protestant faith.

We ought not, however, to omit to add, that if John Shakespeare were infirm in 1592, or if he were harassed and threatened by creditors, neither the one circumstance nor the other prevented him from being employed in Aug- ust 1592 (in what particular capacity, or for what precise purpose is not stated) to assist "Thomas Trussell, gentleman," and "Richard Spencer, yeoman," in taking an inventory of the goods and chattels of Henry Fieldly of Stratford, tanner, after his decease. A contemporary copy of the original document has recently been placed in the hands of the Shakespeare Society for publication, but the fact, and not the details, is all that seems of importance here. In the heading of the paper our poet's father is called "Mr. John Shakespeare," and at the end we find his name as "John Shaksper, gent.," and "Richard Spencer, yeoman," in a paper, as it is shown, in which the addition of "senser" was made, and the object of it might be to distinguish him more effectually from John Shakespeare, the shoemaker in Stratford, with whom, of old perhaps, as in modern times, he was now and then embroiled. The fact itself may be material in determining whether John Shakespeare, at the age of sixty-two, was, or was not so "aged, sick, or impotent of body," as to be unable to attend protestant divine worship. It certainly does not seem likely that he would have been selected for the performance of such a duty, however trilling, if he had been so apprehensive of arrest as not to be able to leave his dwelling, or if he had been very infirm from sickness or old age.

Whether he were, or were not a member of the protestant reformed Church, it is not to be disputed that his children were, all of whom were born before 1566, were baptised at the ordinary and established place of worship in the parish. That his son William was educated, lived, and died a protestant we have no doubt.

We have already stated our distinct and deliberate opinion that "Venus and Adonis" was written before its author left his home in Warwickshire. He kept it by him for some years, and early in 1595 seems to have put it into the hands relating to Field's will. The whole sum at which the goods were estimated was £14. 14s. 0d., and the total, with the names of the persons making the appraisement, is thus stated at the end of the account:

"Some total!—£14. 14s. 0d. John Shaksper senior By me Richard Spencer Per Richard Spencer Script. present."

Of course, unless, as does not appear in this copy, John Shakespeare made his mark, the document must have been subscribed by his son before being signed by the printer. But the title page of this publication has been brought within our view by Sir Frederick B. Wat- tfon, a very elegant and valuable book, which is in the benefit of the theatrical funds of our two great theatres. The object of the very zealous and amiable compiler was to counteract a notion, formerly prevailing that Wm. Shakespeare was a Roman Catholic, and he has done so very effectually, although we do not find among his extracts one which seems to us of great value upon this question: "Benedick" (as the title is printed) for the proposition, that the play was grounded on the chaste Virtue of Queen Elizabeth in "Henry VIII.," act v. sc. 4. It consists of but five expressive words, which we think clearly refer to the completer of the Reformation under our maiden queen.

"In her days * * * God shall be truly known !"
of a printer, named Richard Field, who, it has been said, was of Stafford, and might be the son of the Henry Fielde, or the Irish goods John Shakespeare was employed to value in 1592. It is to be recollected that at the time "Venus and Adonis" was sent to the press, while it was printing, and when it was published, the plague prevailed in London to such an excess, that it was deemed expedient by the privy council to put a stop to all theatrical performances. Shakespeare seems to have availed himself of this interruption of the theatre for the introduction of a different character to those which had been ordinarily seen from his pen. Until "Venus and Adonis" came out, the public at large could only have known him by the dramas he had written, or by those which, at an earlier date, he had altered, amended, and revived. The poem came from Field's press in the spring of 1593, preceded by a dedication to the Earl of Southampton. Its popularity was great and increased faster than the number of those who would have desired to purchase it. In the first instance, the wishes of the young nobleman on the subject, Lord Southampton was more than nine years younger than Shakespeare, having been born on 6th Oct. 1578. We may be sure that the dedication of "Venus and Adonis" was, on every account, acceptable, and Shakespeare followed it up by inscribing to the same peer, but in a much more assured and confident strain, his "Lucrece." It is evident from the opening of the dedication, that Shake- speare was aware of the unexampled nature of "Venus and Adonis," and the unexampled nature of "Lucrece." It was not calculated, from its subject and the treatment of it, to be so popular as "Venus and Adonis," and the first edition having appeared from Field's press in 1594, a reprint of it does not seem to have been called for until after the lapse of four years, and the third edition bears the date of 1600. It must have been about this period that the Earl of Southampton bestowed a most extraordinary proof of his high-minded munificence upon the author of "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece." It was not unusual, at that time and afterwards, for noblemen, and others to whom works were dedicated, to make presents of money to the writers of them; but there is certainly no instance upon record of such a grant as that, or one of any sort, as that of which we are now to speak; nevertheless, we have every reliance upon the authenticity of the anecdote, taking into account the unexampled merit of the poet, the known liberality of the nobleman, and the evidence upon which the story has been handed down. Rowe was the original narrator of it in print, and he doubts not had it, with other information, from Betterton, who probably received it directly from Sir William Davenant, and communicated it to Rowe. If it cannot be asserted that Davenant was strictly contemporary with Shakespeare, he was contemporary with Shakespeare's contemporaries; and from him he must have retained the original information. Rowe gives the statement in these words:—

"There is one instance so singular in the munificence of Shakespeare's that if I had not been assured that the story was handed down by Sir William Davenant, who was probably very well acquainted with his Shakespeare's affairs, I should not have ventured to have inserted; that my Lord Southampton in one year gave him a thousand pounds to enable him to go through with a purchase which he heard he had a mind to."

No biographer of Shakespeare seems to have adverted to the period when it was likely that the gift was made, in combination with the nature of the purchase Lord Southampton was in the habit of making precisely at the same date that the Lord Chamberlain's servants entered upon the project of building the Globe Theatre on the Bankside, not very far to the west of the Southwark foot of London Bridge. "Venus and Adonis" was published in 1593; and it was on the 22nd Dec. in that year that Richard Burbage, the great actor, and the leader of the company to which Shakespeare was attached, signed the deed to a carpenter for the purpose of the construction of the Globe. It is not too much to allow at least a year for its completion; and it was during 1594, while the work on the Bankside was in progress, that "Lucrece" came from the press. Thus we see that the building of the Globe, at the cost of the shareholders in the Blackfriars theatre, was coincident in point of time with the appearance of the two poems dedicated to the Earl of South- hampton. It is, it be too much to believe that the young and bountiful nobleman, having heard of this enterprise from the peculiar interest he is known to have taken in all matters relating to the stage, and having been incited by warm admiration of "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece," in the fore-front of which he rejoiced to see his own name, presented Shakespeare with 1000l., to enable him to make good the money he was to produce, as his proportion, for the completion of the Globe! We do not mean to say that our greatest dramatist stood in need of the money, or that he could not have deposited it as well as the other shareholders in the Blackfriars'; but Lord Southampton may not have thought it necessary to inquire, whether he did or did not want it, nor to consider precisely what it had been customary to give ordinary versifiers, who sought the pay and patronage of the nobility. Although Shakespeare had not yet reached the climax of his excel- lence, Lord Southampton knew him to be the greatest dramatist this country had yet produced; he knew him also to be the writer of two poems, dedicated to himself, with which nothing else of the kind could bear comparison; and in the exercise of his bounty he measured the poet by his deserts, and "used him after his own honour and dignity," by bestowing upon him a sum worthy of his title and char- acter, and which his wealth probably enabled him without difficulty to afford. We do not believe that there has been any exaggeration in the amount, (although that is more possible, than that the whole statement should have been a fiction) and Lord Southampton may thus have intended also to indicate his hearty good will to the new undertaking of the company, and his determination to support it."

1 By the following order, derived from the registers:—
"That for avoyding of great concourse of people, which causeth increase of the infection, it were convenient that all Playes, Bear- bawes, Fair, and Market Days, and in particular in the season of these assemblies, should be suppressed during the time of infection, for that infected people, after their long keeping in, and before they be cured of their desease and infection, of many sorts of recreations use to resort to such assemblies, where, through heat and thorge, they infect many sound persons."—

2 Malone knew nothing of any copy of 1594. The impression of 1600 was printed for W. Leake; only a single copy of the edition has come down to our day; it had been entered by him as early as 1595.

3 The author of the present Life of Shakespeare is bound to make this demonstration of his personal knowledge. This work was the result of all his researches, and his acquaintance with every contribution to the enterprise, through the hands of an individual whom he had good reason to distinguish from the rest of the company."

4 After the Globe had been burned down in June, 1613, it was re- built very much by the contributions of the king and the nobility.
CHAPTER X.

The opening of the Globe theatre, on the Bankside, in 1595, Union of Shakespeare's associates with the Lord Admiral's players. The theatre at Newington Butts. Projected repair and the Blackfriars, opened by the inhabitants of the precinct. Shakespeare's rank in the company in 1596. Petition from him and seven others to the Privy Council, and its results. Repair of the Blackfriars theatre. Shakespeare a resident in Southwark in 1596; proof that he was so from the papers at Dulwich College.

We have concluded, as we think that we may do very fairly, that the construction of the new theatre on the Bankside, subsequently known as the Globe, having been commenced soon after the signature of the bond of Burbage to Street, on 23d Dec. 1598, was continued through the year 1594; we apprehend that it would be finished and ready for the reception of audiences early in the spring of 1595. It was a round wooden building, open to the sky, while the stage was protected from the weather by an overhanging roof of thatch. The number of persons it would contain we have no means of ascertaining, but it was certainly of larger dimensions than the Rose, the Hope or the Swan, three other edifices of the same kind and used for the same purpose, in the close vicinity of the theatre. The Rose theatre was of the same kind, as it was called, entirely covered in, and of smaller size; and from thence the company, after the Globe had been completed, was in the habit of removing in the spring, perhaps as soon as there was any indication of the setting in of fine cheerful weather.

Before the building of the Globe, for the exclusive use of the theatrical servants of the Lord Chamberlain, there can be little doubt that they did not act all the year round at the Blackfriars; they appear to have performed sometimes at the Curtain in Shoreditch, and Richard Burbage, at the time of his death, still had shares in that playhouse. Whether they occupied it in common with any other association is not so clear; but we learn from Henslowe's Diary, that in 1594, and perhaps at an earlier date, the company of which Shakespeare was a member had played at a theatre in Newington Butts, where the Lord Admiral's servants also exhibited. At this period of our stage-history the performances usually began at three o'clock in the afternoon; for the citizens transacted their business and dined early, and many of them afterwards walked out into the fields for recreation, often visiting such theatres as were open purposely for their reception. Henslowe's Diary shows that the Lord Chamberlain's and the Lord Admiral's servants had joint possession of the Newington theatre from 3d June 1594, to April 15th November 1595. During this period various pieces were performed, which in their titles resemble plays which unquestionably came from Shakespeare's pen. That none of these productions were by our great dramatist, it is, of course, impossible to affirm; but the strong probability seems to be, that they were older dramas, of which he subsequently, more or less, availed himself. Among these was a "Hamlet," acted on 11th of June, 1594; a "Taming of a Shrew," acted on 11th June, 1594; an "Abduction," acted on 10th June, 1594; a "Venetian Captive," acted on 12th Aug. 1594; a "Caesar and Pompey," acted 8th Nov. 1594; a "Second Part of Caesar," acted 26th June, 1595; a "Henry V.," acted on 25th Nov. 1595; and a "Troy," acted on the 22d June, 1596. To these we might add a "Palamon and Aristeus," (acted on 17th Sept. 1594) if we suppose Shakespeare to have had any hand in writing "The Two Noble Kinsmen," and an "Antony and Cleopatra." (acted on the 20th June, 1595) as it is called in the barbarous record, which may possibly have had some connexion with "Antony and Cleopatra." We have no reason to think that Shakespeare did not aid in these representations, although he was perhaps, too much engaged with the duties of authorship, at this date, to take a very busy or prominent part as an actor.

The fact that the Lord Chamberlain's players acted at Newington until November, 1596, may appear to militate against our notion that the Globe was finished and ready for performances in the spring of 1595; and it is very possible that the construction occupied more time than we have imagined. Malone was of opinion that the Globe might have been opened even in 1594; but we postpone that event until the following year, because we think the time too short, and because, unless it was entirely completed early in 1594, it would not be required, inasmuch as the company for which it was built seem to have acted at the Blackfriars in the winter. Our notion is, that even after the Globe was finished, the Lord Chamberlain's servants now and then performed at Newington in the summer, because audiences having been accustomed to expect them there, assembled for the purpose, and the players did not think it prudent to re-linquish the enrolment thus to be obtained. The period we have been considering was a time of transition, and we need not interfere with the representations at the Globe. If any members of the company had continued to play at Newington after November 1596, we should, no doubt, have found some traces of it in Henslowe's Diary.

Another reason for thinking that the Globe was opened in the spring of 1595 is, that very soon afterwards the sharers in that enterprise commenced the repair and enlargement of their theatre in the Blackfriars, which had been in constant use for twenty years. Of this proceeding we shall have occasion to say more presently.

We may feel assured that the important incident of the opening of a new theatre on the Bankside, larger than any that then stood in that or in other parts of the town, was celebrated by the production of a new play. Considering his station and duties in the company, and his popularity as a dramatist, we may be confident also that the new play was written by Shakespeare. In the imperfect state of our information, it would be vain to speculate which of his dramas was brought out on the occasion; but if the reader will refer to our several Introductions, he will see which of the plays according to such evidence as we are acquainted with, may appear in his view to have the best claim to the distinction. Many years ago we were strongly inclined to think that "Henry V." was the piece; the Globe was round, and this drama "heavenly" as pointedly mentioned in that drama; so that at all events we are satisfied that it was acted in that theatre: there is also a nationality about the subject, and a popularity in the treatment of it, which would render it peculiarly appropriate; but on farther reflection and information, we are unwillingly convinced that "Henry V." was not written until some years afterwards.

We frankly own, therefore, that we are not in a condition to answer the question, and we are disposed, where we can, to refrain even from conjecture, when we have no ground on which to rest a speculation.

Allowing about fifteen months for the erection and completion of the Globe, we may believe that it was in full operation in the spring, summer, and autumn of 1595. On the approach of cold weather, the company would of course return to their winter quarters in the Blackfriars, which 1 We know that they did so afterwards, and there is every reason to believe that they did so at the beginning of the theatre. The following passage from an Englishman's record, in his Diary in the Ashmolean Museum, that he saw "Macbeth" at the Globe, on the 26th April, 1890; "Richard II." on the 12th Nov. 1891; and "The Tempest" in the Haymarket, in the same year. See the Introductions to those several plays.

2 The same is precisely the case with Pope, the celebrated comedian, who died in Feb. 1664. His will, dated 23d July, 1665, contains the following clause: "Item, I give and bequeath to the said Mary Clark, alias Wood, and to the said Thomas Hemley, as well all my part, right, title, and interest, which I have, or ought to have, in and to all that playhouse, with the appurtenances, called the Curtain, situate and being in Holinwell, in the parish of St. Leonard's in Shoreditch, in the county of Middlesex: as also my part, estate, and interest, which I have, or ought to have, in and to all that playhouse, with the appurtenances, called the Globe, in the parish of St. Andrew, in the county of Surrey."—Chalmers' Supplemental Apology, p. 165.

Richard Burbage lived and died (in 1619) in Holywell-street, near the Curtain theatre, as if his presence were necessary for the tenor of the concern, although he had been an actor at the Blackfriars for many years, and at the Globe ever since its erection.

3 Inquiry into the Authorship, &c. p. 57.
was enclosed. Located within, and comparatively warm. This theatre, as we have stated, at this date had been in constant use for twenty years, and early in 1596 the sharers directed their attention to the extensive repair, enlargement, and, possibly, entire re-construction of the building. The evidence that they entertained such a design is very decisive; and we may presume that the unanimous consent of the members of the company at the Globe encouraged them to this outlay. On the 9th Jan. 1596 (1595, according to the then mode of calculating the year) Lord Hunsdon, who was Lord Chamberlain at the time, but who died about six months afterwards, wrote to Sir William More, expressing a wish to take a house of him in the Blackfriars, and adding that he had heard that Sir William More had parted with a portion of his own residence "to some that mean to make a playhouse." 1

The truth, no doubt, was, that in consequence of their increased popularity, owing, we may readily imagine, in a great degree to the success of the plays Shakespeare had produced, the company which had occupied the Blackfriars theatre found that their house was too small for their audiences, and wished to enlarge it; but it appears rather singular that Lord Hunsdon, the Lord Chamberlain, should not have availed himself to state their representations under the sanction of his name and office, and should only have heard that some persons "intend to make a playhouse" of part of Sir William More's residence. We have not a copy of the whole of Lord Hunsdon's letter — only an abstract of it — which reads as if the Lord Chamberlain did not even know that there was any theatre at all in the Blackfriars. Two documents in the State Paper Office, and a third presented by Mr. J. H. Roundell to the British Museum, give us an idea of what was the object of the actors at the Blackfriars in 1596. The first of these is a representation from certain inhabitants of the precinct in which the playhouse was situated, not only against the completion of the work of repair and enlargement, then commenced, but against further performances in the theatre. Of this paper it is not necessary for our purpose to say more, but, for the benefit of to-day, on the part of the associations of actors, it is a very valuable relict, not so much as it gives the names of eight players who were the proprietors of the theatre or its appurtenances, that of Shakespeare being fifth in the list. It will not have been forgotten, that in 1599 no fewer than sixteen sharers were enumerated, and that then Shakespeare's name was the twelfth; but it did not by any means follow, that because there were sixteen sharers in the receipts, they were also proprietors of the building referred to as being to be enlarged. Thomas Pope, (from whose will we have already given an extract) Richard Burbage, John Hemings, (properly spelt Heminge) Augustine Phillips, William Shakespeare, William Kempe, (who withdrew from the company in 1601) William Slye, and Nicholas Tooley, were "owners" of the theatre as well as sharers in the profits arising out of the performances. The fact, however, seems to be that the sole owner of the edifice in which plays were represented, the proprietor of the freehold, was Richard Burbage, who in herited it from his father, and transmitted it to his sons; but as a body, the parties addressing the privy council for the "petition" appears to have been their owners of, as well as sharers in, the Blackfriars theatre. We insert the document in a text whose serving more than like others of a similar kind, it is without signatures. 2

The date of the year when this petition of the actors was presented to the privy council is ascertained from that of the remonstrance of the inhabitants which had rendered it necessary, viz. 1596; but by another paper, among the theatrical relics of Alleyn and Henslowe at Dulwich College, we are enabled to show that both the remonstrance and the affair were anterior to the date of the petition by one year. Henslowe, step-father to Alleyn's wife, and Alleyn himself, were always, very prudently, to have kept up a good understanding with the officials of the department of the revels; and on 3rd May, 1595, a person of the name of Veale, servant to Edmund Tylhey, master of the revels, wrote to Henslowe, informing him (as of course he must take an interest in the result) that it had been decided by the privy council, that the Lord Chamberlain's servants should be allowed to complete the play, but not to enlarge it, and in the Blackfriars; the note of Veale to Henslowe is on a small slip of paper, very clearly written; and as it is short, we here insert it:—

"Mr. Henslowe. This is to enforme you that my Mr., the Master of the revels, hath rec. from the Lord of the counsell order that the L. Chamberlaine's servants shall not be disturbed at the Blackfriers, according with their petition in the Council, but that they be not repaired, or enlarged, but to any other purpose in that part of the town: the company pretend to be allowed to finish out their design, as regarded the restoration of the edifice, and the increase of its size; but the privy counsell consented only that the building should be repaired. We are to conclude, therefore, that after the repairs were finished, the theatre would hold no more spectators than formerly; but that the dilapidations of time were substantially remedied, we are sure from the fact, that the house continued long afterwards for the purpose for which it had been originally constructed. 3

What is of most importance in this proceeding, with reference to Shakespeare, is the circumstance upon which we have already remarked; that whereas his name, in 1589, stood twelfth in a list of sixteen sharers, in 1596 it was advanced to the fifth place in an enumeration of eight persons, who termed themselves "owners and players of the private house, or theatre, in the precinct and liberty of the Black-

2 "To the right honourable the Lords of her Majesties most honourable Privy Council. The humble petition of Thomas Pope, Richard Burbage, John Hemings, Augustine Phillips, William Shakespeare, William Kempe, William Slye, Nicholas Tooley, and others, servants to the Right Honourable the Lord Chamberlaine to her Majeste." Sheweth, most humbly, that your Petitioners are owners and players of the private house, or theatre, in the precinct and liberty of the Blackfriers, which hath beene for many yeares used and occupied by them, and that they have soe long time needed tyme and money to repair and enlarge their house, which the same, by reason of its having beene so long built, hath fallen into great decay, and that besides the repairation thereof they have no tyme and money to make the same convenient for the entertainment of auditors coming there. That soe this and your Petitioners have all and any of them put down some particular and notable receipts in your name and Others, which they have justly and honestly gained by the exercise of their quallity of stage-players; but that certaine persons (some of them of honour) inhabittants of the said precinct and liberty of the Blackfriers have, as your Petitioners are informed, besought your honourable Lordshippes not to permit the said private house any longer to remain open, but heretofore to be shut up and closed, to the manifest and great injures of your petitioners, who have no other meanes whereby to maintain their wives and families, but by the exercise of their calling as players and actors; and that you shall take the same into your Consideration. And whereas they doe hereby by this petition, beg of your honourable Lordshippes to have their receiptes, and all other papers necessary for the same. Very humbly, your Petitioners, &c."

3 The humble prayer of your Petitioners therefore is, that your honourable Lordshippes grant permission to finish the repairs and alterations which they have hitherto been well ordered in their behaviour, and just in their dealings, that your honourable Lordshippes will not inhibit them from acting at the Blackfriers, and your Petitioners, as to duty most bounden, will ever pray for the increasing honor and happiness of your honourable Lordshippes."
It is not difficult to suppose that the speculation at the Globe had been remarkably successful in its first season, and that the Lord Chamberlain's servants had thereby been induced to expect money upon the Blackfriars, in order to render it more commodious, as well as more spacious, under the calculation, that the receipts at the one house during the winter would be greater in consequence of their popularity at the other during the summer.

Where Shakespeare had resided from the time when he first came to London, until the period of which we are now speaking, we have no information; but in July, 1596, he was living in Southwark, perhaps to be close to the scene of action, and more effectually to superintend the performances at the Globe, which were continued through at least seven months of the year. We have no knowledge whether he removed there shortly before the opening of the Globe, or whether from the first it had been his usual place of abode; but Malone tells us, "From a paper now before me, which formerly belonged to Edward Alleyn, the player, our poet appears to have lived in Southwark, near the Bear-garden, in 1596." He gives us no further insight into the contents of the paper; but, he probably referred to a small slip, borrowed, with the object of a letter, from Dr. Dugdale's College, many of which were returned after his death. Among these returned slips there had been the paper in question, which is valuable only because it proves distinctly, that our great dramatist was an inhabitant of Southwark very soon after the Globe was in operation, although it by no means establishes that he had not resided there long before.

We subjoin it exactly as it stands in the original: the handwriting is ignorant, the spelling peculiar, and it was evidently merely a hasty and imperfect memorandum.

"Inhabitantes of Southwark as have complained, this — of July, 1596.

Mr Markis
Mr Tuppin
Mr Langorth
Wilseme the pyper
Mr Barett
Mr Shaksper
Phellipes
Tomson
Mother Golden the bands
Nagges
Fulpott and go more, and soo well ended."

This is the whole of the fragment, for such it appears to be, and without further explanation, which we have not been able to find in any other document, in the depository where the above is preserved or elsewhere, it is impossible to understand more, than that Shakespeare and other inhabitants of Southwark had made some complaint in July 1596, which, we may guess, was hostile to the wishes of the writer, who congratulated himself that the matter was so well at an end. Some of the parties named, including our great dramatist, continued resident in Southwark long afterwards, as we shall have occasion in its proper place to show.

The writer seems to have been desirous of speaking derogatorily of all the persons he enumerates, but still he designates some as "Mr. Markis, Mr. Tuppin, Mr. Langorth, Mr. Barett, and Mr. Shaksper; but "Phellipes, Tomson, Nagges, and Fulpott," he only mentions by their surnames, while he adds the words "the pyper" and the "bands" after "Wilseme" and the "Mother Golden," probably to indicate that any complaint from them ought to have but little weight. All that we certainly collect from the memorandum is what Malone gathered from it, that in July 1596, (Malone only gives the year, and adds "near the Bear-garden," which we do not find confirmed by the contents of the paper) in the middle of what we have considered the second season at the new theatre called the Globe, Shakespeare was an inhabitant of Southwark. That he had removed thither for the sake of convenience, and of being nearer to the spot, is not unlikely, but we have no evidence upon the point. As there is reason to believe that Burbage was the principal actor at the Globe, lived in Holywell Street, Shoreditch, near the Curtain playhouse, such an arrangement, as regards Shakespeare and the Globe, seems the more probable.

CHAPTER XL

We have already mentioned that in 1578 John Shakespeare and his wife, in order to relieve themselves from pecuniary embarrassment, mortgaged the small estate of the latter, called Asbyes, at Wilnecote in the parish of Aston Cantlow, to Edmund Lambert, for the sum of 40l. As it consisted of nearly sixty acres of land, with a dwelling-house, it must have been worth, perhaps, three times the sum advanced, and by the admission of all parties, the mortgagors were again to be put in possession, if they repaid the money borrowed on or before Michaelmas-day, 1600. According to the assertion of John and Mary Shakespeare, they tendered the 40l. on the day appointed, but it was refused, unless other monies, which they owed to the mortgagees at the same time. Edmund Lambert (perhaps the father of Edward Lambert, whom the eldest sister of Mary Shakespeare had married) died in 1586, in possession of Asbyes, and from him it descended to his eldest son, John Lambert, who continued to withhold it in 1597 from those who claimed to be its rightful owners.

In order to recover the property, John and Mary Shakespeare filed a bill in chancery, on 24th Nov. 1597, against John Lambert of Barford, co. Warwick, in which they alleged the fact of the tender and refusal of the 40l. by Edmund Lambert, who, wishing to keep the estate, did not comply with the tender a condition not included in the deed. The advance of other monies, the repayment of which was required by Edmund Lambert, was not denied by John and Mary Shakespeare, but they contended that they had done all the law required, to entitle them to the restoration of their estates of Asbyes; in this they were not supported, for John Lambert was of "great wealth and ability, and well friends and allied amongst gentlemen and freeholders of the country, in the county of Warwick," while, on the other hand, they were of "small wealth, and very few friends and alliance in the said county." The answer of John Lambert merely denied that the 40l. had been tendered, in consequence of which he alleged that his father became "lawfully and absolutely seized of the premises, in his demesne, as of fee." To this answer John and Mary Shakespeare put in a replication, reiterating the assertion of the tender and refusal of the 40l. on Michaelmas-day, 1580, and praying Lord Keeper Egerton (afterwards Baron Elnesmere) to decree in their favour accordingly.

1 "Inquiry into the Authenticity," &c. p. 218. He seems to have reserved particularia for his "Life of Shakespeare," which he did not live to complete, and which was imperfectly finished by Boswell.

2 It is just possible that by "Wilseme the pyper" the writer meant Frederick Willes, for whom the letter of Master Philip Ford to "Machado about Nothing," who, might be, and probably was, a player upon some wind instrument. See also the "Memoirs of Edward Alleyn," (printed by the Shakespeare Society) p. 15, the reference of "Mr. Wilson, the singer," when he died on one occasion with the founder of Dulwich College.

3 Malone's Shakespeare by Boswell, ii. p. 182.
If any decree were pronounced, it is singular that no trace of it should have been preserved either in the records of the court of Common Pleas at Westminster, or in the registers of the court of Chancery at London; but such is the fact, and the inference is, that the suit was settled by the parties without proceeding to this extremity. We can have little doubt that the bill had been filed with the concurrence, and at the instance, of our great dramatist, who at this date was rapidly acquiring wealth, although his father and mother put forward in their bill their own poverty and powerlessness, compared with the riches and influence which he acquired. However the claim advanced, a suit was not brought to issue, but the parties apparently agreed to compromise the matter, and the suit was not carried further.

Such is the account which Shakespeare gives of the suit in the margin opposite the title of the play; and in the margin of the copy in the possession of the Shakespeare Society, we read that the suit was settled by the parties, and that no further proceedings were taken. The suit, therefore, was never brought to issue, and the cause was never tried. But we have no other evidence of the suit, and, therefore, cannot say whether the account given by Shakespeare is correct, or whether the suit was brought to issue, and whether the suit was tried, and whether the judgment was given for either party.

In the following extract from Malone's Shakespeare, we find a reference to the suit:

"Malone found, and printed, a letter from Abraham Sturley, of Stratford-upon-Avon, dated 1597-8, stating that his "neighbours girded with the words they felt through the dearth of corn," and that malcontents in great numbers had gone to Sir Thomas Lucy and Sir Fulke Greville to complain of the malsters for engrossing it. Connected with this, the Shakespeare Society has been put in possession of a document of much value as regards the biography of our poet, although, at first sight, it may not appear to deserve notice; it is sure in the end to attract. It is thus headed—"

"The meate of corn and malle, taken the 4th of February, 1597, in the 40th yeare of the raigne of our most gracious Sovereigne Ladye, Queen Elizabeth, &c.""

"And in the margin opposite the title are the words "Stratforde Burroghlie, Warwicke." It was evidently prepared in order to ascertain how much corn and malt there really was in the town; and it is divided into two columns, one showing the "Townsmen's corn," and the other the "Strangers' malt." The names of the Townsmen and Strangers (when known) are all given, with the wards in which they resided, so that we are enabled by this document, among other things, to prove in what part of Stratford the family of our great poet then dwelt; it was in Chapel-street Ward, and it appears that at the date of the account William Shakespeare had ten quarters of corn in his possession. As may be curious to see who were his immediate neighbours, and in what order the names are given, we copy the account, as far as it relates to Chapel-street Ward, exactly as it stands—"

Chappel Street Ward.

"We shall have occasion hereafter again to refer to this document upon another point, but in the mean time we may remark that the name of John Shakespeare is not found in any part of it. This fact gives additional probability to the belief that the two old people, possibly with some of their children, were living in the house of their son William, for such may be the reason why we do not find John Shakespeare mentioned in the account as the owner of any corn. It may likewise in part explain how it happened that William Shakespeare was in possession of so large a quantity: in proportion to the number of his family, in time of scarcity, he would be naturally desirous to be well provided with the main article of subsistence; or it is very possible that, as a grower of wheat, he might keep some in store for sale to those who were in want of it. Ten quarters does not seem much more than would be needed for his own consumption; but it affords some proof of his means and substance at this date, that only two persons in Chapel street Ward had a larger quantity in their hands. We are led to infer from this circumstance that our great dramatist may have been a cultivator of land, and it is not unlikely that the wheat in his granary had been grown on his mother's estate of Asbyes, at Wilmecote, of which we know besides 9 quarters of barley—th' sir peas, beans, and vetches to 15 quarters, and their oats to 12 quarters. The malt, the property of strangers amounted to 21 quarters and 5½ of malt, with 3 quarters of pews. Besides malt, the Townsmen, it is said, were in possession of 43 quarters and a half of "wheat and mill-corn," and of 10 quarters and 6 strike of harves, but it seems to have been considerably more, even in Chapel-street Ward."
that no fewer than fifty, out of about sixty, acres were arable. We must now return to London and to theatrical affairs there, and in the first place advert to a passage in Rowe's Life of Shakespeare, relating to the real or supposed connexion of the two great dramatists and Ben Jonson. Rowe tells us that 'Shakespeare's acquaintance with Ben Jonson began with a remarkable piece of humanity and good nature. Mr. Jonson, who was at that time altogether unknown to the world, had offered one of his plays to the players, in order to have it acted; and the persons into whose hands it was put, after having turned it over in their hands and superciliously shewn it to a friend, who had set upon returning it to him with an ill-natured answer, that it would be of no service to their company, when Shakespeare, luckily, cast his eye upon it, and found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Jonson and his writings to the public.' This anecdote is entirely disbelieved by Mr. Gifford, and he rest his incredulity upon the supposition, that Ben Jonson's earliest known production, 'Every Man in his Humour,' was originally acted in 1597 at a different theatre, and he produces as evidence Henslowe's Diary, which he states, proves that the comedy came out at the Rose.

The truth, however, is, that the play supposed, on the authority of Henslowe, to be Ben Jonson's comedy, is only called by Henslowe 'Humours' or 'Umers,' as he ignorantly spells it. It is a mere speculation that this was Ben Jonson's play, and that it may have been composed by any other poet, in the title of which the word 'Humour' occurred; and we have the indisputable and unequivocal testimony of Ben Jonson himself, in his own authorized edition of his works in 1616, that 'Every Man in his Humour' was not acted until 1598; he was not satisfied with stating on the title-page, that it was 'acted in the year 1598 by the Lord Chamberlain his servants,' which might have been considered sufficient; but in this instance (as in all others in the same volume) he informs us at the end that 1598 was the year in which it was first acted:—

"This comedy was first acted in the year 1598."

Are we prepared to disbelieve Ben Jonson's positive assertion (a man of the highest and purest notions, as regarded truth and integrity) for the sake of a theory founded upon the bare assumption, that Henslowe by 'Umers' not only meant Ben Jonson's 'Every Man in his Humour,' but could not stand anything else?

Had it been brought out originally by the Lord Admiral's players at the Rose, and acted with so much success that it was repeated eleven times, as Henslowe's Diary shows was the case with 'Umers,' there can be no apparent reason why Ben Jonson should not have said so; and if he had afterwards withdrawn it on some pique, and carried it to the Lord Admiral, Mr. Gifford can conceive it possible that a man of Ben Jonson's temper and spirit would not have told us why in some other part of his works.

Mr. Gifford, passing over without notice the positive statement we have quoted, respecting the first acting of 'Every Man in his Humour' by the Lord Chamberlain's servants in 1598, proceeds to argue that Ben Jonson could stand in need of no such assistance, as Shakespeare is said to have afforded him, because he was 'as well known, and perhaps better,' than Shakespeare himself. Surely, with all deference for Mr. Gifford's undoubted neatness and general accuracy, we may doubt how Ben Jonson could be better, or so well known as Shakespeare, when the latter had been for twelve years connected with the stage as author and actor, and had written, at the lowest calculation, twenty dramas, while the former was only twenty-four years old and had produced no known play but 'Every Man in his Humour.' It is also to be observed, that Henslowe had no pecuniary transactions with Ben Jonson prior to the month of August, 1598; whereas, if 'Umers' had been purchased from Jonson, as well known as Shakespeare, when the latter had been so frequently married over some sum of money or some sum of payment, anterior to the production of the comedy on the stage in May, 1597.

Add to this, that nothing could be more consistent with the amiable and generous character of Shakespeare, than that he should thus have interested himself in favour of a writer who was ten years his junior, and who gave such undoubted proofs of genius as are displayed in 'Every Man in his Humour.' Our great dramatists, established in public favour by such comedies as 'The Merchant of Venice' and 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' by such a tragedy as 'Romeo and Juliet,' and by such histories as 'King John,' 'Richard II.' and 'Richard III.' must have felt himself above all rivalry, and could well afford this act of 'humanity and good-nature,' as Rowe terms it, (though Mr. Gifford, quoting Rowe's words, accidentally omits the two last words.)

It is to be recollected also that Rowe, the original narrator of the incident, does not, as in several other cases, give it as if he at all doubted its correctness, but unhesitatingly and distinctly, as if it were a matter well known, and entirely believed, at the time he wrote.

Another circumstance may be noticed as an incidental confirmation of Rowe's statement, with which Mr. Gifford does not take notice, but which has been recently discovered. In 1598 Ben Jonson, being then only twenty-four years old, had a quarrel with Gabriel Spencer, one of Henslowe's principal actors, in consequence of which they met, fought, and Spencer was killed. Henslowe, writing to Allyn on the subject on the 26th September, uses these words:—"Since you were with me, I have lost one of my company, which hurteth me greatly; that is Gabriel, who, in his passion, fell in He that was a blocklayer."

Now, had Ben Jonson been at that date the author of the comedy called "Umers," and had it been his "Every Man in his Humour," which was acted by the Lord Admiral's players eleven times, it is not very likely that Henslowe would have been ignorant who Benjamim Jonson was, and have spoken of him, not as one of the dramatists in his pay, and the author of a very successful piece, but as a blocklayer. He was writing also to his step-daughter's husband, the leading member of his company, to whom he would have been ready to give the fullest information regarding the disastrous affair. We only adduce this additional matter to show the improbability of the assumption, that Ben Jonson had anything to do with the comedy of "Umers," acted by Henslowe's company in May, 1597, and the probability of the position that, as Ben Jonson himself states, it was originally brought out in 1598.

3 For the materials of the following note, which sets right an important error relating to Ben Jonson's mother, we are indebted to Mr. Petrie's "Works," vol. i, p. 254.

Malone and Gifford (Ben Jonson's Works, vol. i. p. 5) both came to the conclusion that the Mrs. Margaret Jonson, mentioned in the "Register of the Field's Books," and the "Field's Pay-Bills," (1576, 1578, 1590, 1591, 1593, 1595,) was Ben Jonson's mother. This is incorrect.

4 Ben Jonson's "Conversations," p. 290. It is incontestable that the Mrs. Margaret Fowler, who was married in 1575, was dead before 1590; for her husband, Ch. Thomas Fowler, was then buried, and in the inscription upon his tomb, in the old church of St. Martin's in the Fields, it was stated that he survived his three wives, Ellen, Margaret, and Elizabeth, who were buried in the same grave.

5 The precise form in which the entry stands in Henslowe's so called Register-book is:—

CHAPTER XII

Restriction of dramatic performances in and near London in 1597. Thomas Nash and his play, "The Island of Dogs," imprisonment of Nash, and of some of the players of the Lord Admiral. Favour shown to the companies of the Lord Chamberlain and of the Lord Admiral. Printing of Shakespeare's Plays in 1597. The list of his known dramas, published by F. Meres in 1598. Shakespeare authorized to print his plays, and to have his name on the press. Cardinalship of dramatic authors in this respect. "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1599. Shakespeare's reputation as a dramatist.

In the summer of 1597 an event occurred which seems to have produced for a time a serious restriction upon dramatic performances. The celebrated Thomas Nash, early in the year, had written a comedy which he called "The Island of Dogs:" that he had partners in the undertaking there is no doubt; and he tells us, in his tract called "Lenten Stuff," printed in 1599, that the players, when it was acted by the Lord Admiral's servants in the beginning of August, 1597, had taken most unwarrantable liberties with his piece, by making large additions, for which he ought not to have been responsible. The exact nature of the performance is not known, but it was certainly satirical, no doubt personal, and it must have had reference also to some of the polemical and political questions of the day. The representation of it was forbidden by authority, and Nash, with others, was arrested under an order from the privy council, and sent to the Fleet prison. Some of the offending actors had escaped, and were playing at the Theatre in Surrey, in a proceeding which had been already done in the way of punishment, wrote from Greenwich on 15th August, 1597, to certain magistrates, requiring them strictly to examine all the parties in custody, with a view to the discovery of others not yet apprehended. This important official letter, which has hitherto been unmentioned, we have inserted in a note from the registers of the privy council of that date; and by it we learn, not only that Nash was the author of the seditious and scandalous" comedy, but that his son was not the author in it, and "the maker of part of the said play," especially pointed at, who was in custody.

Before the date of this incident the companies of various play-houses in the county of Middlesex, but particularly at the Curtain and Theatre in Shoreditch had attracted attention, and given offence, by the licentious character of their performances; and the registers of the privy council show that the magistrates had been written to on the 28th July, 1597, requiring that no plays should be acted during the summer, and directing, in order to put an effectual stop to such performances, because "sordid matters were handled on stage," that the two places above named should be "put down." The magistrates were also enjoined to send for the owners of "any other common play-house" within their jurisdiction, and not only to forbid performances of every description, but "so to deface" all places erected for theatrical representations, "as they might not be employed again to such use." This command was given just anterior to the production of Nash's "Isle of Dogs," which was certainly not calculated to make obvious entertainment by any person in authority about the Court.

The Blackfriars, not being, according to the terms of the order of the privy council, "a common play-house," but what was called a private theatre, does not seem to have been included in the general ban; but as we know that similar directions had been conveyed to the magistrates of the county of Surrey, it is somewhat surprising that they seem to have produced no effect upon the performances at the Globe or the Rose upon the Bankside. We must attribute this circumstance, perhaps, to the exercise of private influence; and it is quite certain that the necessity of keeping some companies in practice, in order that they might be prepared to exhibit, when required, before the Queen, was made the first pretext for granting exclusive "licences" to the actors of the Lord Chamberlain, and of the Lord Admiral. We know that the Earl of Southampton and Sir Edward Phillips, about this time, were in the frequent habit of visiting the theatres; the Earl of Nottingham also seems to have taken an unusual interest on various occasions in favour of the company acting under his name, and to the representations of these noblemen we are, perhaps, to attribute the exemption of the Globe and the Rose from the operation of the order "to deface" all buildings adapted to dramatic representations in Middlesex and Surrey, which could not be called "public theatres," and for any such purpose in future. We have the authority of the registers of the privy council, under date of 19th Feb. 1597-8, for stating that the companies of the Lord Chamberlain and of the Lord Admiral obtained renewed permission "to use and practise stage-plays," in order that they might be duly qualified, if called upon to perform before the Queen.

This privilege, as regards the players of the Lord Admi- ral, seems the more extraordinary, because that was the very company which only in the August before had been given such offence by the representation of Nash's "Isle of Dogs," that its farther performance was forbidden, the author and some of the players were arrested and sent to the Fleet, and vigorous steps taken to secure the persons of other parties who for a time had made their escape. It is very likely that Nash was the scape-goat on the occasion, and that the chief blame was thrown upon him, although, in his tract, very pressed to find, which the more constant correspondent of the press, more less the author, if he has been seen the streets, could not have allowed to pass. Nearly all players, of which there were more defective than the usual, which is the case with many impressions of this kind. And on this point Mr. Heaviside, as it commonly came from the press with the author's approbation, is, we think, the worst specimen of typography that ever met our observation.

Returning to the important list of twelve plays furnished by Mercers, we may add that although he does not mention them, there is no doubt that the three parts of "Every Man" had been repeatedly acted before 1600, which is generally inferable that Nephomene, both parts of "History," "Love's Labour's Lost," has been performed, since the time of Dr. Farmer, to be "All's Well that Ends Well." Under a different title, our notice is to Introduces, in one original name given to it was "Love's Labour's Won." And that, when it was revived with adoptions and alternations, in 1605 or 1606, it received also a new appendix.

In connection with the question regarding the interest taken by Shakespeare in the publication of his works, we may notice the important point mentioned in the year after the appearance of the list furnished by Mercers. In 1598 came out a collection of short miscellaneous poems under the title of "The Passion Play," which were all of them imitated, by W. Jaggard the printer, or by W. Leeke the bookseller, to Shakespeare's advantage, for some of them were subjects in the introduction to our respect of this little work we have stated all the known particulars regarding it, but Shakespeare, as far as appears from any evidence that has descended to us, took no notice of the trick played upon him: possibly he never heard of it, or if he heard of it left it to its own detection, not thinking it worth while to intercede. It serves to establish, what certainly could not otherwise be decided, that Shakespeare was so much in the manner in which a scemining printer and stationer endeavored to take advantage of that popularity.

Yet it is singular, if we rely upon several other authorities, how little our great dramatist was about this period known and admired for his plays. Richard Barnfield published his "Encomium of Lady Pervis" in 1598, the year in which the list of twelve of Shakespeare's plays was printed by Mercers and from a copy of verses entitled "Barnfield's Epistle to the Poets" we quote the following notice of Shakespeare:

"And Shakespeare then, whose honey-sweetening vein, Pleasing the word, my praises doth contain, Wherein, if none, my muse, with many a stanza, They name in fame's immortal book hath placed; Live ever you, at least in fame live ever: Well may the body die, but fame die never."

Here Shakespeare's popularity, as "pleasing the world," is noticed; but the proofs of it are not derived from the stage, where his dramas were in daily performances before crowded audiences, but from the success of his "Venus and Adonis," and "Lucrece," which had gone through various editions. Precisely to the same effect, but a still steeper instance, we may refer to a play in which Burbage and Kempe are introduced as characters, the one of whom had obtained such celebrity in the tragic, and the other in the comic parts in Shakespeare's dramas, we allude to "The Return from Parnassus," which was disgracefully acted before the death of Queen Elizabeth. At a scene where two young students are increasing the merits of particular poets, one of them speaks thus of Shakespeare:

"One leaves Shakespeare at Lamentace, His sweetest vers upon heart-wrenching life, Could but a wiser support him contented, Without ever a foolish, any imputation."

Yet not the most distant allusion is made to any of his dramatic productions, although the poet estimated by the young students immediately before Shakespeare was Ben Jonson, who was declared to be "the wittiest fellow of a hundred years, in England," in a show invention. Hence we infer that this stage of Shakespeare's career should be as the commencement of the seventeenth century, the reputation of Shakespeare depended rather upon his poems than upon his plays, almost as if productions for the stage were not looked upon at that date, as part of the reconstructed literature of the country.

CHAPTER XIII

New Place, or, "the great house," in Stratford, bought by Shakespeare in 1613, to house the Lord Chamberlain's players, from the Bankes to the Fortune theatre at Drury Lane. History of the Lord Chamberlain's and Lord Dorset's company. Order in which coating the acting of plays in the Globe and Fortune; the influence of Shakespeare's works over other companies, and the end of the seventeenth century. The "Great Part of the Life of William Shakespeare," printed in 1660, Henry Chettle's Shakespeare, and marking of the whole-page.

It will have been observed, that in the document we have produced, relating to the quantity of com and maid in Stratford it is stated that William Shakespeare's residence was in that division of the borough called Chapel-street Ward. This is an important consideration, because we think it may be said to settle decisively the disputed question, that our great dramatist purchased what was known as the "great house," or New Place, before or after 1605. It was situated in Chapel-street Ward, close to the chapel of the Holy Trinity. We are now certain that he had a house in the ward in February, 1611-12, and that he had ten quarters of corn there; and we need not doubt that it was the dwelling which had been built by Sir Hugh Chrystie in the reign of Henry VII. The Chrysties subsequently sold it to a person of the name of Bostel, and he to Mercers Underhill, who disposed of it to Shakespeare. We therefore find him, in the beginning of 1587, occupying one of the best houses of Stratford. He who had quitted his native town about twelve years before, poor and comparatively friendless, was able by the profits of his own exertion, and the exercise of his own talents, to return to, and to establish his family in more comfort and opulence than as far as is known they had ever before enjoyed.

1 See page 136 for a note on the place where Shakespeare lived and worked.

2 See page 140 for a note on the ownership of New Place.

3 See page 142 for a note on the influence of Shakespeare's work on other companies.

4 See page 144 for a note on the marking of the whole-page.

5 See page 145 for a note on the life of Shakespeare's great house, or New Place.
We consider the point that Shakespeare had become owner of New Place in or before 1597 as completely made out, as, at such a distance of time, and with such imperfect information upon nearly all matters connected with his history, could be at all expected.

We may now adduce evidence, as we have already remarked (p. xxi), that the confirmation of arms in 1596, obtained as we believe by William Shakespeare, had reference to the permanent and substantial settlement of his family in Stratford, and to the purchase of a residence there consistent with the altered circumstances of that family—altered by its increased wealth and consequence, owing to the success of our great poet both as an actor and a dramatist.

The remuneration to Lord Admiral players under Heneslowe and Alleyn, from the Rose theatre at the Bankside, to the new house called the Fortune, in Golden-lane, Cripplegate, soon after the date to which we are now referring, may lead to the opinion that that company did not find itself equal to sustain the rivalry with the Lord Chamberlain's, under Shakespeare and Burbage, at the Globe. That theatre was opened, as we have added reasons to believe, in the spring of 1596: the Rose, though our only evidence in this case is the supposition of repairing it might enter into the calculation, when Heneslowe and Alleyn thought of trying the experiment in a different part of the town, and on the Middlesex side of the water. Theaters being at this date merely wooden structures, and much frequented, they would soon fall into decay, especially in a marshy situation like that of the Bankside: so damp was the soil in the neighbourhood, that the Globe was surrounded by water for a long time after its completion: and, from the fact anywhere stated, it is most likely that the Rose was similarly drained. The Rose was in the first instance, and as far back as the reign of Edward VI, a house of entertainment with that sign, and it was converted into a theatre by Heneslowe and a grocer of the name of Cholmeley about the year 1584; but it seems to have early required considerable reparations, and they might be again necessary prior to 1599, when Heneslowe and Alleyn resolved to abandon Southwark. However, it may be doubted whether they would not have continued where they were, re-collecting the convenient proximity of Paris Garden, (where bears, bulls, dc. were baited, and in which they were also jointly interested), and the success of the Lord Chamberlain's players at the Globe, which had been now for four or five years. Heneslowe and Alleyn seem to have found, that neither their plays nor their players could stand the competition of their rivals, and they accordingly removed to a vicinity where no play-house had previously existed.

The Fortune theatre was commenced in Golden-lane, Cripplegate, in the year 1599, and finished in 1600, and thither they moved. Why Heneslowe and Alleyn transported their whole dramatic company, in the spring of 1602 by the addition of that great and popular comic performer, William Kempe. The association at the Globe was then left in almost undisputed possession of the Bankside. There were, indeed, occasional, and perhaps not unfrequent, performances at the Rose, (although it had been stipulated with the public authorities that it should be pulled down, if leave were given for the construction of the Fortune) and奇瑞 were for the accommodation of the general in the old theatre. We thus see that, in the unfriendly to all theatrical performances they obtained an order from the privy council, dated 224 June, that no other public play-houses should be permitted but the Globe in Surrey, and the Fortune in Middlesex. Nevertheless, the privy council registers, where this order is inserted, also contain distinct evidence that it was not obeyed, even in May 1601; for on the 18th of that month the Lords wrote

2 We may be disposed to assign the following lines to about this time, or a little earlier; they relate to some theatrical wager in which Alleyn, of the Lord Admiral's players, was, for a part named, to be matched against Kempe, of the Lord Chamberlain's servants. By the words "Will's new play" there can be little doubt that some work by Shakespeare was intended; and we know from Heywood's "Hierarchy of the Binned Angels," 1643, that Shakespeare was constantly familiarly called "Will." The document is preserved in the Cottonian Register, B. v. i. 10; and it was first printed in the "Memoirs of Edward Alleyn," p. 13.

"Sweet Nedde, nowe wynee an other wager For thine old friend Alleyn to play, Tarlton himselve thou dost exell, And Beattley beeste, and conquer Knell, If thy work be pulled downe, thou must have all the profit, The moneys downe, the place the Hope; Phillipes shall hide his head and Pope, If thou art not, the publicke shall join thee some other days."

Consequently, Ned Alleyn says, Thou still as macheles Ned shall shyne, If Roscie Richard foames and fumes, The Globe shall have but a poor continuance, If thou dost set; and Willas newe playe Shall beseareat some other days."

3 After his return from Rome, where he was seen in the autumn of 1601.

4 It was at the Fortune that Alleyn seems to have realized so much money in the few first years of the undertaking, that he was able in Nov. 1604 to purchase the manor of Kennington for 2105s. and in the next year, 1605, he purchased the freehold of land in that village, for £120; in two sums, in money of the present day, would be equal to at least £33,000; but it is to be observed that for Dulwich, Alleyn only paid £2000 down, while the remaining sum was left upon mortgaging. In the commencement of the seventeenth century theatrical speculations generally seem to have been highly lucrative. See "The Alleyn Papers," (printed by the Shakespeare Society, p. 226.

To my Lewing good friend and contryman Mr W. Shakespeares.

The defeasance as regards the direction of the letter, lamented by Malone, is in so much importance, because we have proved that Shakespeare was resident in Southwark in 1596; and he probably was so in 1594, because the reasons which we have supposed, induced him to take up his abode there would still be in operation, in as much force as ever.

1 In the garden of this house it is believed that Shakespeare planted a mulberry tree; and as the garden of this house was the traditional site of the Abbey, it is now thought that Shakespeare might have planted one of the mulberry trees, which were called "the mulberry trees of the count of Warwick." In our time we have seen many relics, said to have been formed from one of these mulberry trees, as could hardly have been furnished by all the mulberry trees in the county of Warwick.
to certain magistrates of Middlesex requiring them to put a step to the performance of a play at the Curtain, in which were introduced "some gentlemen of good desert and quality," a reference to the closing of the house, although it was open in defiance of the imperative command of the preceding year. We know also upon other testimony, that not only the Curtain, but theatres on the Bankside, besides the Globe, (where performances were allowed) were then in occasional use. It is fair to presume, therefore, that the order of the 22d June, 1600, was never strictly enforced, and one of the most remarkable circumstances of that time, the little attention, as regards theatricals, that appears to have been paid to the absolute authority of the court. It seems exactly as if restrictive measures had been adopted in order to satisfy the importunity of particular individuals, but that there was no disposition on the part of persons in authority to carry them into execution. Such was probably the fact; for a year and a half after the order of the 22d June had been issued it was renewed, but, as far as we can learn, with just as little effect as before.

Besides the second edition of "Romeo and Juliet" in 1599, (which was most likely printed from a play house manuscript, being very different from the mutilated and manufactured copy of 1597) five plays by our great dramatist found their way to the press in 1600, viz. "Titus Andronicus," (which we have before remarked had probably been originally published in 1594) "The Merchant of Venice," "The winter's tale," "Henry IV," part ii., and "Much Ado about Nothing." The last only was not mentioned by Meres in 1598; and as to the periods when we may suppose the others to have been written, we must refer the reader to our several Introductions, where we have given the existing information upon the subject. "The Chronicle History of Henry V." also came out in the same year, but without the name of Shakespeare upon the title-page; and it is more probable that it was originated and garbled by the representation of the play, as it proceeded from the author's pen, than the "Romeo and Juliet" of 1597. Whether any of the managers of theatres at this date might not sometimes be concerned in selling impressions of dramas, we have no sufficient means of deciding; but we do not believe it, and we are satisfied that dramatic authors in general were content with disposing of their plays to the several companies, and looked for no employment to be derived from publication. We are not without something like proof that actors now and then sold their parts in plays to booksellers, and thus, by the combination of them and other assistance, editions of popular plays were surreptitiously printed.

We ought not to pass over without notice a circumstance which happened in 1600, and is connected with the question of the authorized or unauthorized publication of Shakespeare's plays. In that year a quarto impression of a play, called "The first part of the true and honourable History of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle, the good Lord Cobham," came out, on the title-page of which the name of William Shakespeare appeared at length. We find by Henslowe's Diary that this drama was in fact the authorship of four poets, Anthony Munday, Thomas Middleton, Robert Willyams, and Richard Hathaway; and to attribute it to Shakespeare was evidently a mere trick of the bookseller, Thomas Pavier, in the hope that it would be bought as his work. Malone remarked upon this fraud, but he was not aware when he wrote, that it had been detected and corrected at the time, for since his day more than one copy of the "First Part,

Death of John Shakespeare in 1601. Performance of "Twelfth Night" in September, 1600. The first edition of Shakespeare's Plays; and Barbage; Manningham's Diary in the British Museum the authority for it. "Othello," acted by Barbage and others at the Lord Keeper's in August, 1602. Death of Elizabeth, and Arrival of James I. at Theobalds. English actors in Scotland in 1595. The Plays of Shakespeare in 1600; enlarged, and their value estimated. The freedom of Aberdeen conferred in 1601 upon Laurence Fletchur, the leader of the English company in Scotland. Probability that Shakespeare never was in Scotland.

The father of our great poet died in the autumn of 1601 and he was buried at Stratford-upon-Avon. He seems to have left no will, and if he possessed any property, in land or houses, not made over to his family, we know not how it was divided. Of the eight children which his wife, Mary Arden, had brought him, the following were then alive, and might be present at the funeral—William, Gilbert, Joan, Richard, and Edmund. The latter years of William Shakespeare (who, if born in 1530 as Malone supposed, was in his seventy-first year) were doubtless easy and comfortable, and the prosperity of his eldest son must have placed him beyond the reach of pecuniary difficulties.

Early in the spring of 1602, we meet with one of those rare facts which distinctly show how uncertain all conjecture must be respecting the date when Shakespeare's dramas were originally written and produced. Malone and Tyrwhit, in 1790, conjectured that "Twelfth Night" had been written in 1614; in his second edition Malone altered it to

"For though he here inclosed bee in plaister,

The eight lines in Nicholls's "Progresses of James I." are from Drummond's Poem, and there can be little doubt that the whole speech was from his pen.

"It was a charge to Sir Robert Greene, that, by driven the pressure of necessity, he had on one occasion raised money by making a double sale of his play called "Orlando Furioso," 1594, first to the players and afterwards to the booksellers. This may have been the fact, but it was unquestionably an exception to the ordynary rale

"See the Introduction to "Henry IV," Part I.

"On the 8th September, as we find by the subsequent entry in the banish register—

"1601, September 3. Mr. Johnes Shakespeare" 1607, and Shakespere, weighing the evidence in favour of one date and of the other, thought neither correct, and fixed upon the year 1602 in which the Amsterdam copy was fully printed.
The truth is, that we have irrefragable evidence, from an eye-witness, of its existence on 2nd February, 1602, when it was played at the Reader's Feast in the Middle Temple.
This eye-witness was a barrister of the name of Mannonman, who left a Diary behind him, which has been preserved in the British Museum; but as we have inserted his account of the plot in our introductory to the comedy, (Vol. iii. of the published edition of 1661) it is required here no more mention of the circumstances. However, in another part of the same manuscript, he gives an anecdote of Shakespeare and Burbage, which we quote, without further remark than that it has been supposed to depend upon the authority of Nicholas Tooke, but on looking at the original record again, we doubt whether it came from any such source. A "Mr. Toawe" is repeatedly introduced as a person from whom Mannonman received information; and we think we are justified in that name, though blotted, seems to be placed at the end of the paragraph, certainly without the addition of any Christian name. This circumstance may make some difference as regards the authenticity of the story, because we know not who Mr. Toawe might be, while we are sure that Nicholas Tooke was a fellow-actor in the same company as both the individuals to whom the story relates. At the same time it was, very possibly, a mere error. Shakespeare and players of that sort was often the case, in some older jokes;
and applied to Shakespeare and Burbage, because their Christian names happened to be William and Richard.

Elizabeth, from the commencement of her reign, seems to have extended her personal patronage, as well as her public countenance, to the drama; and scarcely a Christmas or a Shrovetide can be pointed out during the forty-five years she occupied the throne where there were not dramatic entertainments either at home or abroad. Whitehall, Greenwich, Nun-meuch, Richmond, or Windsor. The latest visit she paid to any of her nobility in the country was to the Lord Keeper, Sir Thomas Egerton, at Harefield, only nine or ten months before her death, and it was upon this occasion, in the very beginning of August, 1602, that "Othello" (having been used for her amusement, and the Lord Chamberlain's players brought down to the Lord Keeper's seat in Hertfordshire for the purpose) was represented before her.
In this production, it is said, with perfect propriety, "Twelfth Night," all that we positively know that such drama was performed, and we are left to infer that it was a new play, from other circumstances, as well as from the fact that it was customary on such festivities to exhibit some drama that, as a novelty, was then attracting public attention.
Hence we are led to believe, that "Twelfth Night" (not printed until it formed part of the folio of 1623) was written and performed in the latter part of 1601; and that "Othello" (first published in 4to. 1622) came from the author's pen about a year afterwards.

In the memorandum ascertaining the performance of "Othello" at Harefield, the company by which it was represented is called "Burbages Players," that designation arising out of the fact, that he was looked upon as the leader of the association; he was certainly its most celebrated member, and was very similar to the "senior author" or "principal player" of the famous company of the late Queen. Whether Shakespeare had any and what part in the tragedy, either then or upon other occasions, is not known; but we do not think any argument, one way or the other, is to be drawn from the fact that the company, when at Harefield, does not seem to have been under his immediate government.
Whether he was or was not one of the "players" in the "Expedition of the Argosy," we only entertain a doubt that as an actor, and moreover as one "excellent in his quality, he must have been often seen and applauded by Elizabeth.
Chettle informs us after her death, in a passage already quoted, that she had "opened her royal ear to his lays;" but this was obviously in his capacity of dramatist, and we have no direct evidence to establish that Shakespeare had ever performed at Court.

James I reached Thetford in his journey from Edinburgh to London, on the 7th May, 1603. Before he quitted his own capital he had had various opportunities of wittnessing the performances of English actors; and it is interesting, but at the same time a difficult question, whether Shakespeare had ever appeared before him, or, in other words, whether our great dramatist had ever visited Scotdon! We have certainly no affirmative testimony upon

Harry shall not be seen as King or Prince,
They died with thee, dear Dick,—
Not to revive again. Jeronimo
Of English cause to move men to his fate.
They cannot call thee from thy naked bed
By hollow outcry; and Anthony's dead.
Edward, too, is in the midst of these amends:—
If in the course of my inquiries, I have been unacknowledged (I may perhaps say)
'to find anything which represents our great dramatist in a less favorable light, I am far from being here committed to the lament it, but I do not therefore feel myself at liberty to conceal and suppress the fact.' The anecdote is this.
"Upon a truce when Burbage, played Rich. 3, there was a citizen grew so far in liking with him, that before she went from the play, she appointed him to come that night unto her, by the name of Rich. 3. Shakespeare, overhearing their conclusion, went before, was entertained, and at his game ere Burbage came. Then message being brought, that Rich. the 3. was at the door, Shakespere came hither to be made, that Will was the Conqueror was before Rich. the 3. Shakespeare's name William."

This story may be a piece of scandal, but there is no doubt that Burbage was the younger Richard of the late Queen. The visiting players home to supper, see Middleton's "Mad World, my Master," Act v. sc. 2, in "Dodd's Old Plays," last edit. The play is called in the title, "Titus Andronicus; or, the Conquest and Recovery of Dacie."

Amends for Ladies," Act iii. sc. 4, in the supplementary volume to "Dodd's Old Plays," published in 1629.

ers," printed by the Camden Society, 1840, p. 345.

1 In a former note we have inserted the names of some of the principal players of the time, as required by Burbage, as they are given in the Euphues upon his death, in 1619.

The MS. from which the above lines are copied seems, at least in one place, defective, but it might be cured by the addition of the words," and not long since." The MS. from which the above lines are copied seems, at least in one place, defective, but it might be cured by the addition of the words: "and not long since."

"You poets all, brave Shakespeare, Johnson, Greene, Bestow your time to write for England's Queen," &c.
 Excepting for this notice of "brave Shakespeare," the production is utterly contemptible, and must have been the work of some of the "pobulm and underviloe" of poetry, who, according to a poem in Histle's "England's Mourning Garment," had put forth upon the occasion the rude rhymes, and metrical reams."
the point, beyond what may be derived from some passages in "Macbeth," descriptive of particular localities, with which passages our readers must be familiar: there is, however, ample room for conjecture; and although, on the whole, we are inclined to think that he was never north of the Tweed, it is indisputable that the company to which he belonged, or a part of it, had performed in Edinburgh and Aberdeen, and he now doubtless in some intermediate places. We will merely state the existing proofs of this fact.

The year 1599 has been commonly supposed the earliest date at which an association of English actors was in Scotland; but it can be shown beyond contradiction that "her Majesty's players," meaning those of Queen Elizabeth, were in Edinburgh ten years earlier. In 1589, Ashby, the ambassador extraordinary from England to James VI. of Scotland, thus writes to Lord Burghley, under date of the 22d October:

"My Lord Bothwell begins to show himself willing and ready of his Majesty's pleasure, and desires hereafter to be thought of as he shall deserve: he sheweth great kindness to our nation, using her Majesty's Players and Condottiers with all courtesy." 1

In 1589, the date of Ashby's dispatch, Shakespeare had quitted Stratford about three years, and the question is, what company was intended to be designated as "her Majesty's players." It is an admitted fact, that in 1583 the Queen selected twelve leading performers from the theatrical servants of some of her nobility, and they were afterwards called "her Majesty's players," and we know, that in 1590 the Queen had two companies acting under her name: in the autumn of the preceding year, it is likely that one of these associations had been sent to the Scottish capital for the amusement of the young king, and the company formed in 1583 may have been divided into two bodies for this express purpose. Sir John Sinclair, in his "Statistical Account of Scotland," established that a company of the Queen's players was in Perth in June, 1589; and although we are without evidence that they were English players, we may fairly enough assume that they were the same company spoken of by Ashby, as having been used courteously by Lord Bothwell in the October following.

We have no means of ascertainign the names of any of the players, nor indeed, excepting the leaders Laneham and Dutton, can we state who were the members of the Queen's companies in 1590. Shakespeare might be one of them; but, if so, we cannot claim that division of the company which was dispatched to Scotland.

It is not at all improbable that English actors, having found their way north of the Tweed in 1589, would speedily repeat their visit; but the next we hear of them is, not until after a long interval, in the autumn of 1599. The public records of Scotland show that in October, 1599, (exactly the same season as that in which, ten years earlier, they are spoken of by Ashby) 43d. Excise, and desires had been delivered to "his Highness' self," to be given to "the English comedians," in the next month they were paid 41L 12s. at various times. In December they received no less than 338L. 6s. 8d.; in April, 1600, 10l.; and in December, 1601, the royal bounty amounted to 400. 2

Thus we see, that English players were in Scotland from October, 1599, to December, 1601, a period of more than two years. 3 These years were certainly spent in the production of Shakespeare was one of the association. We cannot, however, entertain a doubt that Laurence Fletcher, (whose name, we shall see presently, stands first in the patent granted by King James on his arrival in London) was the leader of the association which performed in Edinburgh and elsewhere, because it appears from the registers of the town council of Aberdeen, that on the 9th October, 1601, the English players received 32 marks as a gratuity, and that on 22d October the freedom of the city was conferred upon Laurence Fletcher, who is especially styled "comedian to his Majesty." The company had arrived in Aberdeen, and received by the public authorities, under the sanction of a special letter from James VI.; and, although they were in fact the players of the Queen of England, they might on this account be deemed and treated as the players of the King of Scotland.

Our chief reason for thinking it unlikely that Shakespeare would have accompanied his fellows to Scotland, at all events between October, 1599, and December, 1601, is, that, as the principal writer for the company to which he was attached, he could not well have been spared; and because we have good ground for believing that about that period he must have been unusually busy in the composition of plays. No fewer than five dramas seem, as far as evidence, positive or conjectural, can be obtained, to belong to the interval between 1598 and 1602; and the proof appears to us tolerably conclusive, that "Henry V.;" "Twelfth Night," and "As You Like It" were performed in 1599 and 1600. 4 Besides, as far as we can be able to decide such a point, the company to which our great dramatist belonged continued to perform in London; for although a detachment under Laurence Fletcher may have been sent to Scotland, the main body of the association called the Lord Chamberlain's players exhibited at court at the usual seasons in 1599, 1600, and 1601. Therefore, if Shakespeare visited Scotland at all, we may say that he must have been there at an earlier period, and there was undoubtedly ample time between the years 1599 and 1599 for his to have been done so. Nevertheless, we have no tidings that any English actors were in any part of Scotland during those ten years.

CHAPTER XV.

Proclamation by James I. against plays on Sunday. Renewal of theatrical performances in London. Patent of May 17th, 1603, to Laurence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, and others. Royal patronage of three companies of actors. Shakespeare's additional purchases in Stratford-upon-Avon. Shakespeare in London in the autumn of 1600; and a performance for the office of Master of the Queen's Revels. Characters Shakespeare is known to have performed. His retirement from the stage, as an actor, after April 9th, 1604.

Before he even set foot in London, James I. thought it necessary to put a stop to dramatic performances on Sunday. This fact has never been mentioned, because the proclamation he issued at Thaehold on 7th May, containing the paragraphs for this purpose, has only recently come to light. There had been a long pending struggle between the Puritans and the players upon this point, and each party seemed by turns to gain the victory; for various orders were, from time to time, issued from authority, forbidding exhibitions of the kind on the Sabbath; and those orders had been uniformly more or less contradicted. We may suppose, that strong remonstrances having been made to the King by some of those who attended him from Scotland, a clause with this special object was appended to a proclamation directed against monopolies and legal extortions. The mere circumstance of the company in which this paragraph,

1 Between September, 1599, and September, 1600, Queen Elizabeth had issued a patent to two gentlemen of England, as a present of the King's bounty, the new settlement of his marriage, a splendid mask, with all the necessary appurtenances, and we find it charged for in the accounts of the department of the works for that year. See "History of English Drama," Part II. (1575-1603), vol. i. p. 270. It is most likely that the actors from London accompanied this gift.

2 From MS. Harel 447, being copies of despatches from Mr. Ashby to different members of the Council in London. We are indebted to Sir N. Hill for directing our attention to these curious notices.

3 A year or two before, an extract of a letter from the Revels' Accounts," "printed from the Shakespeare Society," p. xxxii.

4 For these particulars of payments, and some other points connected with them, we are indebted to Mr. Laing, of Edinburgh, who has made extensive and valuable collections for a history of the Stage in Scotland.

5 The accounts of the Revels' department at this period are not so complete as usual, and in Mr. F. Cunningham's book we found no details of any kind between 1597 and 1601. The accounts for the first years of the new reign have been given by the actor, the members of the Earl's Company, and we believe, to the companies of his Majesty. We are thus enabled to judge of the performance of the productions of Shakespeare, and we earnestly hope that the missing accounts may yet be recovered.
against dramatic performances on Sunday, is found, seems to prove that it was an after-thought, and that it was inserted, because his counsellors had urged that James might be pleased with a new expression of public opinion; and perhaps some put an end to the profession. 1

The King, having issued this command, arrived at the Charter-house on the same day, and all the theatrical companies, which had temporarily suspended their performances, began to act again on the 9th May. Permission to this effect was given by James I, and communicated through the ordinary channel to the players, who soon found reason to rejoice in the measure, for in the sign that followed, days after he reached London he took the Lord Chamberlain's players into his pay and patronage, calling them "the King's servants," a title they always afterwards enjoyed. For it is purpose he issued a warrant, under the privy seal, for making out a patent under the great seal, authorizing the nine following actors, and others, to perform in his name, not only at the Globe on the Bankside, but in any part of the kingdom, and for a yearly sum of 1607, the first year of his reign; and perhaps in May, 1603, was an old man, for he died in the February following. Kempe had joined the Lord Admiral's players soon after the opening of the Fortune, on his return from the Continent, for we find him in Henslowe's pay in 1602. Nicholas Tooley had also perhaps withdrawn from the association at this date, or his name would hardly have been omitted in the patent, as an established actor and man of some property and influence; but he, as well as Kempe, not long subsequently rejoined the association with which he was connected, and perhaps had taken new steps in his profession.

We may assume, perhaps, in the absence of any direct testimony, that Laurence Fletcher did not acquire his prominence in the company by any remarkable excellence as an actor. He had been in Scotland, and had performed with his associates before James in 1599, 1600, and 1601, and in the latter year he had been registered as "his Majesty's Comedian" at Aberdeen. He might, therefore, have been a familiar figure in the King's company; and perhaps, in the association, he perhaps owed his place in the patent of May, 1603, to that circumstance. 1 The name of Shakespeare comes next, and as author, actor, and sharer, we cannot be surprised at the situation he occupies. His progress upward, in connexion with the profession, had been gradual and uniform; in 1589 he was twelfth in a company of sixteen members: in 1596 he was fifth in a company of eight members; and in 1603 he was second in a company of nine members.

The degree of encouragement and favour extended to actors by James I in the very commencement of his reign is remarkable. Not only did he take the Lord Chamberlain's players unto his own service, but the Queen adopted the company which had acted under the name of the Earl of Worcester, of which the celebrated dramatist, Thomas Heywood, was an actor, and in a letter of that of the Lord Admiral, at the head of which was Edward Alleyn, the founder of Dulwich College. These three royal associations, as they may be termed, were independent of others under the patronage of individual noblemen.

The policy of this course at such a time is evident, and James I, seems to have been impressed with the truth that the patent under the great seal, made out in consequence of this warrant, bare date two days afterwards.

Nothing seems to be known of the birth or origin of Laurence Fletcher, [who is saId by some to be an elder brother of John Fletcher], the dramatist, "Bishop Fletcher, the father, died on 18 June, 1589, having made his will in October, 1594, before he was translated from Worcester to London. This document seems never to have been examined, but it appears from it, as Mr. P. Cunningham informs us, that he had no fewer than nine children, although he only mentions his sons Nathaniel and John by name. He died poor, and among the Lansdown MSS. is one, entitled "Reasons to move her Majesty to some commissiion towards the maintenance of the late Bishop's son, who is not printed in Birch's "Memoires." He incurred the lasting displeasure of Queen Elizabeth by marrying, for his second wife, Lady Baker of Ashborne, a man of more rank than himself. He may believe general report, and a satirical poem of the time, handed down only in manuscript, which begins thus:

The pride of prelacy, which now long since was banished with the Pope, is said to of late have arriv'd at Brittows, and from thence By Worcester into London brought his state.

It afterwards goes thus:

The Romanes Turquin, in his folly blind, And could no longer be contented to bid A Laos make; But our proud Turquins bear a braver mind, And of a Laos doth a Laurece make.

We cannot venture to quote the coarse epithets liberally bestowed upon Laurence Fletcher, but our author, thence, tells us of his lines:

'But yet, if any will the reason find, Why he that look'd so lightly as a steer, Should bear the name of bear; And take the leavings of the common people.'

We ought to have mentioned that the poem is headed "Bishop Fletcher and my Lady Baker." The Bishop had buried his first wife, Elizabeth, at Chelsea Church in December, 1592. Nathaniel Fletcher, mentioned above, was married with his brother John in his person, during his absence from London, to Elizabeth, who was a sister to William White; but who Mrs. White might be, or what was the process of nature of Nath. Fletcher's "survived, we have no information.

"The abode of stage-players, withereth, I find the country much troubled, may easily be reformed, they having no commission to play in any place without licence; and therefore by your willingness if they be not continued, you may soon be rid of them."

1 The paragraph is in these terms, and we quote them because they have not been noticed by any historian of our stage.

"And for that we are informed, that there hath been hereof too great neglect in this kingdom of keeping the Sabbath day; for the better observing of the same and avoiding all impieties propagation, We do strictly charge and command that no Bear-baying, Bul-baring, Entertaining, common Players, or other like disorderly and unlawful entries or, passages, be frequent, kept, or used at any time hereafter upon the Sabbath day. Given at our Court at Theobalds, the 7th day of May, in the first year of our Reign." 2

2 This fact we have upon the authority of Henslowe's Diary. See the Henslowe Diary and Account Book, vol. 1, p. 346.

3 It runs verbatim et litteratim thus:

By the King.

"Right trusty and wellbeloved Counsellors, we greet you well, and will and command you, that under your privie Seal in your custody, for the time being, you cause our letters to be directed to the keeper of the Seal and his successors in Scotland, commanding him under the great seal, to cause our letters to be made patents in forme following: James, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of the United Dominions of the United Netherlands, Constables, Hendnorghers, and other our office and loving subjects greeting. Know ye, that we of our special grace, certaine knowledge, and more motion have licensed, and authorized, and presented due licence and authorize, these our servants, Lawrence Fletcher, William Shakespeare, Richard Burbage, Augustine Phillipps, John Hemmings, Hene Condell, William Sly, Robert Army, Richard Cowley, and Nathaniel Kempe, to be the nine following Actors, and others, to appear in the presence of our father the King, to wit and cause the arts and faculty of playing Comedies, Tragedies, Histories, Enterludes, Morals, Pastoral, Stage pieces, and such other like, as the King with his Councils shall from time to time, for the recreation of our loving subjects, as for our solace and pleasure, when we shall think good to see them, during our pleasure. And we do hereby discharge, release, and absolve them, and each of them, and every individual of them, from all former patents, for the use and exercise of such matters, within our county of Surry, as also within any town hall, or mort mall, or other convenient places within the liberties & freemen of any cities, towns, parishes, or suburbs whatsoever within our said realms and dominions. Willing and commanding you, and every of you, as you tender our pleasure, not to suffer them to use any of their liberties, nor of any of your liberty, or of your place, or of any place, for any such purpose of recreation of our loving subjects, or as for our solace and pleasure, during our said pleasure, but also to be aiding and assisting them, if any wrong be to them offered. And to allow them such former convenience, as you shall be given to make, they being as well, and also what further favour you shall shew to these our servants for our sake, we shall take kindly at your hands. And these our letters shall be your sufficient warrant and discharge in this behalf. Given under our Seale at our manner of Greenewich, the seaventeenth day of May in the first year of our reign of England, France, and Ireland, A.D. 1596, six s. x. x. p. per lake." 4 the passage in "Hamlet," (brought out, as we apprehend, very shortly before he came to the throne) where it is said of these "abstracts and brief chronicles of the time," that it is "better to have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live." James made himself sure of their good report, and an epigram, attributed to Shakespeare, has been preserved on some stone as a grateful return for the royal condescension bestowed upon the stage, and upon those who were connected with it. We copy it from a coeval manuscript in our possession, which seems to have belonged to a curious accumulator of matters of the kind, and which also contains an unknown production by Dekker, as well as various other pieces by dramatists and poets of the time. The lines are entitled, "SHAKESPEARE ON THE KING."

"Crowns have their compass, length of days their date, Triumphant their tomb, felicity their fate: But knowledge makes a king most like his Maker."

But knowledge makes a king most like his Maker.

We have seen these lines in more than one other old manuscript, and as they were constantly attributed to Shakespeare, and in the form in which we have given them, are in no respect unworthy of his pen, we have little doubt of their authenticity. Having established his family in the "great house" called "New Place" in his native town in 1597, by the purchase of it from Herecles Underhill, Shakespeare seems to have contemplated considerable additions to his property there. In May, 1602, he laid out £282 upon 107 acres of land, which he bought of William and John Combe, and attached to his tenancy by indenture and rent. This transaction part is in existence, bearing date 1st May, 1602, but to neither of them is the signature of the poet affixed; and it seems that he was being absent, his brother Gilbert was his immediate agent in the transaction, and to Gilbert Shakespeare the property was delivered to the use of William Shakespeare. In the autumn of the same year he became the owner of a copyhold tenement (called a coagium in the indenture) of seven acres in the parish of Stratford-upon-Avon; and this purchase was subsequent to a grant of all that part of the Undershall property to him by Walter Gesty. In November of the next year he gave Herences Underhill £290 for a messuage, barn, granary, garden, and orchard close thereon, in Stratford; but in the original fine, preserved in the Chapter House, Westminster, the precise situation is not mentioned. In 1603, therefore, Shakespeare's property, in or near Stratford-upon-Avon, besides what he might have bought of, or inherited from, his father, consisted of New Place, with 107 acres of land, an addition made by the father in Walker's Street; and the additional messuage, which he had recently purchased from Underhill.

Whether our great dramatist was in London at the period when the new king ascended the throne, we have no means of knowing, but that he was so in the following autumn we have positive proof; for in a letter written by Mrs. Alleyn, (the wife of Edward Alleyn, the actor) to her husband, then in the country, dated 20th October, 1603, she tells us that she had seen "Mr. Shakespeare of the Globe" in Southwark. At this date, according to the same authority, most of the companies of players who had left London for the province, on account of the prevalence of the plague, and the consequent cessation of dramatic performances, had returned to the metropolis; and it is not at all unlikely that Shakespeare was one of those who had returned, having found an opportunity of visiting his family at Stratford-upon-Avon.

Under Elizabeth the Children of the Chapel (originally the choir-boys of the royal establishment) had become an acknowledged company of players, and these, besides her association of adult performers, Queen Anne took under her immediate patronage, with the style of the Children of her Majesty's Revels, requiring that the pieces they produced should be presented to the Queen before the approval of the celebrated poet Samuel Daniel. The instrument of their appointment bears date 30th January, 1603-4; and from a letter from Daniel to his patron, Sir Thomas Egerton, preserved among his papers, we may perhaps conclude that Shakespeare, as well as Michael Drayton, had been candidates for the post of master of the Queen's revels; he says in it, "I cannot but know, that I am lesse deserving than some that sued by other of the nobility to her Majesty for this recompence; but I am most of all pleased after introducing the name of his good friend," Drayton, he adds the following, which, we apprehend, refers with sufficient distinctness to Shakespeare:—"It seemeth to my humble judgement that one who is the author of plays, new dayly presented on the public stages of London, and the possessor of no small gains, and moreover himself an actor in the King's company of comedians, could not with reason pretend to be Master of the Queen's Revels, such being a sort of countenance or a back-scraper, on whose aid I should not only be required, but should be compelled by law, and by the ordinance of the council of the College of Physicians, to take up with me in my present office, which I shall chiefly concern myself in, without the assistance of such a person as myself." This objection would have applied with equal force to Drayton, had we not every reason to believe that before this date he had ceased to be a dramatic author. He had been a writer for Henslowe and Alleyn's company during several years, first at the Rose, and afterwards at the Fortune; but he seems to have relinquished that species of composition about a year prior to the demise of Elizabeth, the last piece in which he was concerned of, of which we have any intelligence, being noticed by Henslowe under date of May, 1602: this play was called "The Harpies," and he was assisted in it by Dekker, Middleton, Webster, and Munday.

It is highly probable that Shakespeare was a suitor for this office, in contemplation of a speedy retirement as no actor. We have already spoken of the desirability of his permanent place on the stage, and to the tradition that he was the original player of the part of the Ghost in "Hamlet." Another character he is said to have sustained is Admum, in "As you like it," and his brother Gilbert, (who in 1602 had received, on behalf William Shakespeare, the 107 acres of land purchased from William and John Combe) who probably survived the Restoration, is supposed to have been the author of this tradition. He had acted also in Ben Jonson's "Every Man In His Humour," in 1598, after (as we believe) introducing it to the company; and he is supposed to have written part of, as well as known to have written, from being imputed to him in that volume, and by a passage in "Monsieur Katski, a Roome," he is evidenced to be acquainted with the connexion between the Devil and John Combe, or John of Comber (as he is there called) was much older:—"She he had his rest at the date, the devil and John of Comber" (the Devil and John Combe). There is no ground for supposing that Shakespeare was ever on bad terms with any of the Combes, and in his will he expressly left his sword to Mr. Thomas Combe. A MS. of that will now before us, we find the following given as an epitaph upon Sir William Stowe:—

"Hear ten in the hundred lies dead and ingraved: But a hut between his son and his name.

And the couplet is printed in no very different form in "The More the Merrier," by H. F., 1608, as well as in Camden's "Remains." A coeval copy of the court-roll is in the hands of the Shakespeare Society. Malone has seen it, and published a copy of it, but it was his intention to have used it in his unfinished Life of Shakespeare. See the "Memoirs of Edward Alleyn," printed for the Shakespeare Society, p. 63.

"See the introduction to "As you like it."" performed in the same author's "Sejanus," in 1603. This is the last we hear of him upon the stage, but that he continued a member of the company until April 9, 1604, we have the evidence of a document preserved at Dulwich College, where the names of the King's players are enumerated in the following order:—Barbage, Shakespeare, Fletcher, Phillips, Condell, Heminge, Armin, Sly, Cowley, Oster, and Day. If Shakespeare had undertaken any theatrical writing, we need not hesitate in deciding that he quittd that department of the profession very shortly afterwards.

CHAPTER XVI

No sooner had our great dramatist ceased to take part in the public performances of the King's players, than the company appears to have thrown off the restraint by which it had been usually controlled ever since its formation, and to have produced plays which were objec tions to the court, as well as offensive to private persons. Shakespeare, from his abilities, station, and experience, must have possessed great influence with the body at large, and due deference, we may readily believe, was shown to his knowledge and judgment in the selection and acceptance of plays sent in for approbation by authors of the time. The contrast between the conduct of the association immediately before, and immediately after his retirement, would lead us to conclude, not only that he was a man of prudence and discretion, but that the exercise of these qualities had in many instances kept his fellows from incurring the displeasure of persons in power, and from exciting the animosity of particular individuals. We suppose Shakespeare to have ceased to act in the summer of 1604, and in the winter of that very year we find the King's players giving offence to "some great counsellors" by performing a play upon the subject of the murder of Falstaff. The fact has been upon the evidence of one of Sir R. Winwood's correspondents, John Chamberlain, who, in a letter dated 18th December, 1604, uses these expressions:—The tragedy of Gowry, with all action and actors, hath been twice represented by the King's players, with exceeding concourse of all sorts of people; but whether the matter or manner be not well handled, or that it be thought unfit that princes should be played upon the stage in their lifetime, I hear that some great counsellors are much displeased with it, and so, if it is thought, shall be forbidden." Whether it was so forbidden we do not hear upon the same or any other authority, but no such drama has come down to us.

In the next year (at what particular part of it is not stated) Sir Leonard Halden, then Lord Mayor of London, backed no doubt by his brethren of the corporation, made a complaint against the same company, "that Kempe, (who at this date had rejoined the associat5n) Armin, and others, players (and not personally) were come upon their stage one or more of the worshipful aldermen of the city of London, to their great scandal and the lessening of their authority," and the interposition of the privy council to prevent the abuse was therefore solicited. What was done in consequence, if anything were done does not appear in any extant document.

In the spring of the next year still graver charge was brought against the body of actors of whom Shakespeare until very recently, had been one; and it originated in no less a person than the French ambassador. George Chapman, had written two plays upon the history and execution of the Duke of Biron, containing, in the shape in which they were originally produced on the stage such matter that M. Be umo, the representative of the King of France in London, thought it necessary to remonstrate against the repetition, and the performance of it was prohibited: as soon however as the court had quitted London, the King's players persisted in acting it; in consequence of which three of the players were arrested, (their names are not given) but the author made his escape. These two dramas were printed in 1608, and again in 1626; and looking through them, we are at a loss to discover anything, beyond the historical incidents, which could have given offence; but the truth certainly is, that all the objectionable portions were cut out; the piece, though, in the hands of the French ambassador, to his court, that one of the dramas originally contained a scene in which the Queen of France and Mademoiselle Vernueil were introduced, the former, after having abused her, giving the latter a box on the ear.

This information was conveyed to Paris under the date of the 5th April, 1606; and the French ambassador, appear-edly in order to have his letters acquainted with the lawless character of dramatic performances at that date in England, adds a very singular paragraph, proving that the King's players, only a few days before they had brought the Queen of France upon the stage, had not hesitated to introduce upon the same boards their own reigning sovereign in a most unseemly manner, making him swear violently, and beat a gentleman for interfering with his known propensity for the chaste. This undoubtedly is a boldness on the part of the players; but, nevertheless, they were not prohibited from acting, until M. Beaumot had directed the attention of the public authorities to the insult offered to the Queen of France: then, an order was issued putting a stop to the acting of all plays in London; but, according to the same authority, the companies had clubbed their money, and, attacking James I. on his weak side, had offered a large sum to be allowed to continue. The French ambassador himself apprehended that the appeal to the King's pecuniary

1 From lines preceding it in the 4to, 1605, we know that it was brought out at the Globe, and Ben Jonson admits that it was recently performed.

2 We may notice two productions of this great and various author, one of which is mentioned by Ant. Wood (Ath. Oxon. edit. 1704, vol. i. p. 250), and the other by Mr. Bsterne (Anecdotes of the English Stage, 2nd edit. vol. iv. p. 276, edit. 2do.), on the authority merely of the stationers' registers; but none of our literary antiquaries seem to have been able to meet with them. They are both in existence. The first is a defence of his "Andromeda, Libera," 1614, which he wrote in celebation of the marriage of the Duke of Somerset and the Countess of Roos, which Chapman tells us had been "most maliciously mis-terpreted," it is called "A Free and OFFensive Justification" of his poem, and it was printed in 1614. It is chiefly in prose, but at the end in a dialogue in rhyme, between Pheme and Theodina, the last being meant for Chapman: Wood only supposes that Chapman wrote it, but if he could have read it he would have entertained no so-cute. It appears that Somerset himself had conceived that "Andromeda Libera," was a covert attack upon him, and from this notion Chapman was anxious to relieve himself. The poetical dialogue is thus opened by Pheme, and sufficiently explains the object of the writer.

3 "He, no 'Theodina' you must not dreame
Y're thus dismast in peace: soon too extremes
The auditors' song hath strange delight in's ears,
Nay, in your haven you shipwacks: y'are undes.
Your Perceous is dispeast'd, and sleighteth now to prove you to work as late, and as servile
The peoples god-voice hath exclam'd a way
Your mistie cloude; and he sees, cleare as day,
His purpose to quicken, and to incline you.
Wishing unblest your unproper song."
wants would be effectual, and that permission, under certain restrictions, would not long be withheld.

Whatever encomiums Shakespeare had derived from the Blackfriars or the Globe theatres, as an actor merely, we may be tolerably assured was only a small portion of his genius. He would thus be able to devote more of his time to dramatic composition, and, as he continued a sharer in the two undertakings, perhaps his income on the whole was not much lessened. Certainly it is, that in 1605 he was in possession of a considerable sum, which he was anxious to invest advantageously in property in or near the place of his birth. Whatever may have been the circumstances under which he quitted Stratford, he always seems to have contemplated a permanent settlement, and it seems even to have constantly turned in the direction of his birth-place. As long as before January, 1598, he had been advised "to deal in the matter of titles" of Stratford;1 but perhaps at that date, having recently purchased New Place, he was not in sufficient funds for the purpose, or possibly the party in possession of the lease of the tithe, though not unwilling to dispose of it, required more than it was deemed worth.

At all events, nothing was done on the subject for more than a year after that, and nothing for the whole space of seven years before Shakespeare, who is described as "of Stratford-upon-Avon, gentleman," executing an indenteure for the purchase of the unexpired term of a long lease of the great tithes of "corn, grain, blade, and hay," and of the small tithes of "wool, lamb, and other small and privy tithes, herbage, oblations," &c., in Stratford, old Stratford, Bishopston, and Welcombe, in the county of Warwick. The vendor was Raphle Hulme, of Ipsley, Esquire; and from the draft of the deed, now before us,2 we learn that the original lease, dated as far back as 1539, was "for four score and twelve years;" so that in 1605 it had still twenty-six years to run, and for this our great dramatist agreed to pay 410L: by the receipt, contained in the same deed, it appears that he paid the whole of the money before it was executed by the parties.

He might very fitly be described as of Stratford-upon-Avon, because he had there not only a substantial, settled residence for his family, but he was the owner of considerable property, both in land and houses, in the town and neighbourhood; and he had been before so described in 1602, when he bought the 107 acres of William and John Combe, which he annexed to his dwelling of New Place.

A spurious edition of "Hamlet" having been published in 1604,3 a more authentic copy came out in the next year, containing much that had been omitted, and more that had been added. The last of the present series of editions, we believe, that Shakespeare, individually, had anything to do with this second and more correct impression, and we doubt much whether it was authorized by the company, which seems at all times to have done its utmost to prevent the appearance of plays in print, lest to a certain extent the public curiosity should thereby be satisfied.

The point is, of course, liable to dispute, but we have little doubt that "Henry VIII." was represented very soon after the accession of James I, to whom and to whose family it certainly drew a higher price than "Macbeth," having been written in 1605, we suppose that it had been produced at the Globe in the spring of 1608. Although it related to Scottish annals, it was not like the play of Gozury's Conspiracy (mentioned by Chamblerine at the close of 1603), founded, to use Von Raumer's words, "upon recent history," and instead of running the slightest risk of giving offence, many of the sentiments and allusions in it werestocked, especially to the "two-fold balls and treble sceptres," in Act iv. scene 1, must have been highly acceptable to the King. It has been supposed, upon the authority of Sheffield Duke of Buckingham, that King James with his own hand wrote a letter to Shakespeare in return for the compliment paid to him in "Macbeth;" the Duke of Buckingham is said to have had Davenan's evidence for this anecdote, which was first told in print in the advertisement to Lutold's edition of Shakespeare's Poems in 1710.4 The assertion that Shakespeare was 1679 or 1714,5 so that, at all events, he did not adopt it; and it seems very improbable that James I should have so far confounded, and very probable that the writer of Lutold's advertisement should not have been very scrupulous. We may conjecture, that a privy seal under the sign manual, (then the usual form of proceeding) granting to the King's players some extraordinary reward on the occasion, has been misrepresented as a private letter from the King to the dramatist. Malone speculated that "Macbeth" had been played before King James and the King of Denmark, (who arrived in England on 6th July, 1606) but we have not a particle of testimony to establish that a tragedy relating to the assassination of a monarch by an ambitious vassal was ever represented at court: we should be surprised to discover any proof of the kind, because such incidents seem usually to have been carefully avoided.

The youngest son of the illustrious and happy pair, William and Anne Shakespeare, Susanna, having been born in May, 1583, was rather more than twenty-four years old when she was married, on 5th June, 1607, to Mr. John Hall, of Stratford, who is styled "gentleman" in the register,6 but he was a professor of medicine, and subsequently practised as a physician. There appears to have been no reason on any side for opposing the match, and we may conjecture that the ceremony was performed in the presence of our great dramatist, during whose absence from home five months afterwards he lost his brother Edmund, and his mother in the autumn of the succeeding year.

There is no doubt that Edmund Shakespeare, who was 1 We derive these very curious and novel particulars from M. Von Raumer's "Hamlet" notes upon the Sixth and Seventh Centuries, translated by Lord Francis Egerton, vol. ii. p. 219. The terms are worth quoting.

April 5, 1601. I ceased certain players to be forbid from acting. The reason was this; the Queen, however, she saw that the whole court had left town, they persisted in acting it; now, they brought upon the stage the Queen of France and Mademoiselle Verneuil. When the last play was over, words, gave her a box on the ear. At my suit three of them were arrested; but the principal person, the author, escaped.

2 He has been before found to have made his own King and all his favorites in a very strange fashion: they made him write and swear because he had been robb'd of a bird, and beat a young man because he had told him of his misfortune. It would be impossible to put them in the scene. They represent him as drunk at least once a day, &c.

3 He has upon this made order, that no play shall be henceforth acted that does not profit. Perhaps the number of plays offered 100,000 livres. Perhaps the permission will be again granted, but upon condition that they represent no recent history, nor speak of the quarrel that was between them.

4 In a letter from a resident in Stratford of the name of Abraham Sturley. It was originally published by Boscawell (vol. i. p. 596) at length, but the only part which relates to Shakespeare runs thus: "we are not taught it necessary to preserve the uncouth abbreviations of the original."

5 This is one special remembrance of your father's motion. It seemeth by him that our countryman, Mr. Shakespeare, is willing to discharge the charge of many upon some of yeardland or other at Shotters, or near about us: we thinketh it a very fit pattern to move him to deal in the matter of our tithe. By the instructions you can give him the charge and by making it to make the same as a faire mark for him to shooe at and not useless to him. It obtained would advance him in deco, and he would do us much good." The terms of this letter prove that Shakespeare's townsmen were of opinion that he was desirous of advancing himself among the inhabitants of Stratford.

6 The only copy of this impression is in the library of his Grace the Duke of Devonshire, and we have employed it at a certain extent in setting and explaining the text of the tragedy. See the Introductory to "Hamlet."

7 That the story came through the Duke of Buckingham, from Davenan, seems to have been a conjectural addition by Udy's: the words in Lutold's advertisement are these:—"That most learned Fletcher and great Lord of the Blackfriars, was pleased with his own hand to write an amicable letter to Mr. Shake- speare; which letter, though now lost, remained long in the hands of William Davenan, andcredible person now living can testify." Dr. Farmer was the first to give currency to the notion, that the compliment to the Stuart family in "Macbeth" was the occasion of the letter.

not twenty-eight at the time of his death, had embraced the profession of a player, having perhaps followed the fortunes of his brother William, and attached himself to the same company. We, however, never meet with his name in any list of the associations of the time, nor is he mentioned as an actor among the characters of any old play with which we are acquainted. We may presume, therefore, that he attained no eminence; perhaps his principal employment might be under his brother in the management of his theatrical company, where he only took inferior parts; for when the engagement of a larger number of performers than usual was necessary, Mary Shakespeare survived her son Edmund about eight months, and was buried at Stratford on the 9th Sept. 1608.

There are few points of his life which can be stated with more confidence than that our great dramatist attended the funeral of his mother; filial piety and duty would of course impel him to visit Stratford on the occasion, and in proof that he did so, we may mention that on the 16th of the month he was godfather to a boy of the name of William Walker. Shakespeare's mother had probably resided at New Place, the house of her son; from whence, we may presume also, the body of her husband had been carried to the grave seven-years before. If she were of full age when she was married to John Shakespeare in 1557, she was about 72 years old at the time of her decease.

The reputation of our poet as a dramatist seems to have been at its height. His "King Lear" was printed three times for the same bookseller in 1608; and in order perhaps to increase its sale, (as well as to secure the purchaser against the old "King Lear," a play upon the same story, being given to him instead) the name of "M. William Shakespear" was placed very conspicuously, and most unusually, at the top of the title-page. The same observation will in part apply to "Pericles," which came out in 1609, with the name of the author rendered particularly obvious, although in the ordinary place. "Trovilus and Cressida," which was published in the same year, also has the name of the author very distinctly legible, but in a somewhat smaller type. In both the latter cases, it would likewise seem, that there were plays by older or rival dramatists upon the same incidents. The most noticeable proof of the advantage which a bookseller conceived he should derive from the announcement that the work he published was written by our poet, is afforded by the title-page of the collection of his dispersed sonnets, which was ushered into the world as "Shakespeare's Sonnets," in very large capitals, as if that were something which could be held a sufficient recommendation.

In a former part of our memoir (p. xcvii) we have alluded to the circumstance, that in 1609 Shakespeare was rated to the poor of the Liberty of the Clink in a sum which might possibly indicate that he was the occupant of a contrivance, a dwelling-house in Southwark. The fact that our great dramatist paid six-pence a week to the poor there, (as high a sum as anybody in that immediate vicinity was assessed at) is stated in the account of the Life of Edward Alleyn, printed by the Shakespeare Society, (p. 90) and there it is too hastily inferred that he was rated at this sum upon a dwelling-house occupied by himself. This is very possibly the fact; but, on the other hand, the truth may be, that be paid the rate not for any habitation, good or bad, large or small, but in respect of his theatrical property in the Globe, which was situated in the same district. The parish register of St. Saviour's establishes, that in 1601 the churchwardens had been instructed by the vestry "to talk with the players" respecting the payment of tithe and contributions to the maintenance of the poor; and it is not very unlikely that this arrangement was made under which the sharers in the Globe, and Shakespeare as one of them, would be assessed. As a confirmatory circumstance we may add, that when Henslowe and Alleyn were about to build the Fortune play-house, in 1599-1600, the inhabitants of the Lordship of Finsbury, in the parish of Cripplegate, petitioned the privy council in favour of the undertaking one of their reasons being, that "the creators were contented to give a very liberal portion of money weekly towards the relief of the poor." Perhaps the parties interested in the Globe were contented to come to similar terms, and the parish to accept the money weekly from the various individuals. Henslowe, Alleyn, Lowin, Town, July, &c., who were either sharers, or actors and sharers, in that or other theatres in the same neighbourhood, contributed in different proportions for the same purpose, the largest amount being to Shakespeare and Alleyn, which was paid by Shakespeare, Henslowe, and Alleyn.

The ordinary inhabitants included in the same list, doubtless, paid for their dwellings, according to their several rents, and such may have been the case with Shakespeare; all we contend for is, that we ought not to conclude at once, that Shakespeare was the tenant of a house in the Liberty of the Clink, merely from the circumstance that he was rated to the poor. It is not unlikely that he was the occupant of a substantial dwelling-house in the immediate near neighbourhood of the Globe, where his presence and assistance would often be required; and the amount of his income at this period would warrant such an expenditure, although we have no reason for thinking that such a house would be needed for his wife and family, because the existing evidence is opposed to the notion that they ever resided with him in London.

1688, Septemb. 9. Marry Shakespear, Wydowe.

2 The account (preserved at Durham College) does not state that he received any compensation of 27 dollars being rated at the poor, for dwelling-houses, but merely that they were rated and assessed to a weekly payment towards the relief of the poor, some for dwelling-houses, and others perhaps in respect to different kinds of property: it is thus entitled —

A breif not taken out of the poore bookes, containing the names of such as have liberty, which are rated and assessed to a weekly payment towards the relief of the poore. As it standes now encreased, this 6th day of April, 1688. Delivered up to Phillip Henslowe, by John Page, Waederward, and the overseers of the same liberty.

In 1688, it commences with these names:—

Phillip Henslowe, squier, assessed at weekly

Ed. Alleyn, assessed at weekly

Robert Toppin, assessed at weekly

Mr Langworth, assessed at weekly

Mr Benfield, assessed at weekly

Mr Griffin, assessed at weekly

Mr Pettipin, assessed at weekly

Mr Lowens (i. e. Lowin), assessed at weekly and twenty-one others. The next division includes a list of nineteen names, and ten of these names, including the following actors:

Thomas Pope, iis 6d. Mr Juby, iis 6d.

Richard Hunt, iis 6d.

Mr Ed. Collins, iis 6d. Mr Roper, iis 6d.

Mr W. Carter, iis 6d.

and all the rest pay a rate of either 14s or 17s, including the following actors:

Mr Tuke, iis 6d.

Mr Juby, iis 6d.

Mr Hunt, iis 6d.

Mr Garter, iis 6d.

The third division consists of seven persons who only paid one penny per week, and among them we perceive the name of no individual who, according to other evidence, appears to have been in any way concerned with theatres: Malone (see his "Inquiry," p. 215) has seen this document, but he mis-states that it belongs to the year 1602 and 1605.

2 John Northbrooke, in his Treatise against Plays, Players, &c., (Shakespeare's Society's reprint, p. 123) informs us that in 1577 people contributed weekly to the support of the poor "according to their ability, some a penny, some two pence, another four pence, and the best commonly gave but six pence."

However, it is not certain that the "Laz," mentioned in the document, was Laurence Fletcher: we know of no person named Lazaret Fletcher, though he may have been the personal representative of Lawrence Fletcher.

he may have made with the rest of the company for the regular contribution of dramas, in lieu perhaps of his own personal exertions.

In a work published a few years ago, containing extracts from the Diary of the Rev. John Ward, who was year of Stratford-upon-Avon, and whose memoranda extend from 1648 to 1674, it is stated that Shakespeare in his elder days lived at Stratford, and was a frequent visitor to the stage by passion every year, and for that an allowance so large, that he spent at the rate of 1000£ a year, as I have heard. We only add this passage to show what the opinion was as to Shakespeare's circumstances shortly after the Restoration. We take it for granted that the sum of 1000£ (equal to nearly 5000£ now) is a considerable exaggeration, but it may warrant the belief that Shakespeare lived in good style and port, late in life, in his native town. It is very possible, though we think not probable, that after he retired to Stratford he continued to write, but it is utterly incredible that subsequent to his retirement he supplied the stage with two plays every year. He might not be able at once to requite his old and confirmed habits of composition; but such other evidence as we possess is opposed to Ward's statement, to which he himself appends the cautionary words, "as I have heard." Of course he could have known nothing of his forty-six years after our poet's decease. He might, however, easily have known inhabitants of Stratford who well recollected Shakespeare, and, considering the opportunities he possessed, it strikes us as very singular that he collected so little information.

We have already adverted to the bounty of the Earl of Southampton to Shakespeare, which we have supposed to have been consequent upon the dedication of "Venus and Adonis." Mr. Ellesmere, and equivalent in point of date with the building of the Globe Theatre. Another document has been handed down to us among the papers of Lord Ellesmere, which proves the strong interest Lord Southampton still took, about fifteen years afterwards, in Shakespeare's affairs, and in the prosperity of the company to which he was attached: it has distinct reference also to the pending and unequal struggle between the corporation of London and the players at the Blackfriars, of which we have already spoken. It is the copy of a letter subscribed H. S. (the initials of the Earl) to some nobleman in favour of our great dramatist, and of the chief performer in many of his plays, Richard Burbage; and recollecting what Lord Southampton had before done for Shakespeare, and the manner in which from the first he had patronized our stage and drama, it seems to us the most natural thing in the world for an author personally interested in the welfare of those who had so many public and private claims. We may conclude that the original was not addressed to Lord Ellesmere, or it would have been found in the depository of his papers, and not merely a transcript of it; but a copy of it may have been furnished to the Lord Chancellor, in order to give him some information respecting the characters of the parties upon whose cause he was called upon to decide. Lord Ellesmere stood high in the confidence of his sovereign: he had many important public duties to discharge besides those belonging to his great office; and notwithstanding he had shown himself at all times a liberal patron of letters, and had had many works of value dedicated to him, we may readily imagine, that although he must have heard of Shakespeare and Burbage, he was in some degree of ignorance as to their individual deserts, when this communication was intended to remove. That it was not sent to him by Lord Southampton, who probably was acquainted with him, may afford a proof of the delicacy of the Earl's mind, who would not seem directly to interpose while the question of the sort was pending before a judge, (though possibly not in his judicial capacity) the history of whose life establishes that where the exercer of his high functions was involved he was equally decorous to public and to private interests.

We have introduced an exact copy of the document in a note, and it will be observed that it is without date; but the subject of it shows beyond dispute that it belongs to this period, while the lord mayor and aldermen were endeavouring to expel the players from a situation where they had been uninterruptedly established for more than thirty years. There can be no doubt that the object the players had in view was attained, because the Blackfriars Theatre and his brethren were not allowed, until many years after wards, to exercise any authority within the precinct and liberty of the Blackfriars, and that the King's servants continued to occupy the theatre long after the death of Shakespeare.

CHAPTER XVIII.

There is reason for believing that the important question of jurisdiction had been decided in favour of the King's Company, on the same January 7, 1610. A warrant of that date authorizing a juvenile company to exhibit at Blackfriars, as well as the association which had been in possession of the theatre ever since its original construction. One circumstance connected with this document, to which we shall presently advert, may however appear to cast a doubt upon the point, whether it had yet been finally determined that the corporation of London was by law excluded from the precinct of the Blackfriars. It is a fact, of which it may be said we have conclusive proof, that almost from the first, if not from the first, the Blackfriars theatre had been in the joint possession of the Lord Chamberlain's servants and of a juvenile company called the Children of the Chapel; they were also known as "her Majesty's Children," and "the Children of the Blackfriars," and it is not to be supposed that they employed the theatre or alternate days with their older competitors, but that, when the Lord Chamberlain's servants acted elsewhere in the summer, the Children of the Chapel commenced their performances in the winter, at the Blackfriars theatre, and in the summer, in the Globe. It is not improbable, therefore, that the remarkably wide range and variety of performances that Shakespeare's company undertook in the winter of 1606-7 was due both to the Blackfriars theatre and the Children of the Chapel. The Blackfriars was the most far-reaching of the London theatres, and was licensed for performances throughout the year, whereas the Children of the Chapel were limited to the winter season. Shakespeare's company was able to draw on the resources of both theatres, and to present a wide range of plays, from classical tragedies to popular romances. This allowed them to appeal to a wide audience, and to gain a reputation as a versatile and talented company.
THE LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

The Taming of the Shrew," or for the older play, with nearly the same title, upon which it was founded.

"Timon" and "Pericles" were printed in 1609, and to our mind there seems but little doubt that they had been written and prepared for the stage only a short time before they came from the press. With the single exception of "Othello," which came out in 4to in 1622, no other new drama by Shakespeare appeared in a printed form between 1609 and the date of the publication of the folio in 1623. We need not here discuss what play, first performed by our great dramatist after 1609, because we have separately considered the claims of each in our preliminary Introductions. "Timon of Athens," "Coriolanus," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Cymbeline," "The Winter's Tale," and "The Tempest," seem to belong to a late period of our poet's theatrical career, and some of them were doubtless written between 1609 and the period, whatever that period might be, when he entirely relinquished dramatic composition.

Between January 1609-10, when Shakespeare was one of the parties to whom the warrant for the Children of the Queen's Revels was conceded, and the year 1612, when it has been reasonably supposed that he quitted London to take up his permanent residence at Stratford, we are in possession of no facts connected with his personal history. It would seem both natural and probable that before that, before he disposed of his theatrical property, which must necessarily be of fluctuating and uncertain value, depending much upon the presence and activity of the owner for its profitable management, In his will (unlike some of his contemporaries who expired in London) he says nothing of any such property, and we are left to infer that he did not die in possession of it, having disposed of it before he finally retired to Stratford. It is to be recollected also that the species of interest he had in the Blackfriars theatre, independently of his shares in the receipts, was peculiarly irrevocable: it consisted of the warde and properties, which in 1608, when the city authorities contemplated the purchase of the whole establishment, were valued at 500l.; and we may feel assured that he would sell them to the company which had the constant use of them, and doubtless had paid an annual consideration to the owner. The fee, or freehold, of the house and ground was in the hands of Richard Burbage, and from him it descended to two sons: that was a permanent and substantial possession, very different in its character and durability from the dresses and machinery which belonged to Shakespeare. The mere circumstance of the nature of Shakespeare's property in the Blackfriars seems to authorize the conclusion, that he sold it before he retired to the place of his birth, where he meant to spend the rest of his days with his family, in the tranquil enjoyment of the independence he had secured by the exertions of five and twenty years. Supposing him to have begun his theatrical career at the end of 1586, as we have imagined, the quarter of a century would be completed by the close of 1612, and for ought we know, that might be the period Shakespeare was in his mind fixed upon for the termination of his toils and exertions.

It has been ascertained that Edward Alleyn, the actor founder of the college of "Godd's Gift" at Dulwich, purchased property in the Blackfriars in April 1612, and although it may possibly have been theatrical, there seems sufficient reason to believe that it was not, but that it consisted of certain leasehold houses, for which according to his own account, he paid a quarterly rent of 5l. The brief memorandum upon this transaction preserved at Dulwich certainly relates to any thing rather than to the species of interest which Shakespeare indisputably had in the wardrobe and properties of the Blackfriars theatre: the term, Alleyn uses would apply only to tenements or ground, and an Burbage valued his freehold of the theatre at 1000l., we need not hesitate in deciding that the lease Alleyn purchased for 599l. or 64l. was a lease of the playhouse. We shall see presently that Shakespeare himself, though under some peculiar circumstances, became the owner of a dwelling-house in the Blackfriars, unconnected with the theatre, very soon after he had taken up his abode at Stratford, and Alleyn probably had made a similar, but a larger investment in the same neighbourhood in 1612. Whatever, in fact, of Shakespeare's interest in the Blackfriars theatre was by his death both as a shareholder and property owner, he need not hesitate in concluding that in the then prosperous state of theatrical affaires in the metropolis, he was easily able to procure a purchaser.

He must also have had a considerable stake in the Globe, but whether he was also the owner of the same species of property there, as at the Blackfriars, we can only speculate. We should think it highly probable that, as far as the mere theatre-houses were concerned, the shares of property were made to serve for both theatres, and that when the summer season commenced on the Bankside, the necessary apparel was conveyed across the water from the Blackfriars, and remained there until the company returned to their winter quarters. There is no hint in any existing document what became of our great dramatist's interest in the Globe; but here again we need not doubt, from the profit that had always attended the undertaking, that he could have had no difficulty in finding parties to take it off his hands. Burbage we know was rich, for he died in 1613 worth 3000l., a year in land, besides his personal property, and he and others would have been glad to add to their capital, so advantageously employed, by purchasing Shakespeare's interest.

It is possible, as we have said, that Shakespeare continued to employ his pen for the stage after his retirement to Stratford, and the buyers of his shares might even make it compulsory to him to use his talent in behalf of the company, and we may doubt whether, with his long experience of the necessity of personal superintendence, he would have continued a shareholder in any concern of the kind over which he had no control. During the whole of his life in connexion with the stage, even after he quitit it as an actor, he seems to hav1

1 One copy of the folio is known with the date of 1612 upon the title-page; the others contain the date of 1613, or (in one instance) befallen to Nov. 1613, as if it had not been published until late in that year, unless we suppose the entry made by Blount and Jaggard some time after to be the form in which the printers made the reference to the rights that first printed there, which they might thought be invaded.
2 We ought, perhaps, to except a writ issued by the borough court in June 1610, at the suit of Shakespeare, for the recovery of a small sum due him. A similar instance is recorded in 1611, when our post sought to recover 17 l. 13s. 6d, from a person of the name of Rogers, for corn sold to him. These facts are ascertained from the existing record of Stafford.
3 See the Memoirs of Edward Alleyn, p. 105, where a conjecture is hastily hazarded that it might be Shakespeare's interest in the Blackfriars theatre. Upon this question we agree with Mr. Knight in his Shakespeare, a Biography, prefixed to his pictorial edition of the Poet's works.
4 It is in the following form, upon a small damp-injured piece of paper, and obviously a mere memorandum.
5 April 1612.
6 Money paid by me E. A. for the Blackfriars 160s.
7 More for the Blackfriars 160s.
8 More again for the Lease 210s.
9 The writings for the same and other small charges $6 & 5.

If this paper had any relation at all to the theatre in the Blackfriars, this 1612, is as I am disposed to think, it must have been written on paper upon which Shakespeare's name was engraved, that Shakespeare could neither grant nor sell a lease; and it is quite clear that Burbage did not, because he remained in possession of the playhouses at the time of his death: his sons asserted on paper after his decease, that they had paid 600l. a quarter for the property he held until his decease in 1625.

4 We have already inserted an extract from an epistle upon Bur- bagage, in which the writer enumerates the manner in which he had preserved Shakespeare's property. The following lines in Smeaton's MS. No. 1786, (pointed out to us by Mr. Bruce) are just worth preserving on account of the reminiscence of the access to which we turn:

An Epistle on Mr. Richard Burbage, the Player.

This life's a play, seen out by nature's art,
Where every man has his allotted part.
The man hath done all that he could set.
He hath his time, and he hath acted well.
The play now ended, thank's to his grace to his
The setting house, and the man of his place,
Where to give his fame this be not forbidden;--
Here lies the best tragedian ever play'd.

From hence we might infer, against other authorities, that what was called the "tiring room" in theatres, was so called because the actors retired to it, and not attired in it. It must likely answer much the same, but we sometimes find it called "the attiring room" by authors of the time.
THE LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

CHAPTER XIX.

The immediate members of the Shakespeare family resident at this date in Stratford were comparatively few. Richard Shakespeare had died of the age of forty, only a month before William Shakespeare signed the deed for the purchase of the house in Blackfriars. Since the death of Edmund, Richard had been our poet's youngest brother, but regarding his way of life at Stratford we have no information. Gilbert Shakespeare, born two years and a half after William, was also probably at this time an inhabitant of the borough, or its immediate neighbourhood, and perhaps married, for in the register, under date of 3rd September, 1612, there is an account of the burial of "Gilbérieus Shakespeare, adolescens," who might be his son. Joan Shakespeare, who was five years younger than her brother William, had been married at about the age of thirty to William Hart, a latter, in Stratford; but as the ceremony was not performed in that parish, it does not appear in the register. Their first child, William, was baptized on 29th August, 1609, and they had afterwards children by the names of Mary, Thomas, and Michael, born respectively in 1603, 1605, and 1608. Our poet's eldest daughter, Susanna, who, as we have elsewhere stated, was married to Mr. John, afterwards Dr. Hall, in June, 1607, produced a daughter who was baptized Elizabeth on 21st February, 1607–8; so that Shakespeare was a grandfather before he had reached his forty-fifth year; but Mrs. Hall had no further increase of family.

By whom New Place is otherwise called "the great house," was inhabited at this period, we can only conjecture. That Shakespeare's wife and his youngest daughter Judith (who completed her twenty-eighth year in February, 1612) resided in it, we cannot doubt; but as it would be much more than they would require, even after they were permanently joined by our great dramatist on his retirement from London, we may perhaps conclude that Mr. and Mrs. Hall were joint occupiers of it, and aided in keeping up the virility of the family circle. Shakespeare himself only completed his forty-eighth year in April, 1612, and every tradition and circumstance of his life tends to establish not only the gentleness and kindness, but the habitual cheerfulness of his disposition.

Nevertheless, although we suppose him to have separated himself from the labours and anxieties attendant preferred to be called "of Stratford-upon-Avon," contemplating, as he probably did through the whole of his theatrical life, a return thither as soon as his circumstances would enable him to do so with comfort and independence. We are thoroughly convinced, however, that, anterior to March, 1613, Shakespeare had taken up his permanent residence with his family at Stratford.
upon his theatrical concerns, he was not without his annoyances, though of a different kind. We refer to a chancericty in which he seems to have been involved by the purchase, in 1605, of the remaining term of a lease of part of the tithe of Stratford. It appears that a rent of 27/. 13s. 4d. had been reserved, which was to be paid by certain lessees under peril of forfeiture, but that some of the parties, disregarding the consequences, had refused to contribute their proportions, and Richard Lane, Esq., of Stratford-upon-Avon, Esquire, and William Shakespeare, "of Stratford-upon-Avon, gentleman," were under the necessity of filing a bill before Lord Ellesmere, to compel all the persons deriving estates under the dissolved college of Stratford to pay their shares. What was the issue of the suit is not any where stated; and the only important point in the deed of the bill, in the hands of the Shakespeare Society, is, that our great dramatist thereon stated the value of his "moety" of the tithes to be 60l. per annum.

In the summer of 1613 a calamity happened which we do not believe affected our author's immediate interests, on account of the strong probability that he had taken care to diversify all theatrical property before he finally took up his reside in his birth-place. The Globe, which had been more than eight years, and had been burned down on 29th June, 1613, in consequence of the thatch, with which it was partially covered, catching fire from the discharge of some theatrical artillery. It is doubtful what play was then in a course of representation: Sir Henry Wotton gives it the title of "All is True," and calls it "a new play," while Hoare, in his continuation of Stowe's Annals, distinctly states that it was "Henry the Eighth." It is very possible that both of them may be correct, and that Shakespeare's historical drama was that night revived under a new name, and therefore mistakenly called "a new play" by Sir Henry Wotton, although it had been nearly ten years on the stage. The Globe was rebuilt in the next year, as we are told on what may be considered good authority, at the cost of King James and of many noblemen and gentlemen, who seem to have contributed sums of money for the purpose. If James I. had not leisureed on the occasion, it afforded another out of many proofs of his disposition to encourage the drama, and to assist the players who acted under the royal name. Although Shakespeare might not be in any way peculiarly affected by the event, we may be sure that he would not be backward in using his influence, and perhaps in rendering assistance by a gift of money, for the reconstruction of a playhouse in which he had often acted, from which he had derived so much profit, and in the continuance of the performances at which so many of his friends and fellows were deeply interested.

He must himself have had an escape from a similar disaster at Stratford in the very next year. Fires had broken out in the borough in 1694 and 1695, which had destroyed many of the houses, then built of wood, or of materials not calculated to resist combustion; but that which occurred on the first of May, 1614, in the Street, is worthy of note, as being of much larger size than both its predecessors. At the instance of various gentlemen in the neighbourhood, including Sir Fulke Greville, Sir Richard Verney, and Sir Thomas Lucy, King James issued a proclamation, or brief, dated 11th May, 1615, in favour of the inhabitants of Stratford, authorizing the collection of donations in the different churches of the kingdom for the restoration of the town; and alleging that within two hours the fire had consumed twenty-two dwelling-houses, besides many of other houses, office, also with great store of corn, hay, straw, wood, and timber. The amount of loss is stated, on the same authority, to be "eight thousand pounds and upwards." What was the issue of this charitable appeal to the whole kingdom, we know not.

It is very certain that the dwelling of our great dramatist, in the street which was burned down in the year 1613, and possibly was taking some steps in favour of his fellow-townsmen. However, his principal business seems to have been to projected inclosure of certain common lands in the neighbourhood of Stratford in which he had an interest. Some inquiries as to the rights of various parties were instituted in September, 1614, as we gather from a document yet preserved, and which is now before us. The others of those house claims are set out are, "Mr. Shakespeare, Thomas Parker, Mr. Lane, Sir Francis Smith, Mace, Arthur Cawdrey, and "Mr. Wright, vicar of Bishopstone." All that it is necessary to quote is the following, which refers to Shakespeare, and which, like the rest, is placed under the head of "Amentic Freeholders in the fields of Old Stratford and Welcome."

Mr. Shakespeare, vide land: non common, nor ground

The play house in Salisbury Court, in Fleet-street, was pulled down by a company of soldiers, set on by the Sectaries of these sad times, on Saturday, the 24th day of March, 1649.

The bulk: in Drury-lane, was pulled down also this day, being Saturday the 29th of March, 1649, by the same soldiers.

The Fortune play house, between White-Cross streets and Golding-street, was burned down in the year 1691. Art built again, with brick works outside, in the year 1622; and now pulled down on the inside by these soldiers, this 1649.

The Hope, on the Bankside in Southwark, commonly called the Bear Garden: a play house for stage plays on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays; and for the baiting of the bears on the 24th of March, 1645, the meaning was that of being pulled down when they please. It was built in the year 1610; and now pulled down to make tenements by Thomas Walker, a pettyrose man of this street, who sold it, the 22nd of October, to Seven of Mr. Godfries bears, by the command of Thomas Price, then his Sherfere of Furry, were shot to death on Saturday, the 9th day of February, 1655, by a company of soldiers.

We take these particulars from a copy of the document printed by Thomas Furost, who then had a patent for all proclamations, to the effect that the house "was restored and used for the usual place in the possession of the Shakespeare Society."

The name of his friend William Combe is found among the "estates," which is the house claims are set out are, "Mr. Shakespeare, vide land: non common, nor ground" beyond Gospell bush: noe ground in Sandifeld, nor none in Howill field beyond Bishotnon, nor none in the enclosures beyond Bishotnon."
Ixxi

The date of this paper is 5th September, 1614, and, as we have said, we may presume that it was chiefly upon this occasion of the publication of the Chronicon that the Venetian came to London on the 16th November. It should appear that Thomas Greene, of Stratford, was officially opposing the inclusions on the part of the corporation; and it is probable that Shakespeare's wishes were accordant with those of the majority of the inhabitants; however this might be, (and it is liable to dispute which party Shakespeare favoured) the members of the municipal body of the borough were nearly unanimous in the same view. As we can perfect particularly remaining upon this subject, they wished our poet to use his influence to resist the project, which seems to have been supported by Mr. Arthur Mainwaring, then resident in the family of Lord Ellesmere as auditor of his domestic expenditure.

The above is the last extant panegyric upon Shakespeare during his lifetime, and it extends, in point of fervour and zeal, if not in judicious criticism, any that had gone before it; for Richard tells the reader, that the writer of the scenes in which he had figured on the stage had imped his fame with the quill of the historic muse, and that, by the magic of verse, he had written so much and so finely, had raised him from oblivion. That C. B. was an acknowledged authority on stage is proved by his learned and various authorities. As we have stated, his work is one of great excellence, but it would be going too much out of our way to enter here into any further examination of it.

CHAPTER XX.

Shakespeare's return to Stratford. Marriage of his daughter Judith to Thomas Quiney in February, 1613. Shakespeare's will to be proved March 1616. His last illness: attended by Dr. Hall, his son-in-law. Uncertainty as to the nature of Shakespeare's fatal malady. His birth-day and death-day the same. Entry of his burial in the register at Stratford. His will's action complicated, and circumstances to prove that it was prepared two months before it was execut- ed. His bequest to his wife, and provision for her by dower.

The autumn seems to have been a very usual time for publishing new books, and Shakespeare having been in

It is about to be reprinted by the Shakespeare Society, and on every account it is well merited both in distinction. We may suspect, in the last line but one, that the word "wits" has been misprinted for "acts." The stanza which follows the above refers to another play, founded on a distinct portion of the same history, and relating especially to Jane Shore:

"And what a piece of good fortune did I shew On mistress Shore, when (with a faine hate To unacquaint life) I forced her to peep Barefoote on romance, with destitute state. But now her fame by a vile play doth grow, Whose fate the women do commiserate," &c.

The allusion is to the very popular and popular play of "Ed- ward IV." (reprinted by the Shakespeare Society), in which Shore's wife is introduced; or it may be to a different drama upon the events of her life, which is known on various authorities, had been brought upon the stage as early as 1604. Richard Crook, as Richard Crook, in Shakespeare's Diary, that in June, 1602, Ben Jonson was himself of the Lord Admiral's players at the Fortune. We have no evidence that it was ever completed or represented. Ben Jonson's testimony in favour of the poet of C. B. is comprised into a few lines.
London in the middle of November, 1614, as we have remarked, he was perhaps there when "The Ghost of Richard the Third" came out, and, like Ben Jonson, Chapman, and others, might be acquainted with the author. He probably returned home before the winter, and passed the rest of his days in tranquil retirement, and in the enjoyment of the society of his friends, whether residing in the country, or occasionally visiting him from the metropolis. The latter, it may be supposed, was the case in February, 1616; all men of good sense will theirs may be, in ease, retirement, and the society of his friends; and he adds what cannot be doubted, that "his pleasurable wit and good-nature engaged him in the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship of the gentlemen of the neighbourhood." He must have been of a lively and communicative disposition; and his long residence in London, amidst the bustling and varied scenes connected with his public life, independently of his natural powers of conversation, could not fail to render his society most agreeable and desirable. We can readily believe that when any of his old associates of his stage, whether authors or actors, came to Stratford, they found a hearty welcome and free entertainment at his house; and that he would be the last man, in his prosperity, to treat with slight or indifference those with whom, in the earlier part of his life, he had been connected. That it could not be in Shakespeare's nature to disregard the claims of ancient friendship, especially if it approached him in a garb of comparative poverty.

One of the very latest notes of his life was bestowing the hand of his daughter Judith upon Thomas Quiney, a vintner and wine-merchant of Stratford, the son of Richard Quiney. She must have been twenty years older than her husband, having, as already stated, been born 2nd February, 1597; while he was not born until 25th February, 1589; he was consequently twenty-seven years old, and she thirty-one, at the time of their marriage in February, 1616; and Shakespeare thus became father-in-law to the son of the friend who, eighteen years before, had borrowed of him 50l., and who had died on 31st May, 1602, while he was bailiff of Stratford. As there was a difference of four years in the ages of Judith Shakespeare and her husband, we ought perhaps to receive that fact as some testimony, that our great dramatist did not see sufficient evil in such disproportion to induce him to oppose the union.

His will had been prepared as long before its actual date as 25th January, 1615-16, and this fact is apparent on the face of it: it originally began "Vicissum quoque die Januarij," (not Febrariz, as Malone erroneously reads it) but the word Januarij was subsequently struck through with a quill pen. Possibly it was not thought necessary to alter vicissum quoitno, or the 25th March might be the very day the will was executed: if it were, the signatures of the testator, upon each of the three sheets of paper of which the will consists, bear evidence (from the want of firmness in the writing) that he was at that time suffering under sickness. It opens, it is true, by stating that he was "in perfect health and mory," and such was unquestionably the case when the instrument was prepared in January, but the execution of it might be deferred until he was attacked by serious illness and then the date of the month only might be altered, leaving the assertion as to health and memory as it had originally stood. What was the nature of Shakespeare's fatal illness we have no satisfactory means of knowing, but it was probably not of long duration; and if when he subscribed his will he had really been in health we are persuaded that at the age of only fifty-two he would have been dignified with the appellation of "the last of the metropolis. All three signatures are more or less inartile and illegible, especially the two first, but he seems to have made an effort to write his best when he affixed both his names at length at the end. By me William Shakespeare."

We hardly need entertain a doubt that he was attended in his last illness by his son-in-law, Dr. Hall, who had then been married to Susanna Shakespeare more than eight years; we have expressed our opinion that Dr. and Mrs. Hall lived in the same house with our poet, and it is to be recollected that in his will he leaves New Place to his daughter Susanna. Hall must have been a man of considerable science for the time at which he practised, and he has left behind him proofs of his knowledge and skill in a number of cases which had come under his own eye, and which he described in Latin: these were afterwards translated from his manuscript, and published in 1657 by Jonas Cooke, with the title of "Select Observations on English Bodies," but the case of Dr. Hall's father-in-law is not found there, because, unfortunately the "observations" only begin in 1617. One of the earliest of them shows that an epidemic, called the "new fever," then prevailed in Stratford and "invaded many." Possibly Shakespeare was one of these; though, had such been the fact, it is not unlikely that, when speaking of "the Lady Beaufort," the author of July 1st, 1617, Dr. Hall would have referred back to the earlier instance of his father-in-law. He does advert to a tertian ague of which, at a period not mentioned, he had cured Michael Drayton, ("an excellent poet," as Hall terms him) when he was, perhaps, on a visit to Shakespeare. However, Drayton, as formerly remarked, was a native of Warwickshire, and Dr. Hall may have been called in to attend him elsewhere.

Whatever doubt may prevail as to the day of the birth of Shakespeare, none can well exist as to the day of his death. The inscription on his monument in Stratford church tells us,

"Obit Anno Domini 1616.
Ætatis 58, die 23 April.

And it is remarkable that he was born and died on the same day of the same month, supposing him, as we have every reason to believe, to have first seen the light on the 23rd
April, 1564. It was most usual about that period to mention the day of death in inscriptions upon tombstones, tablets, and monuments; and such was the ease with other members of the Shakespeare family. We are thus informed that his wife, Anne Shakespeare, "departed this life the 6th day of August, 1623." Dr. Hall deceased Nov. 25th, 1653." Thomas Nash, who married Hall's daughter, "died April 4, 1647;" Susanna Hall deceased the 11th of July, A. 1649." Therefore, although the Latin inscription on the monument of our great dramatist may, from its form and punctuation, appear not so decisive as these we have quoted in English, there is fact no ground for disputing that he died on 23rd April, 1616. It is quite certain from the record that was interred on the 25th April, and the record of that event is placed among the burials in the following manner:

"1616. April 25th. Will Shakespeare, Gent." Whether from the frequent prevalence of infectious disorders, or from any other cause, the custom of keeping the bodies of relatives unburied, for a week or more after death, seems comparatively of modern origin; and we may illustrate this point also by reference to facts regarding some of the members of the Shakespeare family. Anne Shakespeare was buried two days after she died, viz. on the 8th Aug, 1623: Dr. Hall and Thomas Nash were buried on the day after they died; and although it is true that there was an interval of five days between the death and burial of Mrs. Hall, yet her corpse was conveyed from some distance, to be interred among her relations at Stratford. Nothing would be easier than to accumulate instances to prove that in the time of Shakespeare, as well as before and afterwards, the custom was to bury persons very shortly subsequent to their decease. In the case of our poet, concluding that he expired on the 23rd April, there was, as in the instance of his wife, an interval of two days before his interment.

Into the particular provisions of his will we need not enter at all here, for we have printed it at the end of the present memoir from the original, as it was filed in the Prerogative Court, probate having been granted on the 22d June following the date of it. His daughter Judith is there only called by her Christian name, although she had been married to Thomas Quiney considerably more than a month anterior to the actual date of the will, and although her eldest daughter Susanna is mentioned by her husband's patronymic. It seems evident, from the tenor of the whole instrument, that while Judith Shakespeare was still married, Judith was not married, although her speedy union with Thomas Quiney was contemplated: the attorney or scrivener, who drew it, had first written "son and daughter," (meaning Judith and her intended husband) but erased the words "son and" afterwards, as the parties were not yet married, and were not "son and daughter" to the testator. It is true that Thomas Quiney would not have been Shakespeare's son, only his son-in-law; but the degree of legitimacy were not at that time strictly marked and attended to, and in the same will Elizabeth Hall is called the testator's "niece," when she was, in fact, his granddaughter.

The bequest which has attracted most attention is an altercation in the following words, "I'm 1 gave unto my wife my second best bed with the furniture." Upon this passage has been founded, by Malone and others, a charge against Shakespeare, that he only remembered his wife as an afterthought, and then merely gave her "an old bed." As to the last part of the accusation it may be answered, that the "second best bed" was probably that in which the husband and wife had slept, when he was in Stratford earlier in life, and every night since his retirement from the metropolis: the best bed was doubtless reserved for visitors: if, therefore, he were to leave his wife any express legacy of the kind, it was most natural and considerate that he should give her that portion of furniture, which for many years they had jointly occupied. With regard to the second part of the charge, our great dramatist has of late years been relieved from the stigma, thus attempted to be thrown upon him, by the mere remark, that Shakespeare's property being principally freehold, the widow by the ordinary operation of the law of England would be entitled to, what is legally known by the term, "dower."

It is extraordinary that this question should not have occurred to Malone, who was educated to the legal profession; but that many others should have followed him in his unjust imputation is not remarkable, recollecting how prone most of Shakespeare's biographers have been to repeat errors, rather than take the trouble to inquire for themselves, to sift out truth, and to balance probabilities.

Witty above her sex, but that's not all; Wise to salvation was good Minias Hall. Something of Shakespeare was in that, but this Wholly of him with whom she's now in bliss.

Then, passenger, hast we a tear To weep with her that weep for all? That weep, yet set her selfe to Cheer them up with comfortes cordial. Her loye she liveth, her mercy spread When thou hast nere a tear to shed."

The register informs us that she was buried on the 16th July, 1649: The following is copied from the register. —

"1633, August 8. Mrs. Shakespeare."

Their registrations of burial are in these terms:

- "1635. Nov. 36. Johannes Hall, medicus pertinacius.
- 1647 April 5. Thomas Nash, Gent."

The register contains as follows:

- "1649, July 16. Mrs. Susanna Hall, widow."

We are indebted to Sir P. Madden, Keeper of the MSS in the British Museum, for the use of a most exact collation of Shakespeare's will; in addition to which we have several times gone over every stanza of the whole in order to have printed it as nearly as possible as it appears in the original. Another trifling circumstance leading to the conclusion that the will was prepared a month, though not much, before March, is that Shakespeare's sister is called Jane Hart, and not Jane Hart, widow; her husband had died a few days before Shakespeare, and he was buried on 17 April, 1623, as "Will Hart, mater." She was buried on 4 Nov, 1646. Both entries are contained in the parish registers of Stratford.

This vindication of Shakespeare's memory from the supposed neglect of his wife we owe to Sir P. Night, in his "Pictorial Shakespeare." See the Postscript to "Twelfth Night." When the explanation is once given, all the wonder it was never before mentioned; but like many discoveries of different kinds, it is not less simple than important, and it is just that Mr. Knight should have full credit for it.
CHAPTER XXI.

A MONUMENT to Shakespeare was erected anterior to the publication of the folio edition of the "Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies" in 1623, because it is distinctly mentioned by Leonard Digges, in the earliest copy of commemorative verses prefixed to that volume, which he states shall outlive the poet's tomb:

"when that stone is rent,
And time dissolve thy Stratford Monument,
Here we alive shall view thee still."

This is the most ancient notice of it; but how long before 1623 it had been placed in the church of Stratford-upon-Avon, we have no means of deciding. It represents the poet sitting under an arch, with a cushion before him, a pen in his right hand, and his left resting upon a sheet of paper; it has been the subject of much discussion among the judges that it was cut by an English sculptor (perhaps Thomas Stanton) and we may conclude, without much hesitation, that the artist was employed by Dr. Hall and his wife, and that the resemblance was as faithful as a bust, not modelled from the life, but probably, under living instructions, from some picture or cast, could be expected to be. Shakespeare is there considerably fuller in the face, than in the engraving on the title-page of the folio of 1623, which must have been made from a different original. It seems unlikely that after he separated himself from the business and anxiety of a professional life, and withdrew to the permanent inhaling of his native air, he became more robust, and the half-length upon his monument conveys the notion of a cheerful, good-tempered, and somewhat jovial man. The expression, we apprehend, is less intellectual than it must have been in reality, and the forehead, though lofty and expansive, is not strongly marked with thought; on the whole, it has rather a look of gaiety and good humour than of thought and reflection, and the lips are full, and apparently in the act of giving utterance to some amiable pleasantry.

On a tablet below the bust are placed the following inscriptions, which we give literally:

1. "Iulicius Pylivm, genic Socratcm, arte Maroncm,
Terra tegit, popiivas maeest, Olympysh labet.
Stay, Passenger, why guest thou by so fast?
Read, if thou canst, whom envies Death hath past Within this monument: Shakespeare; with whom Quick nature dide: whose name doth deck y' Tomb
Far more then cost; with all y' he hath writ,
Leaves living art but page to serve his wit
Oblit anp Del. 1616.
Æthias. 55. die 23 Apt."

On a flat grave stone in front of the monument, and not far from the wall against which it is fixed, we read these lines, and Southwell's correspondent (whose letter was printed in 1838, from the original manuscript dated 1698) informs us, speaking of course from tradition, that they were written by Shakespeare himself:

2. "Good friend, for Jesus sake forbear
To digg the dust enclosed heare:

Best be ye may y' spares these stones,
And ev'rt be ye y' moves my bones."

The half-length on the title-page of the folio of 1623, engraved by Martin Droeshout, has certainly an expression of greater gravity than the bust on Shakespeare's monument; and, making some allowances, we can conceive the original of that resemblance more capable of producing the mighty works Shakespeare has left behind him, than the original of the bust at all events, rather looks like the author of "Lear" and "Macbeth," and the last line of the author of "Much Ado about Nothing" and "The Merry Wives of Windsor;" the one may be said to represent Shakespeare during his later years at Stratford, happy in the intercourse of his family and friends and the cheerful companions of his neighbours and townsman; and the other, Shakespeare in London, revolting the great works he had written or projected, and with his mind somewhat hardened by the knowledge of the career of his past. The bust is obviously the likeness which ought to accompany his plays, and which his "friends and fellows." Heminge and Condell, preferred to the head upon the "Stratford Monument," of the creation of which they must have been aware.

There is one point in which both the engraving and the bust in a degree concur,—we mean in the length of the upper lip, although the peculiarity seems exaggerated in the bust. We have no such testimony in regard to the truth of the resemblance of the bust as the engraving, opposite to which are the following lines, subscribed with the initials of Ben Jonson, and doubtless from his pen. Let the reader bear in mind that Ben Jonson was not a man who could be hired to commend, and that, taking it for granted he was sincere in his praise, he had the most unquestionable means of forming a judgment upon the subject of the likeness between the living man and the dead representation. We give Ben Jonson's testimonial exactly as it stands in the folio of 1623, for it afterwards went through various literal changes.

"To the Reader.

"This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife
With Nature, to out-do the life;
Q. could he but have drawn his wit
As well in brass, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpass
All, that was ever writ in brass.
But, since he cannot, let it be
Not on his Picture, but his Book."

B. I."

With this evidence before us, we have not hesitated in having an exact copy of Droeshout's engraving executed for the present edition of the Works of Shakespeare. It is, we believe, the first time it has ever been selected for the press, since the appearance of the folio of 1623; and although it may not be recommended by the appearance of so high a style of art as some other imputed resemblances, there is certainly not one which has such undeniable claims to our notice on the grounds of fidelity and authenticity.

The fact that Droeshout was required to employ his skill upon a bad picture may tend to confirm our reliance upon the likeness and there are pictures of Shakespeare as some have contended, but as we are far from believing, Heminge and Condell, when they were seeking for an appropriate ornament for the title-page of their folio, would hardly have chosen one which was an unskilful painting, if it had not been a striking resemblance. If only half the pictures said, within the last century, to represent Shakespeare, were in fact from the life, the poet must have living, who could have contradicted him, had the praise not been deserved. Jonson does not speak of the painter, but of the "graver," who we are inclined to think did full justice to the picture placed in his hands. Droeshout was a man of considerable eminence in his branch of art, and has left behind him undoubted proofs of his skill—some of them so much superior to the head of Shakespeare in the folio of 1623, as to lead to the conclusion, that the picture from which he worked was a very coarse specimen of art.
possessed a vast stock of patience, if not a larger share of vanity, when he devoted so much time to sitting to the artiste of the day; and the player-editors could have found no difficulty in procuring a picture, which had better pretensions to their approval. To us, therefore, the very defects of the engraving, which accompanies the folio of 1623, are a recommendation, since they serve to show that it was both genuine and faithful.

Andrey is the only authority, beyond the inferences that may be drawn from the portrait, for the personal appearance of Shakespeare; and he sums up our great poet's physical and moral endowments in two lines—"He was a handsome well-shaped man, very good company, and of a very ready, and pleasant, and smooth wit." We have every reason to suppose that this is a correct description of his personal appearance, but we are unable to add to it from any other source, unless indeed we were to rely upon a few equivocal passages in the "Sonnets." Upon this point, it has been supposed by some that he was lame, and certainly the 87th and 89th Sonnets, without allowing for a figurative mode of expression, might be taken to import as much. If we were to consider the words literally, we should imagine that some accident had befallen him, which rendered it impossible that he should continue on the stage, and hence there could easily account for his early retirement from the scenes. With Andrey, perhaps, standing alone of his most famous predecessors, Christopher Marlowe, but we have no sufficient reason for believing it was the fact as regards Shakespeare: he is evidently speaking metaphorically in both places, where "lame" and "lamelessness" occur.

His social qualities, his good temper, hilarity, vivacity, and what Andrey calls his "very ready, and pleasant, and smooth wit," (in our author's own words, "pleasant without scurrility, witty without affectation"), cannot be doubted.
since, besides what may be gathered from his works, we have it from various quarters; and although nothing very good of this kind may have descended to us, we have sufficient to show that he must have been a most welcome visitor in all companies. The epithet "gentle" has been frequently applied to him, twice by Ben Jonson, (in his lines before the engraving, and in his laudatory verses prefixed to the plays in the folio of 1623) and if it be not to be understood precisely in its modern acceptation, we may be sure that one distinguishing feature in his character was general kindliness: he may have been "sharp and sententious", but never needlessly bitter or ill-tempered: his wit had no malice for an ingrediant. Fuller speaks of the "wit-combats" between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson at the convivial meetings at the Mermaid club, established by Sir Walter Raleigh;1 and he adds, "two I behold like a Spanish bullfights: Shakespeare, an English man-of-war: the bully, like the former, was built far higher in learning;
slow, but slow in his performances: Shakespeare, with the English man-of-war, lesser in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, tack about, and take advantage of all winds by the quickness of his wit and invention." The simile is well chosen, and it came from a writer who seldom said anything ill. Connected with Ben Jonson's solidity and slowness is a witicism between him and Shakespeare, said to have passed at a tavern. One of the Ashmolean manuscripts (No. 38) contains the following—

"Mr. Ben Johnson and Mr. Wm. Shakespeare being merrie at a tavern, Mr. Jonson begins for his epistle,

Here lies Ben Jonson
Who was once one:
he gives it to Mr. Shakespeare to make up, who presently
That, while he liv'd, was a slow thing,
And now, being dead, is nothing.

It is certainly not of much value, but there is a great difference between the estimate of an extempore joke at the moment of delivery, and the opinion we may form of it long afterwards, when it has been put upon paper, and transmitted to posterity under such names as those of Shakespeare and Jonson. The same excuse, if required, may be made for two other pieces of unpretending pleasantness written the same parties, which we subjoin in a note, because they relate to such men and have been handed down to us upon something like authority.

Of a different character is a production preserved by Dugdale, at the end of his Visitations of Salop, in the Heralds' College: it is an epitaph inscribed upon the tomb of Sir Thomas Stanley, in Tongue church; and Dugdale, his testimony is inimicable, distinctly states that
"the following verses were made by William Shakespeare, the late famous tragedian."

"Written upon the east end of the tomb.

Ask who lies here, but do not weep;
He is not dead, he doth but sleep.
This stony register is for his bones;
His fame is more perpetual than these stones:
And his own goodness, with himself being gone,
Shall live when earthly monument is none.

Written on the west end thereof.

Not monumental stone preserves our name,
Nor sky-spiring pyramids our name.
The memory of thee is all we have to
Shall out-live marble and defacer's hands.
When all to time's consumption shall be given,
Stanley, for whom this stands, shall stand in heaven."

With Malone and others, who have quoted them, we feel satisfied of the authenticity of these verses, though we may not perhaps think, as he did, that the last line bears

1 See the extract from a ballad on Marlowe (p. xxxi). This circumstance, had he known it, would materially have aided the modern sceptic, who argued that Shakespeare and Marlowe were one and the same.
2 See Ben Jonson's Works, vol. 1, p. lxxv) figures the date of the establishment of this club, at the Mermaid in Friday Street, about 1600, and he adds that "here for many years Ben Jonson repaired with Shakespeare, Beaumont, and John Marston, Sir Walter Carstin, Donne, and many others, whose names, even at this distant period, call up a mixed feeling of reverence and respect." Of what use were these? of what use are these many assemblies Beaumont thus speaks, addressing Ben Jonson—

"What things have we seen
Done at the Mermaid! heard words that have been
So nimble, and so full of subtle flame,
As from a man who was but lately came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest."

The Mitre, in Fleet Street, seems to have been another tavern where the wit-combats of the day were curiously assembled.
4 Fuller has another similar, on the same page, respecting Shakespeare and his achievements, which is worth quoting. "He was an eminent instance of the truth of that rule, 'Prae sumum, et rad nastiur;'
one is not made, but born a poet. Indeed his learning was very little, so that as Cornish diamonds are not polished by any lapidary, but are pointed and smooth even as they are taken out of the earth, so nature itself was all the art which was used upon him." Of course Fuller is here only referring to Shakespeare's classical acquirements: his learning of a different kind, perhaps, exceeded that of all the sages put together.
5 Shakespeare was god-father to one of Ben Jonson's children and after the christening, being in a deep study, Jonson came to where him up, and Ballard, why he was so melancholy?—"No faith, Ben, (syes he) not I: but I have been considering a great while what should be the fittest gift for me to bestow upon my god-child, and I have recollected at last,—'I'll give thee what?' says he
'I' faith, Ben, I'll then give him a dozen of Latine spoons, and then shall translate them.'

Of course the joke depends upon the pun between Latin, and the mixed metal called latten. The above is from a MS. of Sir R.
Draper, who quotes the authority of Dr. Donne. It is inserted in Mr. Tacitus's curious volume, printed for the Camden Society, under the title of "Anecdotes and Traditions." 2 p. 3. The next is from a MS. called "Poetical Characters," formerly in the H-learn Collection—

"Verses by Ben Jonson and Shakespeare, occasioned by the meeting to the Globe theatre—Totus mundus agit histrionem.

Where shall we find spectators of their plays?

Shakespeare. Little, or much of what we see, we do:

such "strong marks of the hand of Shakespeare!". The coincidence between the line

"Nor sky-aspiring pyramids our name," and the passage in Milton's Epitaph upon Shakespeare, prefixed to the folio of 1632,

"Or that his hollow'd relics should be hid

seems, as far as we recollect, to have escaped notice.

We have thus brought into a consecutive narrative (with as little interruption of its thread as, under the circumstances, and with such disjointed materials, seemed to us possible) the particulars respecting the life of the "myriadaminded Shakespeare"; with which our predecessors were acquainted, or which, from various sources, we have been able, during a long series of years, to collect. Yet, after all, comparing what we really know of our great dramatist with what we might possibly have known, we cannot but be aware how little has been accomplished. "Of William Shakespeare," says one of our greatest living authors of the 1 The following reaches its more questionable shape: it is from a MS. of the time of Charles I., preserved in the Bodleian Library, which contains also poems by Herrick and others.

"AN EPISTAL.

"When God was pleas'd, the world as willing yet, such our greatest dead one, "whom, through the mouths of those whom he has inspired to body forth the modifications of his immense mind, we seem to know better than any human writer, it may be truly said that we scarcely know anything. We see him, so far as we do see him, not in himself, but in a reflex image from the objectivity in which he is manifested: he is Falstaff, and Mercutio, and Mal volo, and Shylock, and Sidone, and Pericles, and Lear, and Othello; but to us he is a scarcely a determined person, a substantial reality of past time, the man Shakespeare." We cannot flatter ourselves that we have done much to bring the reader better acquainted with "the man Shakespeare," but if we have done anything we shall be content; and, instead of attempting any character of our own, we will subjoin one, in the words of the distinguished writer we have above quoted, as brief in its form as it is comprehensive in its matter:—"The name of Shakespeare is the greatest in our literature,—it is the greatest in all literature. No man ever came near to him in the creative powers of the mind; no man had ever such strength at once, and such variety of imagination."

If the details of his life be imperfect, the history of his mind is complete; and we leave the reader to turn from the contemplation of "the man Shakespeare" to the study of THE POET SHAKEPEARE.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

THE TEMPEST.

"The Tempest" was first printed in the folio edition of Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies," bearing date in 1623, where it stands first, and occupies nineteen pages, viz. from p. 1, to p. 19 inclusive. It fills the same place in the folios of 1623, 1634, and 1685.

A material fact, in reference to the date of the first production of "The Tempest," has only been recently ascertained: we allude to the notice of the performance of it, before King James, on Nov. 1st, 1611, which is contained in the "Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels at Court," edited by Mr. P. Cunningham for the Shakespeare Society, p. 211: the memorandum is in the following form:

"Halions nyght was presented att Whitbhill before the Kinges Majestice a play called the Tempest."

In the margin is inserted the additional circumstance, that the performance was by "the King's Players," and there can be no reasonable doubt that it was Shakespeare's drama, which had been written for that company. When it had been so written, is still a point of difficulty; but the probability, we think, is that it was selected by the Master of the Revels, for production in 1611, in order to test its popularity and public taste. Eleven other dramas, as appears by the same document, were exhibited between Oct. 31, 1611, and the same day in the next year; and it is remarked that those of the (at first-play, at least) company those (at first-play, at least) company there were comparatively new plays, and with regard to the eleventh, it was not more than three years old. 1 We may, perhaps, be warranted in inferring, therefore, that "The Tempest" was also not then an old play.

It seems to us, likewise, that the internal evidence, derived from style and language, clearly indicates that it was a late production, and that it belongs to about the same period of our great dramatist's literary history as his "Winter's Tale," which was also chosen for a (first-)play, in Whitehall only four days after "The Tempest" had been exhibited. In point of construction, it must be admitted at once that there is the most obvious dissimilarity, inasmuch as "The Winter's Tale" is a piece in which the unities are utterly disregarded, while in "The Tempest" they are strictly observed. It is only in the involved and parenthetical character of some of the speeches, and in psychological resemblances, that we would institute a comparison between "The Tempest" and the "Winter's Tale," and would refer to "hence that they belong to about the same period.

Without here adverting to the real or supposed origin of the story, or to temporary incidents which may have suggested any part of the plot, we may remark that there is one piece of external evidence which strongly tends to confirm the opinion that "The Tempest" was composed not very long before Ben Jonson wrote one of his comedies: we allude to his "Bartolomew Fair," and to a passage in "the Induction," frequently mentioned, and which we consider thinking was intended as a hint not only at "The Tempest," but at "The Winter's Tale." Ben Jonson's "Bartolomew Fair," was acted in 1614, and written perhaps in the preceding year, during the popularity of Shakespeare's two plays; and there we find the following words, which we reprint, for the first time exactly as they stand in the printed edition:

"The word 'servant-monster,' "antiques," "Tales," "Tempests," and "drolleries," which last Shakespeare himself employs in "The Tempest," (Act iii. sc. 7), seem so applicable, that they can hardly relate to anything else.

It may be urged, however, that what was represented at Court in 1611 was only a revival of an older play, acted before 1596, and such may have been the case: we do not, however, think it probable, for several reasons. One of these is an analogy of the circumstances which attended the first performance of "The Tempest," that in "The Merchant of Venice," written before 1598, the name of Stephano is invariably pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, while in "The Tempest," the proper pronunciation is as constantly required by the verse. It seems certain, therefore, that Shakespeare found his error in the interval, and he may have learnt it from Ben Jonson's "Every Man in His Humour," in which Shakespeare performed, and in the original list of characters to which, in the account of 1611, the names not only of Stephano, but of Prospero occur.

Another circumstance shows, we think almost decisively, that "The Tempest" was not written until after 1608, when the production of his latest Shakespearean drama (as we may infer from the above notice) had been introduced, like some others, to answer a temporary or complimentary purpose, and that it is given as a necessary and continuous portion of the dialogue.

The Rev. Mr. Montaigne's Essay, by Florio, makes its first appearance in print. In Act ii. sc. 1, is a passage so closely copied from Florio's version, as to leave no doubt of identity. If it be said that these lines may have been an insertion subsequent to the original production of the play, we answer, that the passage is not such as could have been introduced, like some others, to answer a temporary or complimentary purpose, and that it is given as a necessary and continuous portion of the dialogue.

The Rev. Mr. Montaigne's Essay, by Florio, makes its first appearance in print. In Act ii. sc. 1, is a passage so closely copied from Florio's version, as to leave no doubt of identity. If it be said that these lines may have been an insertion subsequent to the original production of the play, we answer, that the passage is not such as could have been introduced, like some others, to answer a temporary or complimentary purpose, and that it is given as a necessary and continuous portion of the dialogue.

That play, as it received, in his very ingenious and elaborate "Disquisition on the Tempest," has referred to this and to other points, with a view of proving that every body has hitherto been mistaken, and that this play instead of being one of his latest, was one of Shakespeare's earliest works. With regard to the point derived from Montaigne's Essay by Florio, 1608, he has contended, that if the particular essay were not separately printed before, (of which we have not the slightest hint) Shakespeare may have seen the translation in manuscript, but unless he so saw it in print or manuscript as early as 1596, nothing is established in favour of Mr. Hunter's argument; and surely when other circumstances show that "The Tempest" was not written till 1610, 2 we need not hesitate in deciding that our great dramatist went to no manuscript authority, but took the passage almost verbatim, as he found it in the complete edition. In the same way Mr. Hunter has argued, that "The Tempest" was not omitted by Meres in his list in 1608, but that it is found there under its second title, of "Love's Labours Won," but this is less better than a gratuitous assumption, even suppose we were to admit that "All's well that ends Well" is not the play intended by Meres. 3 Our notion is, that "All's well that ends Well" was originally called "Love's Labours Won," and so printed.

1 The earliest date hitherto discovered for the performance of "The Tempest" was the beginning of the year 1639, 4 which Malone established from Vertue's MSS. It was then acted by "the King's Company, before Princess Charlotte, the Princess Elizabeth, and Prince Palatine," but, where is not stated.

2 See also "prelude to the Introduction to "The Winter's Tale," the particular passage which is entitled in the Revel's Account Book," which may have been either T. Heywood's "Eape of Love swore," first printed in 1608, or a different tragedy on the same subject. 5

3 See "Allayn's raperes," printed by the Shakespeare Society, p. 67, where Delarue, under note of Nov. 18th, 1612, speaks of "Jones's may" as then about to be performed. Possibly it was deferred for a short time, as the title-page states that it was acted in 1614, but may have been written in 1612, for performance in 1613.

4 Malone (Shakesp. by Roswell, vol. v. p. 78) quotes this important passage from Florio's translation of Montaigne with a singular degree of incorrectness: with many minor variations he substitutes particions for "dividences," and omits the words "no munsing of lands" altogether. This is a case in which verbal, and even literal, notes are required.

5 In the Introduction to "The Winter's Tale," we have assigned a reason, founded upon a passage in R. Greene's "Pandosto," for believing that "The Tempest" was anterior in composition to...

6 Mr. Hunter contends that in "The Tempest" "love's labours are won," but since the play is with every play in which the love is successful passion, after difficulties and disappointments; in "The Tempest" they are fewer than in most other plays, since from first to last the love of Ferdinand and Miranda is prosperous.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

that it was revived, with some other changes, under a new name in 1605 or 1606.

Neither can we agree with Mr. Hunter in thinking that he has established that nothing was suggested to Shakespeare on the storm, in July 1609, which dispersed the fleet under Sir George Somers and Sir Thomas Gates, of which an account was published by a person of the name of Journdan in the following year. This point was, to our mind, satisfactory made out by Malone, and the notion of the "still-very-xed Bernoothes" by Shakespeare seems directly to connect the drama with Journdan's "Discovery of the Bermudas," otherwise called "the Blossoms," which was printed in 1611, at the end of the play, in the folio of 1623, that the scene is laid "in an uninhabited island," and Mr. Hunter has contended that this island was Lampedusa, which unquestionably lies in the track which the ships in "The Tempest" would take from the Bermudas to England. To this we do not persuade ourselves, that Shakespeare had any particular island in his mind; and secondly, if he had meant to lay his scene in Lampedusa, he could hardly have failed to introduce its name in some part of his provenance: in fact, Thomas is the deficiency of scenery, &c., it was the constant custom with our early dramatists to mention distinctly, and often more than once, where the action was supposed to take place. As a minor point, we may add, that we know of no extent of English coast where there has not been an island or islet. We have turned over the pages of, we believe, every Italian novelist, anterior to the age of Shakespeare, in hopes of finding some story containing traces of the incidents of "The Tempest," but without success. The ballad entitled "The Islanded Island," printed in "Farther Particulars regarding Shakespeare and his Works," is a more modern production than the play, from which it varies in the names, as well as in some parts of the story, as if for the purpose of concealing its source. Whether there was a popular form to which it refers, in truth, prove nothing, either as regards 1596 or 1591.

"If "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" were not the off-spring merely of the author's invention, we have yet to discover the source of its plot. Points of resemblance have been dwelt upon in connection with Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia," 1590, and the "Diana" of Montemayor, which was not translated into English by B. Younge until 1588; but the incidents, common to the drama and to these two works, might as well be found in other romances, or would present themselves spontaneously to the mind of a young poet: the one is the command of banditti by Valentine; and the other the assumption of male atire by Julian, for a purpose nearly similar to that of Viola in "Twelfth Night." Extracts from the "Arcadia" and the "Diana" are to be found in "Shakepeare's Library," vol. ii. The notion of some critics, that "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" contains few or no marks of Shakespeare's hand, is a strong proof of their incompetence to form a judgment.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

["A Most pleasant and excellent concocted Comedy, of Sir John Falstaffe, and the merrie Wives of Windsor. Enter-mixed with sundrie variable and pleasing humors, by Sir Hugh the Welsh knight, Justice Shallow, and his wise Cousin M. Sinder. With the swaggaing name of Ancient Fintoll, and Corporal Nym. Written by W. Shakespeare. Printed for Arthur Johnson, 1619." 4to. 27 leaves.

"Every Man in his Humour," but while we admit the antecutenes we cannot by any means allow the conclusiveness, of Mr. Hunter's reasoning.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

The 4to. of 1630, was "printed by T. H. for R. Meghren," &c. In the folio,1623, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" occupies twenty-two pages, viz. from p. 39 to p. 60 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It also stands third in the three later folios.

The comedy was printed for the first time in a perfect state in the folio of 1623: it had come out in an imperfect state in 1615, both in the "First Folio," of which neither the "name" nor the "title-page" states, that it had been "acted by the Lord Chamberlain's servants" before the Queen "elsewhere." "Elsewhere," was perhaps at the Globe on the Bankside, and we may suppose, that it had been brought out, without the permission of the management of 1606, before the death of Sir Thomas Lucy. If the "dozen white laces" in the first scene were meant to ridicule her, Shakespeare would certainly not have introduced the allusion after the death of the poet, unless we can readily believe, and we learn that it was acted before James I., not long after he came to the throne: the following memorandum is contained in the accounts of the "Revels at Court," in the latter end of 1605:

"Mr. John Jolly and Mr. John SIMPLE. The last following a Play of the Merry Wives of Windsor.

This representation occurred on "the Sunday following" Nov. 1st., 1604.

We have here some to imagine that the surreptitious impression of 1602 was the comedy as it first came from the hands of Shakespeare, is a tradition respecting the rapidity with which it was composed. This tradition, when traced to its source, can be carried back no farther than 1705: John Dennis in that year printed his "Comical Gallant," founded on the "Merry Wives of Windsor," and in the dedication he states, that "the comedy was written at the command of Queen Elizabeth, and by her direction; and she was so eager to see it acted, that she commanded it to be finished in four days!" This gives no authority for any part of this assertion, but because he knew Dryden, it is supposed to have come from him; and because Dryden was acquainted with Davenant, it has been conjectured that the latter might have interpolated or rewritten parts of the text without reference or reliance on the story, especially recollecting that Dennis had to make out a case in favour of his alterations, by showing that Shakespeare had composed the comedy in an incomparably shorter period, and therefore that he was guilty of improvement. The assertion by Dennis was repeated by Gildon, Pope, Theobald, &c., and hence it has obtained a degree of unmerited credit which it seems by no means entitled to.

There has been a disputed question in what part of the series of dramas in which Falstaff is introduced, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ought to be read: Johnson thought it came in between "Henry IV. part ii," and "Henry V.," Malone, on the other hand, argued that it should be placed between the two parts of "Henry IV.," but the truth is, that almost insuperable difficulties present themselves to either hypothesis, and we doubt whether the one or the other is well founded. Shakespeare, having for some reason been advised to remove Falstaff from the parts of persons he might be immediately surrounded, and Bardolph, Pistol, Nym, and Mrs. Quickly, naturally presented themselves to his mind: he was aware that the audience, with whom they had been so long familiar, was not disposed still to be Falstaff's companions; and though Shakespeare had in fast hanged two of them in "Henry V.," and Mrs. Quickly had died, he might trust to the forgetfulness of those before whom the comedy was to be represented, and perhaps the readers, who have not laid down their books in time to observe the introduction. Any other mode of solving the modern difficulty seems unsatisfactory, and we do not believe that it ever presented itself to the mind of our great dramatist.

The earliest notice of any of the parts in "The Merry Wives of Windsor," is contained in Dekker's play called "Satromastix," 1602, where one of the characters observes, "We have six days since we got amaz'd at some silly jests of master Justice Shallow." This allusion must have been made some years after Shakespeare's comedy had appeared, unless, indeed, it were to the Justice Shallow of "Henry IV." part ii.

With regard to the supposed source of the plot, they have been sought by some to be founded on a play of the same name, by Drury, as the representation of the imperfect edition of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in 1609; the tale of "The Two Lovers of Pad," the only known English version of the time, is also contained in "Shakespeare's Library," Vol. ii.; but our opinion is, that the true original of the story (if Shakespeare did not himself invent the incidents) has not come down to us.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

["Measure for Measure" was first printed in the folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, & Tragedies," 1623, where it occupies twenty-four pages, viz. from p. 61 to p. 84, inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It was, of course, reprinted, in the later folios of 1664, 1664, and 1685.]

In the "History of English Dramatic Poetry," III. 65, it is remarked, that "although it seems clear that Shakespeare did the play of "Measure for Measure," from which he derived his dialogue, that while writing "Measure for Measure," it is probable that he also made use of some other dramatic composition or novel, in which the same story was treated." I was led to form this opinion from the constant dependence of dramatists of that period to employ the productions of their predecessors, and from the extreme likelihood, that when our old play-writers were hunting in all directions for stories which they could convert to their purpose, they would not have passed over the novel by Giraldi Cinthio, which had not only been translated, but had no previous extraneous knowledge of any early performance of "The Merry Wives of Windsor."
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Stevenes quotes a passage from "A True Narration of the Entertainment" of the King on his way from Edinburgh to London, in 1585, where it is stated that Shakespeare was acting in London and performed an exhibition against the inordinate and dally access of people coming. Taken with the context, the line above quoted read like an insertion.

Most may, therefore, profitably at the conclusion, that "Measure for Measure" was written either at the close of 1603, or in the beginning of 1604.

"Measure for Measure" was first printed in the folio of 1623; and extremely valuable was the introduction of Valpy, and the "12th" of the "Literary Remains," li. 122: "This play, which is Shakespeare's throughout, is to me the most painful, say rather, the most painful part of his genuine works. The comic and tragic parts equally border on the monotonous—the one being disgusting, the other horrible—and the pardon and marriage of Angelo not merely baffles the strong indignant claim of justice (for cruelty, with lust and damnable baseless, cannot be forgiven, because we cannot conceive them as being morally repentant of), but it is likewise degrading to the character of woman." In the course of Lectures on Shakespeare delivered in the year 1818, Coleridge pointed especially to the character of the female sex, and the circumstances which tended to lower the character of the female sex. He then called "Measure for Measure" only the "least agreeable" of Shakespeare's dramas.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

"The Comedie of Errors" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies sixteen pages, viz. from p. 85 to p. 100 inclusively. One of the earliest editions of "Comedies" it was reprinted in the three subsequent impressions of the same volume.

We have distinct evidence of the existence of an old play called "The Historie of Error," which was acted at Hampton Court on new-year's night, 1576-7. The same play, in all probability, was repeated at Windsor on twelfth night, 1582-3, though, in the account of the Master of the Revels, it is called "The Historie of Ferrar." Boswell (Mal. Shakesp. III. 400.) not very happily conjectured, that this "Historie of Ferrar" was some piece by George Ferrar, as if it had been named after its author, who had been dead some years: the fact, no doubt, that the play is by Shakespeare, but he did not write the title by his ear. Thus we see that, shortly before Shakespeare is supposed to have come to London, a play was in course of performance upon which his own "Comedy of Errors" might have been founded. Such was probably, an early adaptation of the "Menaphon" of Plautus, of which a free translation was published in 1590, under the following title:

"A pleasant and fine Concluded Comedie, taken out of the most excellent wittie Poet Plautus: Chosen purposely from out the rest, as least harmfull, and yet most delightful. Written in English by W. W.—London, Printed by Tho. Creede, and are to be sold by William Barley, at his shop in Corn-street. 1595. 4to."

The title-page, therefore, does not (as we might be led to suppose from Steevens's reprint in the "Six Old Plays") mention the "Menaphon" by name, but we learn from the context of the book itself.

Ritson was of opinion, that "Shakespeare was not under the slightest obligation" to the translation of the "Menaphon," by W. W., supposed, by Ant. Wood (Ath. Oxon. by Bils. I 766), to be W. Warner: and most likely it was not. But, not wanting of resemblance, but because "The Comedy of Errors" was, in all probability, anterior in point of date, n.4 because Shakespeare may have availed himself of the old drama which, as has been noticed, was performed at court in 1581 and 1583. They have both that origin in Plautus; and it was, perhaps, the popularity of Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors" which induced Creede to print Warner's version of the "Menaphon" in 1595. Therefore, from a putative of Elyot and Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors," and possibly from the "Menaphon," or of Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors," but those points we may suppose to have been derived immediately through the court-dramas, and not directly from Plautus. Sir W.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Blackstone entertained the belief, from the "long hollering verses" in the "Comedy of Errors," that it was "among Shakespeare's earliest," this is plausible, but we infer, from their general dissimilarity to the style of our great dramatist, that these "long hollering verses" formed a portion of the old court-drama, of which Shakespeare re-casted and made quite in the style of true comedy anterior to the time of Shakespeare, and it is easy to distinguish such portions of the comedy as he must have written.

The earliest notice we have of "The Comedy of Errors," is in the edition of Plutarch's Tamps., 1598, where he gives it to Shakespeare under the name of "Errors." How much before that time it had been written and produced on the stage, we can only speculate. Malone refers to a part of the dialogue in Act III, scene 1, between Dromio of Ephesus, conversing with her, and the "kitchen wench" who insisted upon making love to him, and who was so fat and round—"spherical like a globe"—that Dromio could find out countries in her.

"Ant. S. Where France?" "Dro. S. In her head: arm'd and reverted, making war against her head."

It is supposed that an equivocation was intended on the word "head" (which was nothing but a corruption of "hair"), and that Shakespeare alluded to the civil war in France, which began in the middle of 1598, and did not terminate until the close of 1599. This notion seems well founded, and there would be but little difficulty in it; and it accords pretty exactly with the time when we may believe "The Comedy of Errors" to have been written. But here we have a range of four years and a half, and we can arrive at no conclusion more or less probable than that of a period about 1598-9, or 1599.

"By his Mai's Plagers. On Inosents Night, the play of Errors," the name of Shackerd, or Shakespeare, being inserted in the margin as "the name of his hand." The epithet of "his hand," therefore, not only "revived," but represented at court very soon after James I. came to the crown; we may be confident, however, that the question respecting Shackerd were not repeated on the occasion, although retained in the MS. used by the actors-editors for the folio of 1623.

In his Lectures on Shakespeare in 1818, Coleridge passed over "The Comedy of Errors" without any particular or separate observation; but in his "Lectures on England and French Poets" we find the following notice (vol. ii. 90 and 114), in much the same terms. "Shakespeare," he observes, "has in this piece presented us with a legitimate force, in exactest consonance with the philosophical principles and character of nature as distinguished from comedy and entertainments. A proper force is mainly distinguished from comedy by the license allowed, and even required, in the fable, in order to produce strange and lucentable situations. The story need not be so. A comedy would probably be more so. Even now the two Antipholiuses, because, although there have been instances of almost undistinguishable likenesses, is in two persons, yet these are mere individual accidents, causas ludendi nature, and the verum will not excuse the inserat

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

"MUCH ado about Nothing. As it hath been sundrie times publickly acted by the right honourable, the Lord Chamberlain's, or his servants. Written by William Shakespeare. Printed by Andrew Wise, and William Aspley. 1600. 4to. 30 leaves."

It is also printed in the division of "Comedies" in the folio 1623, where it comprises twenty-one pages, viz., from folio 101, to p. 121, inclusive. The book is reprinted in Malone, 1796, 2nd Ed., with some other folios.

We have information respecting "Much Ado about Nothing" anterior to the appearance of the 4to edition in 1600, excepting that it was entered for publication on the books of the Stationers' Company, on the 26th of August in that year, in the following memorandum:

"23 Aug, 1600. And, Wise Wm. Aspley Two books, the one called Muchado about Nothing, and the other The Second Part of the History of King Henry the Seventh, with the Humors of Sir John Falstaff, by Mr. Shakespeare."

There is another memorandum in the same register bearing date on the 4th August, without the year, which runs in these terms:—"As you like it, a book, by Mr. Shakespear, a copy for another. The Comedy of Ado about Nothing, a book." Opposite the titles of these plays are added the words, "be to be staid." This last entry, there is little doubt, belongs to the year 1599, for Nebi is the date immediately preceding; Malone, therefore, is of opinion that Shakespeare inserted the notice for staying the publication of "MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING" and the two other plays, did not think it necessary to repeat the figures. The arrival of the 4th August against the publication had most likely been withdrawn by the 23rd of the same month. The object of the "stay" was probably to prevent the publication of "Henry V," "Every Man in His Humour," and "Much Ado about Nothing," by any other book-sellers than Wise and Aspley.

The 4to. of "MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING," which came out in 1600, (and we know of no other impression in that form) is a well-printed work for the time, and the type is unusually good. It contains no hint from which we can at all distinctly infer the date of its composition, but Malone supposed that it was written early in the year in which it came from the press. Considering, however, that the comedy would have to be got up, set, and become popular, before it could receive any attention, or appear as a separate composition, it is reasonable to suppose that the play may reasonably be carried back as far as the autumn of 1599. That it was popular, we can hardly doubt, and the extracts from the Stationers' Registers seem to show that apprehensions were felt, lest rival book-sellers should publish it to be read.

It is not included by Mere in his list he furnishes in his "Paladius Tanae, 1598; and "Englann's Paramours, 1600," contains no quotation from it. If any allusion is drawn from this fact, it might be, that it was written subse-

- Much Ado about Nothing, (as I understand from one of Mr. Vertue, MSS.) formerly passed under the title of "Bedereck and Beaming." Homer, the player, received, on the 20th May, 1613, the sum of £40, and £20 more as his Majesty's gratuity, for exhibiting the play in the Court, among which was this comedy, a book. The clue of the title, if it may be pronounced, was, not that it was made, could only have been temporary. The divisions of Acts (Scenes are not marked) were first made in the folio of 1623. The adaptation of "Much Ado about Nothing," on the different incidents of another of Shakespeare's dramas (see the "Introduction" to "Measure for Measure," by Sir William Davenant, was first printed in the edition of his works in 1673.

The serious portion of the plot of "MUCH ADO ABOUT SOMETHING"
Nothing," which relates to Hero, Claudio, and "John the Bastard," is extremely similar to the story of Ariodante and Genevra, in Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso," B. v. It was separately versified in English by Pemberton, "The Last Act of a Picture of Righteous and Juilyt," 1562, and of Bernard Garter's "Two English Lovers," 1588; and it was printed by Thomas East, without date, two or three years after those poems had appeared. It was licensed for the press in 1589, and was put on the stage of the Queen's. (The following is a nearly verbatim copy from the folio, 1623, with the addition of some errors of the press.)

There is a general concurrence of opinion that "Love's Labour's Lost" was one of Shakespeare's earliest productions for the stage. It would appear that the "Loyal Comedie" of 1598 was sufficiently impromptuized over Shakespeare's own multifacility, by imaginary self-position, or out of such a country town and a school-boy's observation might supply. The only objection to this theory is, that at the time "Love's Labour's Lost," which neither seems to have been acquiesced in same degree with the nature of the Italian comic performances; but this acquaintance he might have acquired comparatively early in life. The character of Armado is that of a Spanish braggart, very much such a personage as was common on the Italian stage, and figures in OE Ingomari, (which, as the Rev. Joseph Hunter was the first to point out, Shakespeare saw before he wrote his "Twelfth Night," under the name of Giglio; in the same comedy, as M. Purkis will observe, there are not a few novel from which this comedy had been derived, adds that "the story has most of the features of an ancient romance"; but it is not at all impossible that Shakespeare found some corresponding inci- dents in Ariosto, and several of his plays have not met with any such production, although, if used by Shakespeare, it most likely came into this country in a printed form.

The question whether Shakespeare visited Italy, and at what period of his life, cannot properly be considered here; but it is a very important point in relation both to his biography and works. It was certainly a very general custom for our poets to travel thither towards the close of their lives, and various instances of long sojourns are on record. Robert Greene tells us in his "Repentance," 1592, that he had been in Italy and Spain; Thomas Nash, about the same date, mentions what he had seen in France and Italy; and Daniel has several early sonnets on his "going to Italy," and on his residence there. Some of our most celebrated actors of that time also made journeys across the Alps; and Mr. Hallowell, in the notes to his "Coventry Mysteries," printed for the Shakespeare Society, has shown that Sylph, the actor who performed Dogberry in "Much Ado about Nothing," was in Rome in 1601.

It is vain to attempt to fix with any degree of precision the date when "Love's Labour's Lost" was first printed. As far as we now know, in 1599, 4to, and then it professed on the title-page to have been "newly corrected and augmented; it was likewise there told that it was presented before Queen Elizabeth, "the last Christmas." It was not uncommon for dramatists to revise and add to their plays when they were selected for exhibition at court, and such may have been the ease with "Love's Labour's Lost" for many years after that time. For the year this period did not end until 25th March. It seems likely that the comedy had been written six or even eight years before, that it was revised in 1596, with certain corrections and augmentaconversant in the history of the middle ages, with their Courts of Love, and all that lighter drapery of chivalry, which engaged even mighty kings, with a sort of semi-coronation. Certainly, we are neither."

This Thomas Lodge's "Royal Armoir of Loyal Poesie," 1564, contains an ill-written ballad, called "The Revolution, a love-story," founded upon the serious portion of "Much Ado about Nothing" which we have considered, and which if this juvenile drama had been the only one extant of our Shakespeare, and if it possessed the tradition only of its riper works, or accounts of them in the tradition of the time might be reasonably expected to have come down to us, we may well imagine that its characteristics might we not still have discovered in "Love's Labour's Lost," though as in a portrait taken of him in his riper years, so a notice is a true likeness of the poet's character and his general character and his characteristics throughout the whole of the first scene of the play, rendered natural, as it is, by the choice of the characters and the whimsical determination equally, yet not altogether so very improbable to those who are p. 44, inclusive. It was reprinted in 1631, 4to, ["by W. S.,"] and Smethwick; and the title-page states that it was published "as it was acted by his Majesties servants at the Globe Theatre.""

In 'The Second Fruits,' 1601, where he complained of the want of decorum in English dramatic representations. The pronunciation was evidently insignificant and we say "safely deliver the whole conjecture as unfounded."

tions for performance before the Queen; and this circumstances was immediately afterwards. The evidence derived from passages and allusions in the piece, to which Malone refers in his "Chronological Order," is clearly of little value, and he does not himself place much confidence in it. "Love Labour Lost" is mentioned by Beaumont and Fletcher in their printed collections, and in the summer of 1600, in the same year that the "Midsummer-Night’s Dream" was first printed, because Spenser was not dead in 1598, when "Midsummer-Night’s Dream" was mentioned by Mures. It is very doubtful whether any particular reference was made to Shakespeare, who, perhaps, could not advert in strong terms to the religious nature of learning. T. Warton carried the question back to shortly subsequent to the year 1591, when Spenser’s " Tears of the Muses" was printed, which, from the time of Rowe to that of Malone, was considered to contain passages highly imitative of Shakespeare. There is a slight coincidence of expression between Spenser and Shakespeare, in the poem of the one, and in the drama of the other, which deserves remark: Spenser says,—

"Our pleasant Willy, ah, is dead of late.

And one of Shakespeare’s lines is,—

"Of learning, late deceas’d in beggary."

Yet it is quite clear, from a subsequent stanza in "The Tears of the Muses," that Spenser did not refer to the natural death of "My Willy" whom he was, but only that he "rather chose to sit in idle cell," than write in such unfavourable times. In the same manner, Shakespeare might not mean that Spenser (if the allusion indeed be to him) was actually "deceased," but merely, as Spenser expresses it in his "Colin Clive," if that he was "dead in his soul," and "by an allusion to Queen Elizabeth as the "fair vestal, tiréd of the west," in A. ii. sc. 1, affords no note of time. It seems highly probable that "A Midsummer Night’s Dream" was not written before the summer of 1594, and if the speech of Titania in A. ii. sc. 1, were intended to describe the real state of the kingdom, from the extraordinary wetness of the season, we may infer that the drama came from the pen of Shakespeare at the close of 1594, or in the beginning of 1595. Written by James Roberts, 1600. 32 leaves.

Printed by James Roberts, 1600. 32 leaves. In the folio, 1623, it occupies 18 pages, viz, from p. 145 to 162 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It is of course, like the other plays, inserted in the later folio edition.

This drama, which on the title-page of the earliest editions is not called comedy, history, nor tragedy, but which is included by the player-editors of the first folio among the "comedies" of Shakespeare, was twice printed in 1600, for "The Theatre, and the Curtain," both booksellers, and employed someunnamed printer; but Roberts was a printer as well as a bookseller. The only entry of it at Stationers’ Hall is to Fisher, and it runs as follows:—

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

The Merchant of Venice.

The excellent History of the Merchant of Venice. With the extreme cruelty of Shylock the Jew towards the said Merchant, in cutting a just pound of his flesh, and the obtaining of Portia, by the choice of three caskets. Written by W. Shakspeare. Printed by J. Roberts, 1600. 4to, 48 leaves.

The most excellent Historie of the Merchant of Venise. With the extreme cruelty of Shylock the Jewe towards the said Merchant, in cutting a just pound of his flesh; and the obtaining of Portia by the choyse of three caskets. As it hath beene acted in the year 1600. By the Seruants. Written by William Shakspeare. At London, Printed by I. R., for Thomas Heyes, and are to be sold in Pauls Church-yard, at the signe of the Greene Dragon, price 6d a booke.

It is also printed in the folio, 1623, where it occupies 25 pages, viz. from p. 163 to p. 184, inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." Besides its appearance in the later folios, the Merchant of Venice was republished in 1610, 1637 and 1652.

The two plays of Venice are treated in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" and "The Merchant of Venice," and were written about the same period. The incidents of Venice are distinct novels in various ancient foreign authorities, but no English original of either of them of the age of Shakespeare has been discovered. That there were such originals is highly probable, but if so they have perished with many other relics of our popular literature. Whether the separate incidents, relating to the bond and to the caskets, were ever combined in the same novel, as all as Shakespeare combined them in his dramatic essay, of course to be determined. Stueve asserts boldly, that "as a play, comprehending the distinct plots of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" had been exhibited long before he commenced a writer;" and the evidence he adduces is a passage from Gesson's "School of Abuse," 1679, where he says, "I have in 1600 seen a new play called "The Jew," and the other "Polone," of the former Gesson states, that it "represented the greediness of worldly chasers, and bloody minds of usurers." (Shakespeare Society's Representative Edition, 1903.) The terms "moneylenders" and "usurers" may certainly have reference to the choice of the caskets; and the conduct of Shylock may very well be intended by the words, "bloody minds of usurers." It is possible, therefore, that a theatrical performance should have existed, anterior to the time of Shakespeare, in which the separate plots were united; and it is not unlikely that some novel had been published which gave the same incidents in a narrative form. "On the whole," says the learned and judicious Tytwhart, "I am inclined to suspect that Shakespeare followed something like an unknown novelist, who had saved him the trouble of working up the two stories into one."

Both stories are found separately in the Latin Gesta Romana, with considerable variations: that of the bond is chap. xlvii. of MS. Harley 2270, as referred to by Tytwhart; and that of the caskets is chap. xcvii. of the same collection. The Poets' Manual Guide gives a similar account to that of "The Merchant of Venice," with respect to the bond, the disguise and agreeable Portia, and the gift of the ring. This narrative (Gorn. iv. 1.) was written as early as the year 1675, but not printed in Italy until 1567. It is the merest trash, with no connection, in which the hero was engaged, is there laid in the dwelling of a lady at Belmont. These adventures seem afterwards to have been changed, in some English version, for the incident of the caskets. The character of Duke (Gorn. iv. 1.) a choice of caskets is introduced, but it does not in other respects resemble the choice as we find it in Shakespeare; while the latter, even to the inscriptions, is extremely like the history in the Gesta Romana.

The earliest date in English, within the range of any circumstances connected with the bond and its forfeiture, is contained in "The Orator: handling a Hundred sever. Discourses," a translation from the French of Alexander Silver, Anthony Munday, who published it under the name of Lazarus Plow. In 1596, 4to, there, with the head of "Declarcation 66," we find one: "Of a Jew, who would have his debt a pound of flesh of a Christian;" and it is followed by "The Christian's Answer," but nothing of the incident, out of which these "declarations" arose. Of the old ballad of "The Cruelitie of germuates, A Jew," in "Perey's Reliques," 1. 228 (edit. 1612) no dated edition is known; but most readers will be inclined to agree with Warton ("Obser. on the History of the Q." 1791) that the circumstance attached upon Shakespeare's play, and was anterior to it: it might owe its origin to the ancient drama of "The Jew," mentioned by Gossen, "Henslowe's Diary," under date of 25th Aug. 1594, contains an entry relating to the release of the Venetian Company, which a somewhat conjectured might mean "The Merchant of Venice," and it is a circumstance not to be passed over, that in 1594 the company of actors to which Shakespeare was attached was playing at the theatre in Newington Butts, as far as we can now learn, with the company of which Henslowe was chief manager.

Meres has "The Merchant of Venice" in his list, which was published in 1598, and we have no means of knowing how long prior to that date it was written. The Venetian Council of Honour, it was in a course of performance in August, 1594. The earliest entry regarding "The Merchant of Venice" in the Stationers' Register is curious, from its particularity:

"28 July, 1595, James Roberts. A booke of the Marriage of Venice, or otherwise called the Jewe of Venice. Provided that yt bee not printed by the said James Roberts, or anye other whatsoever, without lyence first had from the right honourable the Lord Chamberlain."

Shakespeare was one of the players of the Lord Chamberlain, and the object seems to have been to prevent the publication of the play without the consent of the company, to be signified through the nobleman under whose patronage they acted. This caution was given two years before the "Merchant of Venice" actually appeared on the stage. We find it published in 1600, both by J. Roberts and by Thomas Heyes, in favour of the last of whom we meet with another entry in the Stationers' books, without any proviso, dated,—

"28 Oct. 1600, Thomas Haines. The booke of the Merchant of Venice."

By this time the "lyence" of the Lord Chamberlain for printing the play had probably been obtained. At the bottom of the title-page of Roberts's edition of 1600, no place is stated where it was to be purchased: it is said: "The imprint to the edition of Heyes informs us that it was "printed by I. E.," and that it was "sold in Pauls Church-yard," &c. &c. The print of the edition of Heyes, was, most likely, J. Roberts; but it is entirely a difficulty to determine to which play this is the same year with the name of Roberts. The edition of Roberts is on the whole, to be preferred to that of Heyes; but the editors of the folio of 1623 indisputably employed that of Heyes, adopting variations from various authorities of the text. These are pointed out in our notes in the course of the play. The similarity between the names of Salario, Salarino, and Salerio, in "The Draconia Postera," has led to some confusion of the speakers of the later edition of the folio, which it has not always been found easy to set right.

"The Merchant of Venice" was performed before James I., on Shrove-Sunday, and again on Shrove-Tuesday, 1606; hence we have a right to infer that it gave great satisfaction at court. The fact is thus recorded in the original account.

of expenses, made out by the Master of the Revels, and still preserved in the Audit Office:

"By His Ma'tie Platers. On Shrovesunday a play of the Marchant of Venice."

"By his Majesty's. On Shrovesunday a play caled the Marchent of Venice againe, commanded by the Kings Ma'tie."

The name of Shaxberd, for Shakespeare, as "the poet which made the play," is added in the margin opposite both the above memorandums, indicating the popularity of this drama before the closing of the theatres in 1612, it seems to have been so much forgotten soon after the Restoration, that in 1690, Thomas Jordan made a ballad out of the story of it in his Royal Artist of Loyal Poets," and thought himself so liberty to pervert the original, by making the Jew's daughter the principal instrument of punishing her own father: at the trial, she takes the office which Shakespeare assigns to

AS YOU LIKE IT.

"As You Like It" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where

"2 occupies twenty-three pages, viz., from p. 185 to p. 207 includin in the 'stage directions, a book."

"It preserved its place in the three subsequent impressions of that volume in 1632, 1640, and 1685.

"As You Like It" is not only founded upon, but in some points very closely copied from, a novel by Thomas Lodge, under the title of "Rosalynde: Euphues Golden Legacie," which was published in 1590, as well as Act 2, and 1592, and a third edition came out in 1598. We have no in-intelligence of any re-impression of it between 1595 and 1598.
This third edition perhaps appeared early in 1598, and we are certainly to think that the republication of so particular a work directed Shakespeare's attention to it. So, "As You Like It may have been written in the summer of 1598, and first acted in the winter of the same, or in the spring of the following year.

The entry in the registers of the Stationers' Company relating to "As You Like It," is confirmatory of this supposition. It has been already referred to in the "Introduction" so "Much Ado About Nothing" and it will be well to insert it here, precisely in the manner in which it stands in the original record:

"4 August,

"As you like yt, a booke. Henry the fift, a booke. Every man in his humor, a booke. The Comedie of Much Ado About Nothing, a booke."

Opposite this memorandum are added the words "To be staid." It will be remarked, that there is an important defciency in the entry, as regards the purpose to which we wish to apply it, and which is not in the least宓 inconceivable, and in that conjecture I have expressed concurrence, that the clerk who wrote the titles of the four plays, with the date of "4 August," did not think it necessary there to repeat the year 1590, as it was found in the memorandum immediately above. We know from the above reference to Shakespeare's "Henry the Fifth," and "Much Ado About Nothing," were both printed in 1590, and Ben Jonson's "Every Man in his Humour" in the year following; though Gifford, in his edition of that poet's works (vol. i. p. 29), by a strange error states, that the first impression was in 1593. The "stay," as regards "Henry the Fifth," "Every Man in his Humour," and "Much Ado About Nothing," was doubtless soon removed;
for "Henry the Fifth" was entered again for publication on the 12 August; and, as has been already shown, Wible and Aspley took the same course with "Much Ado About Nothing" on the 23rd August. There is no known edition of
"As You Like It" prior to its appearance in the folio of 1595 of Chereipe, which, according to Stowe's "Survey of London," was set up in 1596, and was in decay in 1608.
This figure of Diana did not "weep;" for Stowe expressly states that the water came "spilling from her naked breast.
"Therefore," this passage proves nothing as far as respects the date of "As You Like It." Shakespeare probably intended to make no allusion to any particular fountain.

It is not to be forgotten, in deciding upon the probable date of
"As You Like It," that Mercers makes no mention of it in his "Shakespeare" in 1595; and that it was not until Stationer's Hall on the 4th August (1600), we may conclude that it was written and acted in that interval. In A. iii. sc. 5, a line from the first Sebastian of Marlowe's "Hero and Leander" is quoted;
and as that poem was first printed in 1598, "As You Like It" must not have been written before 1598. There is no doubt that Lodge, when composing his " Ros-alynde: Euphues Golden Legacie," which he did, as he informs us, while on a voyage with Captain Clarke, "to the isslands of Terceras and Canaries," had either "The Coke's Tale of Gamelyn" ([falsely attributed to Chaucer, as Tyrwhit contends in his Intro. to the Cant. Tales, i. clxxiii. Edit.
1836.) strongly in his recollection, or, which does not seem very probable in such a situation, with a manuscript of it actually before him. It was not printed until more than a century afterwards. According to Farmer, Shakespeare looked no farther than Lodge's novel, which he followed in
"As You Like It" quite as closely as he did Greene's "Pundosto," in the "Winter's Tale." There are one or two conincidences of expression between "As You Like It" and "The Coke's Tale of Gamelyn," but not perhaps more than might be accidental, and the opinion of Farmer appears to be sufficient to prove that "As You Like It" was only printed as part of "Shakespeare's Library," and it will be easy, therefore, for the reader to trace the particular ressem-lances between it and "As You Like It."

In his Lectures in 1818, Coleridge eloquently and justly proposed the pastime of reading the "Winter's Tale" and "As You Like It," but he did not attempt to compare it with Lodge's "Ro-salynde," where the descriptions of persons and of scenery are comparatively forced and artificial:—"Shakespeare," said Coleridge, "never treated the theme with so much scenery merely for its own sake, or to show how well he can paint natural objects: he is never tedious or elaborate, but while he now and then displays marvellous accuracy and minuteness of knowledge, he usually only touches upon the larger features and broader characteristics in his narratives, leaving up to the imagination. Thus in "As You Like It" he describes an oak of many centuries growth in a single line:—

"Under an oak whose antique root peeps out."

Other and inferior writers would have dwelt on this description, and worked it out with all the patience and impert-ience of detail. In Shakespeare the "antique root" furnishes the whole picture.

These expressions are copied from notes made at the time;
and they partially, though imperfectly, supply an obvious explanation of some criticism in vol. ii. p. 115, of Coleridge's "Literary Remains."

Adam Spencer is a character in "The Coke's Tale of Gamelyn, and in Lodge's "Rosalynde," and a great additional influence on this play attaches to its resemblance to the exsistence of truth, that the part was originally sustained by Shakepeare himself. We have this statement on the authority of Oidy's MSS.: he is said to have derived it, immediately of course, from Gilbert Shakespeare, who survived the Restoration, and who had a faint recollection of having seen his brothet William "in one of his own comedies, wherein, being to personate a decrepit old man, he wore a long beard, and appeared so weak and drooping, and unable to walk, that he was forced to be supported and carried by another person to a table, at which he was seated among some company, who were eating, and one of them sung a song." This description very exactly tallies with "As You Like It," A. ii. sc. 7.

Shakespeare found no prototypes in Lodge, nor in any of other work yet discovered, of any of the characters of the name of James Touchstone, and Andrey. On the admirable manner in which he has made them part of the staple of his story, and on the importance of these additions, it is needless to enlarge.
It is more singular, that Shakespeare should have made the characters of the name of Jaques into the same play; but in the old impressions, Jaques de Bois, in the prefixes to his speeches, is merely called the "Second Brother."

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

"[The Taming of the Shrew] was first printed in the folio of 1598, where it occupies twenty-two pages, viz. from p. 308 to page 329 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies." It was reprinted in the three later folios."

1 If we suppose that the third edition of Lodge's "Rosalynde" was occasioned by the popularity of Shakespeare's comedy, founded upon one of the earlier impressions in 1590 or 1592, it would show the "As You Like It" was acted in 1598, and in that sense have been written in 95"
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS

that Coleridge and Tuck are right in their conclusion, that "All's Well that Ends Well," which was printed for the first time in the folio of 1623, contains indications of the workings of Shakespeare's mind, and speaks of his composition at two separate periods. It is a point of some controversy, whether the "Love Labours Lost" and "Love Labours Won" of Mercia were the same piece as "All's Well that Ends Well." The supposition is not unsupported, for it was originally the fourth part of "Love Labours Won," as its second title. I do not pretend that Mr. Hunter, with all his acuteness and learning, has made out his case satisfactorily; and in our introduction to "The Tempest," some reasons were assigned that to play to the Tower in 1611, Mr. Hunter argues that the "Twelfth" even more than "All's Well that Ends Well," deserves the significant name of "Love Labours Lost," and he certainly is successful in showing that "All's Well that Ends Well" has all the qualities of a separate and sole title in two separate quotations of 1668. They are from towards the close of the play, and not, perhaps, with the strongest evidence that this portion was one of its author's later efforts.

My notion is (and the speculation of others is not so strong), that "All's Well that Ends Well? was in the first instance, and was simply called "Love Labours' Lost," and it had a clear reference to "Love Labours' Won," and that of which it might be considered the counterpart. It was perhaps, by so many, and so close, and with alteration in 1605 or 1606, when the former portion ("All's Well that Ends Well") was given to it. At this date, however, "Love Labours' Lost" probably continued to be represented; and we learn from a warrant of 1609 that it was chosen for performance at court between Jan. 1 and April 5, the entry runs in these terms:—"Betwixt Newer Day and Twelfth Day, a play of Love's Labours Lost." The name of the author, and of the company by whom the piece was acted, are not in this instance given. We have one other instance that "All's Well that Ends Well" met with the same distinction. Possibly Shakespeare altered its name, in order to give an appearance of greater novelty to the representation on its revival. This surprise, if well founded, would account for the difference in the titles, as we find them in Mercia and in the folio of 1623.

The name entering into the question, whether Shakespeare understood Italian, of which we think, little doubt exists, here must be considered. He might, as we have seen, have entertained, we need not suppose that we know of such a title as "Decameron," the story of which is already translated to his hands, in the form of a volume, in 1606. It is the 9th novel of the third book of Boccaccio's "Decameron," and it is the 12th novel of the first book of "The Palace of Pleasure." In the 3rd edition of the latter, it bears the following title, which is very literally translated by Painter:—"Giglotta di Nerbona guariute il Re di Francia d'un azzoletta: dominata per marito Beltramo di Rossignole; il quale contra suo voglia sposata, a Firenze se ne per bello amore, dove vogliaggando una giovane, in nome di lei Giglotta gente con lui e, hebbe due figliuoli; e perche egli poco havutava caro per moglie la tiene." The English version by Painter may be read in "Shakespeare's English version of the Decameron" (second edition, 1733), and hence it is probable that the poet was only second as to his use of "Decameron," and its value as a source for the outline of his plot, as regards Helena, Bertram, the Widow, and Diana. All that belongs to the characters of the Continent, The Chorus, and Commedia dell'Arte, in which the last is engaged, is derived from the "Decameron." But, to know the invention of Shakespeare, we have to turn to Boccaccio. The only name Boccaccio (and after him Painter) gives are Giglotta and Beltramo: the latter Shakespeare novellizes as Henry, and Bertram; and he changed Giglotta to Helena, probably because he had already named the title of one of his heroes, Shakespeare much degrades the character of Bertram, towards the end of the drama, by the duplicity, and ever false-faith, he makes him display: Coleridge (Lit. Lond. ii, 191) was convinced by the fact that in A. ii. sce. 6, Helena, "Shake- speare's loveliest character," speaks that which is untrue under the appearance of necessity; but using the word with the King of telling a lie, in order to avoid the truth, and of persisting in the winding up of the story occurs at Roussillon, as in Shakespeare, but the King is no party to the scene.

The substitution of Helena for Isabella as the "Measure for Measure" we attribute to Marianna for a common incident in Italian novels. One of these was inserted: "Narbon: the Labyrinth of Libris," by Austin Saker, 4to, 1650; a romance in which the scene is laid in Vienna, but the manner and means of Laura, where the object was done by a woman upon her reluctant hus-band; but the resemblance to the incident in "All's Well that Ends Well" is only general.

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

["Twelfth Night, Or what You Will," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-one pages; viz. from p. 275 inclusive, in the division of "Comedies," p. 276 having been left blank, and unpage. It appears in the same form in the three later folios.]

We have no record of the performance of "Twelfth Night" at court, nor is there any mention of it in the books at St. John's Hall, Pembroke College, Oxford, or St. John's College, Cambridge, where it was registered by Boore and Jaggard, as about to be included in the first folio of Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies." It appeared originally in the "Newes of the Yeare, or What You Will," with the title and Scenes duly noted.

We cannot determine with precision when it was first written, but we know that it was noted on the celebration of the Readers' Feast at the Middle Temple on Feb. 2, 1602, according to the modern computation of the year. The fact, according to its performance we have the evidence of an eyewitness, that it was his first; and more than that, it was registered by a person who seems to have been a barrister, and whose Diary, in his own hand-writing, is preserved in the British Museum (Har. MSS. 3352). The name of the art, and literature, as follows:—

"Th[e Tw[elfh Night, Or What You Will,]" was printed in folio in English Drama in 1607, and the Rev. Joseph Hunter, in his "Disquisition on the Twelfth Night, Or What You Will, 1598, has ascertained that it was made by a person of the name of Manningham. It runs an end to the conjecture of Malone, that "Twelfth Night" was written in 1607, and to the less probable speculation of Trollope, that it was not produced until 1614. Even if it should be objected that we have no evidence to show that this ComedY was compos- ed shortly prior to its representation at the Middle Temple, it may be answered, that it is capable of proof, that it was written posterior to the date of the translation of Livy's "Civil Wars," and had not been able to learn his "Chronological Order of the Roman Wars," and the augmentation of the Indies. When Malone prepared the "Discours of Voyages" was published in folio in English Drama in 1608, and in that volume is inserted the "new map with new translation of the Indies." More takes no notice of "Twelfth way. According to my supposition, these passages, as well as another in the Epilogue, "A. is well ended, if this part is well ended, when the way was added when the comedy was added in this place, and a new preverbal phrase, which was in use in our language, that was written in 1607, and in that volume is inserted the "new map with new translation of the Indies." More takes no notice of "Twelfth

Though none seem so adverse, and men unfaith.

Mr. Hunter prints "All's well that ends well yet" is, in Italian, with capitals, in both instances, as if it were a title; but in the original edition the words appear only in the ordinary type and in the usual text.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

"Twelfth Night" in his list, published in the same year, and we may conclude that the Comedy was not then in existence. The work was "newly employed" by "a new master," and changed by a writer, much less known, and with more particular reference is not necessary, as it forms part of the publication called "Shakespeare's Library." If our great dramatist at all availed himself of its incidents, he must of course have used an earlier edition than that of 1601.

A voluminous and various author of the name of Barbaresco Rich, who had been a "newly employed" and changed, and who, with "his Farewell to Military Profession," without date, but between the years 1578 and 1581, is known to be a type of "Apolonius and Silla," which has many points of resemblance.

In the Thirty-Sixth Novel of the Second Part, in the Lucea edit. 1544. 4to., where it bears the subsequent title:—

"Nicola, immemorial della Lattuca, va a servizio vesta da padre e figlio di suo fratello avvenne." In the collection by Belleforest, printed at Paris in 1572, 12mo, it is headed as follows:—

"Comme une fille Romaine, se vestant en page, servait long temps un sien sans estre cognois, et depuis Ponte a mari, avec autres divers discours." Although Belleforest inserts no names in his title, he adopts those of Bandello, but abbreviates or omits many of the speeches and some portions of the narrative: what in Bandello occupies several pages is sometimes reduced to a paragraph.

The subsequent passage, because it will more exactly show the degree of connexion between "Twelfth-Night" and the old French version: it is where Nicola, the Viola of Shakespeare, plays the part of the pregnant daughter, who, according to the interview with Catelle, the Olivia of "Twelfth-Night," on behalf of Lattuca, who answers to the Duke.

"Mais Catelle, qui avoit plus l'eal sur Porsare et sur la naive beaute, que Forelle aux paroles venant d'aillers, estoit une estrange jeune, et volontiers se fet ledette a bon de pour le bazar tout a sa ris; mais la haute la retint pour un empe: a la fin en pouvant plus, et vnaine de ceste impute d'ameur, et se trovant favorise de la commodite, ne se laissa point, que l'embrassant fort estroitement elle ne le baisant d'une douzaine de fois, et ce avec telle aseclivite et gestes efronter, que Romile s'apparrent bien que ceste ayait plus chere son accointance que les ambassadeurs de l'amoureux. Ceste cause luy dit, a qui la gaite, madame, me faire tant de bien en sa presence, et congoyc, joye de vos quelque gracieuse responce, avec laquelle je gaisse faire content et joieux mon seignor, lequel est en soucy et tourment continu pour ne savoir votre vertu et charme. C'estoit quelque temps, sa femme, qui d'un hain de plus en plus le venin d'amour par les yeux, lui semblloit que Romile devint de fois a plus autre bien." Upon the novel by Bandello two Italian plays were composed, which were printed, and have come down to our time. The title of one of these is given by Manningham, where he says that Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" was "most like and neare to that in Italian called Ingnani." It was first acted in the city of Venice in the thirty-sixth year of the reign of Giustini Anselmo, who was killed by the Turks, and in the same year, being hanged in the middle of the city, was a popular subject of song among the Venetians. The author of Ingnani is not named.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Gast ozone. Where's she?

Rurter to. Not far from you.

Gast ozone. And will she be content that I should lie with her.

Ruterto. If God wills it, and your honor shall do it.

Gast ozone. How shall I get to her?

Rutoerto. As you would come to me.

Gast ozone. Tell me, sir, do you love her?

Rutoerto. Because she often talks to me of her love.

Gast ozone. Do I know her?

Rutoerto. As well as you know me.

Gast ozone. Is she young?

Ruterto. Of my age.

Gast ozone. And loves me?

Ruterto. Adores you.

Gast ozone. Have I ever seen her?

Rutoerto. As often as you have seen me.

Gast ozone. Why does she not discover herself to me?

Rutoerto. Because she sees you the slave of another woman.

The resemblance between Giucrza and her brother Fortunato is so great, that Portia has mistaken the one for the other, and in the end, like Sebastian and Olivia, they are united; while Giucrza, being cured of her passion for Fortunato, is married to the persevering and disinterested affection of Giucrza, is married to her. Our great dramatist has given an actual, as well as an intellectual elevation to the whole subject, by the manner in which he has treated it; and this, in our estimation, is the most agreeable consideration, a considered a love comedy into a fine romantic drama.

So much for GF Ingannati, and it now remains to speak of GF Ingannati, a comedy which, in relation to "Twelfth-night," attempts to refute the criticism of Mr. Joseph Hunter in "The Disquisition on Shakespeare's Tempest," p. 78. GF Ingannati follows Bandello's novel with more exactness than GF Ingannati, though both change the names of the parties; and here we have the important feature that the hero, called Flamminio in the novel (pss. 122-126) is page to Flammiino, to whom she is in love, but who is in love with a lady named Infanzia. Giucrza, as in Shakespeare, is employed by Flammiino to forward his suit with Giucrza. What succeeds is part of the Dialogue between Giucrza, in her male attire, and Flammiino:

"Lelia. Do as I advise. Abandon Infanzia, and love one who loves you in return. You may not find her as beautiful; but, tell me, is there nobody else whom you can love, and who loves you?

Flamminio. There was a young lady by my name,叫the woman, whom I was a thousand times about to tell you, you are much like her. She was thought the fairest, the cleverest, and the most dainty damsel of this country. I will show you her one of these days, for formerly I looked something like her. She was then rich and about the court, and I continued in love with her for nearly a year, during which time she showed me much favor. Afterwards she went to Miranda, and I was left to fall in love with Giucrza, whom she had been as cruel to me as Lelia was kind.

Lelia. Then you desire the treatment you have received. Since you have loved her who loved you, you ought to be elighted in return by others.

Flamminio. What do you say?

Lelia. You have loved her your first love, and still loves you more than ever, why did you abandon her for Lelia? I know not who could pardon that offence. Ab, signer Flamminio, you did her grievous wrong.

Flamminio. You are only a boy, Fabio, and know not the power of love. I tell you that I cannot help loving Giucrza. I adore her, nor do I wish to think of any other woman.

Elsewhere the resemblance between "Twelfth-night" and GF Ingannati, in point of situation is quite as strong, but the likeness ends, for in the dialogue we can trace no connexion between the two. The author of the Italian comedy has obviously found himself entirely upon Bandello's novel, of which there might be some transition in the time of writing, or following the original, than the version which Rich published before our great dramatist visited the metropolis. Whether any such literal translation and or had not been made, Shakespeare may have come to the Italian, and "Novelle di Bandello were very well known in England as early as about the middle of the sixteenth century. If Shakespeare had followed Rich we should probably have discovered some verbal trace of his obligation, as in the cases where he followed Painter's "Palace of Pleasure," Little-donkey, where he availed himself of the works of Greene and Lodge. In GF Ingannati we find nothing but incident in common with "Twelfth-Night."

The vast inferiority of the former to the latter in language and sentiment may be seen in every page, in every line. The mistake of the brother for the sister, by Infanzia, is the same in both, and it terminates in a somewhat similar manner, for the female attendant of the lady, meeting Fabio (who is dressed, like his sister Giucrza, in white) in the street, conducts him to her mistress, who receives him with open arms. Giucrza and Infanzia are of course united at the end of the comedy.

The likeness between GF Ingannati and "Twelfth-Night" is certainly in some points of the story, stronger than that between GF Ingannati and Shakespeare's drama; but to nother, than to any degree of similarity, that our great dramatist resorted, although he had perhaps read both, when he was considering the best mode of adapting to the stage the incidents of Bandello's novel. There is no hint, in any source whatever, for the addition of the " Fury of Dorothis" in "Twelfth-Night." In both the Italian dramas it is the most homely and vulgar materials, by the intervention of employing the cup-brigars, pedants, and servants, who deal in the nearest jokes, and are guilty of the grossest buffoonery. Shakespeare shows his infinite superiority in each department; in the more serious portion of his drama he employed the incidents furnished by predecessors as the mere scaffolding for the creation of his own beautiful edifice; and for the comic scenes, combining incidents of trifling import, to help the progress of the main plot, he seems, as usual, to have drawn merely upon his own innumerable resources.

It was an opinion, confidently stated by Coleridge in his lectures in 1818, that the passage in Act II. sc. 4, beginning

"Too old, by heaven: let still the woman take An elder than herself."

had a direct application to the circumstances of his own marriage with Anne Hattaway, who was so much senior to the poet, as to have been born many years before the time of the two dramas. Coleridge, as his剧中 influence, that the occasion of the marriage of Shakespeare's King, and the king's players performing at the private house in Black-Friars, and they usually removed to the Globe, which was open to the sky, late in the spring.

Three pieces of evidence tend to the conclusion, that "The Winter's Tale" was produced at the Globe, very soon after that theatre had been opened for what might be called the summer season in 1611. In the winter, as has been well ascertained, the king's players performed at the private house in Black-Friars, and they usually removed to the Globe, which was open to the sky, late in the spring.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

"The Winter's Tale" was first printed in folio in 1623, where it occupies twenty-seven pages, from p. 277 to 303, and is the last in the division of "Comedies." The back of p. 305 is left blank and unpage. The later folios adopt the same arrangement.

Lytton, as we have already stated, "The Winter's Tale" was produced at the Globe, very soon after that theatre had been opened for what might be called the summer season in 1611. In the winter, as has been well ascertained, the king's players performed at the private house in Black-Friars, and they usually removed to the Globe, which was open to the sky, late in the spring.

The Winter's Tale was brought out early in 1611: the first of the three plays never published, and it consists of the following entry in the account of the Master of the Revels, Sir George Buc, from the 31st of October, 1611, to the same day, 1612:

"The 5th of November: A play called the winter's nights Tale." No author's name is mentioned, but the piece was represented at Whitehall, by "the king's players," as we find stated in the margin, and there can be no hesitation in deciding that the "Winter's Tale" was not the "Tempest," the "Twelfth-Night," the "Tale." The fact of its performance has been established by Mr. Peter Cunningham, in his valuable work, entitled, "Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels at Court," 8vo, 1842.

The scene is decided to be on a coast in Africa, and the Winter's Tale was probably selected in account of its novelty and popularity.

1 From the Introduction to the same work, we find that "The Winter's Tale" was also performed at court on Easter Tuesday, 1618. The expenses of eleven other plays are included in the same account, viz. "The Tempest," "King and no King," "The City Gal- anter," "The Almackan," "The Twins Tragedy," "Capitl's Re- venge," "The Silver Age," "Luettsia," "The Nobleman," "Hy- muss," "Apollo's Huey," and "The Maid of Milan." The most of them were printed before they were thus acted, and some of them came from the press. "The Nobleman" by Cyril Tournour, was entered at Stationers' Hall for publication on 15th February, 1611, "Lucretia" may have been a different play from Heywood's "Rape of Lucrece," which bears date in 1609; if so, there is no ex- ception, and all that came from the press at any period were 1611-12, the earliest in 1612, and the latest in 1615. Hence a strong inference may be drawn, that they were all dramas which had been recommended for court performance by their novelty and popularity.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

The second piece of evidence on this point has also recently appeared in Mr. S. Diary, or Notebook, kept by Dr. Simon Forman (MSS. in the British Museum, which, under date of the 16th May, 1611), he states that he saw "The Winter's Tale" at the Globe Theatre; this was the May preceding the presentation of it at Court on the 5th November, 1611. It is thus a brief account of the plot, which ingeniously includes all the main incidents:

"Observe there how Leontes, king of Sicilia, was overcome with jealousy of his wife with the king of Bohemia, his friend then convinced and recovered. Death, and would have had his cup-bearer to have poisoned him. But an old wench gave the king of Bohemia warning thereof, and fled with him to Bohemia. Remember, also, how he sent to the oracle of Apollo in the temple of Dido. He found again, that was lost, the king should die without issue; for the child was carried into Bohemia, and there laid in a forest, and brought up by a shepherd; and the king of Bohemia's son in his father's stead, brought up by Leontes; and the shepherd having showed the letter of the nobleman whom Leontes sent, it was that child, and [by] the jewels found about her, she was known to be Leontes' daughter. Remember, also, the rogue that came in all tattered, like Col. Pipet, and how he fenced him sick, and to have been robbed of all he had; and how he openen the poor man of all his money, and after cunning him a shepherd with a packer's pack, and there entrusted him again to the same boy. And he disguised himself as his own child, and turned courtier, &c. Beware of trusting fenced beggars or fasting fellows."

We may now be permitted to think that "The Winter's Tale" was in its first run on the 16th May, 1611, and that the Globe Theatre had not then been long opened for the season.

The opinion that the play was then a novelty, is strongly confirmed by this piece of evidence, which Malone discovered late in life, and which induced him to state, in a later opinion, that "The Winter's Tale" was written in 1604. He found a memorandum in the office-book of Sir Henry Herbert, Master of the Revels, dated the 15th August, 1606, which stated that "The Winter's Tale" was an old play formerly allowed of by Sir George Buc. Sir George Buc was Master of the Revels from October, 1610, until May, 1622. Sir George Buc must, therefore, have produced "The Winter's Tale" between October, 1610, when he was appointed to his office, and May, 1611, when Forman saw it at the Globe.

It might have been composed by Shakespeare in the autumn and winter of 1609-10, with a view to its production on the Bank-side, as soon as the usual performances at the King's players commenced there. Sir Henry Herbert informed Forman that when he gave permission to revive "The Winter's Tale" in August 1623, "the allowed book" (that to which Sir George Buc appended the signature) "was missing." It had no doubt been destroyed with the Globe Theatre was consumed by fire on 29th June, 1613.

We have seen that "The Tempest" and "The Winter's Tale" were acted at Whitehall, and included in Sir George Buc's authorisation of these plays, of October, 1611, to October, 1612. How much older "The Tempest" might be than "The Winter's Tale," we have no means of determining; but there is a circumstance which shows that the composition of "The Tempest" was anterior to that of "The Winter's Tale," and this brings us to speak of the novel upon which the latter is founded.

As early as the year 1588, Robert Greene printed a tract entitled "The History of Dorastus and Falstaff," better known as "The History of Dorothea and Pericles." This tract was the source of the later copies. As far as we now know, it was not reprinted until 1607, and a third impression appeared in 1609: it afterwards went through many editions; but it seems not unlikely that Shakespeare had access to it, as proper subject for dramatic representation, by the third scene which came out the year before we suppose him to have composed writing his "Winter's Tale." In many respects our great dramatist follows Greene's story very closely, as may be seen by some of the notes of the course of the play, and the brief description of "Pandosto" from the unique copy of 1588, in "Shakespeare's Library." There is, however, one remarkable variation, which is necessary to point out. Greene says:

"The guard left her" (the Queen) "in this perplexity, and married the cousin to the king. He incited a body of sly commanded that without delay it should be put in motion, having neither sail nor rudder to guide it, and so to be carried into the midst of the sea, and there left to the wind and weather as the destinies please to appoint."

The child thus "left to the wind and wave" is the Perdita of Shakespeare, who describes the way in which the infant was exposed very differently, and probably for this reason:

that in "The Tempest" he had previously (perhaps not long before) represented a still more singular story of adrift at sea in the same manner as Greene had stated his heroine to have been disposed of. When, therefore, Shakespeare came to write "The Winter's Tale," instead of following Greene, he had usually done in other minor circumstances, he varied from the original narrative, in order to avoid an objectionable similarity of incident in his two dramas. It is true, that in the conclusion Shakespeare has also made important and most judicious changes in the story; since nothing could well be more revolting than for Pandosto, answering to Perdita, to fall first delightfully in love with his own father's daughter, and afterwards to commit suicide. The termination to which our great dramatist brings the incidents is at once striking and beautiful, and is an equal triumph of judgment and power.

It is, perhaps, singular that Malone, who observed upon the "involved parenthetical sentences" prevailing in "The Winter's Tale," did not in that very peculiarity find a proof that it must have been one of Shakespeare's later productions. In the Stationers' Registers there is no earlier entry of it than that of Nov. 8, 1623, when the publication of the first folio was contemplated by Bount and Jaggard: it originally appeared in that volume, where it is regularly divided into Acts and Scenes; the "Winter's Night's Tale," however, in the registers under date of May 28, 1594, must have been a different work. If any proof of the kind were wanted, we have, in two lines in "Dido, Queen of Carthage," by Marlowe and Nash, 1604, 4to, that "a winter's tale" was then in current phrase:

"Who would not undergo all kinds of toyle
To be well store'd with such a winter's tale?"

In representing Bohemia as a maritime country, Shakespeare adopted the popular notion, as it had been encouraged since 1588 by Greene's "Pandosto." With regard to the prevailing ignorance of geography, the subsequent passage from Sir Walter's "Triumphs of Love and Fortune," printed at random in the settings of Perdita, at a time when, if anything, Bohemia be a great town, and whether there be any merchant in it, and whether the last fleet of ships be arrived there, it is to be observed, that Shakespeare reverses the scene of "Pandosto," and does not demand the character of the Bohemian being as yet the subject of invention. So that if Bohemia be a great town, and whether there be any merchant in it, and whether the last fleet of ships be arrived there, it is to be observed, that Shakespeare reverses the scene of "Pandosto," and does not demand the character of the Bohemian being as yet the subject of invention. If it be born out of curiosity to know, that just anterior to the time of our poet, the name he assigns to the Queen of Leontes had been employed as that of a male character: in, "The Rare Triumphs of Love and Fortune," printed at London, 1589, and in "Hermione, the lover of the heroine.

"The idea of this delightful drama" (says Corderidge in his Lit. Rem. vol. ii. p. 250) is a genuine jealousy of disposition, that should be immediately followed by the perusal of "Othello," which is the exact contrast of it in every particular that the words "Servant-monster," "Anticks," "Tales," and "Tempests," applied to Shakespeare, but with our present information the fact seems hardly disputable.

2 How long it continued popular, may be judged from the fact that it was printed as a quarto, the first time, as the year 1575, when it was called "The Fortune-Lovers; or the Abuses of Those Ill-Putted, and of Fawne, only daughter and heir to the King of Bohemia.""
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

For jealousy is a vice of the mind, a culpable tendency of temper, having certain well known and well defined effects and consequences, all of which are visible in Leontes, and I boldly say, more and more present in Aaron; but, first, an excitability by the most inadequate causes, and an eagerness to catch at proofs; secondly, a grossness of conception, and a disposition to degrade the object of the passion by sensual fancies and images; thirdly, a sense of shame and self-reproach; lastly, a solitary and private retreat from the world, and yet from the violence of the passion forced to utter itself, and therefore catching occasions to ease the mind by ambiguities, and equivocals, by taking to those who cannot and will not enter into such a difficult undertaking as to arrive at the sentence to them; in short, by soliloquy in the form of dialogue, and hence a confused, broken, and fragmentary manner; fourthly, a dread of vulgar ridicule, as distinct from a high sense of honour, or a mistaken sense of duty; and lastly, and immediately consequent on this, a spirit of selfish vindictiveness.

In his lectures in 1514, Caxton dwelt on the "not easily jealous" frame of Othello's mind, and on the art of the great poet in working up his general, and his dramatic interests in such a way that he contrived the characters of Othello and Leontes in this respect, the latter from predispension requiring no such malignant instigator as Iago.
clear that any reference to it was intended by Shakespeare. Where the matter is so exceptionally doubtful, we shall not attempt to fix on any particular year. If any argument, one way or other, could be adduced to show that it was produced during or after the King’s “Civil Wars,” it would be clear that he had original from of Shakespeare’s play, and that he was “surprised in the printed copy of 1597, from the fear of offending Elizabeth,” and not published, with the rest, until 1600. Such may have been the case, but we now know there were two separate plays upon the subject of Richard II., and the deposition of King Richard, and the deposition seems to have formed a portion of both. On the 30th April, 1611, Dr. Simon Forman saw “Richard 2,” as he expressly calls it, at the Globe Theatre, for which Shakespeare was a writer, at which he had been an actor, and in the receipts of which he was interested. In his original Diary, (MS. Ashm. 208.) preserved in the Bodleian Library, Forman inserts the following account of, and observations upon, the plot of the “Richard II.” he has been present at the performance.

"Remember therein how Jack Straw, by his overmuch boldness, not being politic, nor suspecting any thing, was suddenly, at Smithfield Bars, stabbed by Walworth, the Mayor of London; and so he and his whole army was dispersed. Therefore, in order to admit any party without a bar between, for a man cannot be too wise, nor keep himself too safe. Also, remember how the Duke of Gloucester, the Earl of Arundel, Oxford, and others, crossing the King in his journey about the last Friday in the month of July, were glad to fly and raise a host of men; and being in his castle, how the Duke of Leume came by night to bear him, with 800 men; but, having privy warning thereof, kept his gates fast, and would not suffer them any man to fly in his ear, and after was slain by the Earl of Arundel in the battle. Remember, also, when the Duke (I. e. Gloucester) and Arundel came to London with their army, King Richard came forth to them, and met them and gave them fair words, and promised them Pardon, and that all should be well, if they would discharge their army; upon whose promises and fair speeches they did it: and after, the King bid them all to a banquet, and so betrayed them, and cut off their heads, &c., because, they had not kept themselves in the way and the court, but his word. Remember therein, also, how the Duke of Lancaster privily contrived all villainy to set them all together by the ears, and to make the nobility to envy the King, and make mischief against him: and when he saw he had him up for his labour, because he should not bruit abroad, or speak thereof to others. This was a policy in the Commonwealth’s opinion, but I say it was a villain’s part, and a Judas’ kiss, to hang the man for telling the truth. Beware by this example of noblemen and their fair words, and say little to them, lest they do the like to thee for thy good will."

The quotation was first published in New Particulars regarding Shakespeare and his Works, London, 1611. It is conjectured that "Richard II." might be the play which Sir Gilly Merrick and others are known to have procured to be acted the afternoon before the insurrection headed by the Earls of Essex and Southampton, (Essex’s Works by Mallet, 1615.) The New Particulars was published not long after the same date, Mr. Anyset argued, that "the deposition of King Richard" probably formed no part of the play. Forman saw, and that it might actually be another, and in the folio of 1632, "the life and death of King Richard the second" occupies twenty-three pages, viz. from p. 28 to p. 45, inclusive. The three other folio reprint it in the summer de folio in all it is divided into Acts and Scenes.

Above we have given the titles of four quarto editions of "King Richard II.," which preceded the publication of the folio of 1632, and which were all published during the life of Shakespeare: they bear date respectively in 1597, 1598, 1599, and 1602. The preceding impression of 1599, omitting any notice of "new additions," though containing the whole of them.

The name of our great dramatist first appears in connection with this historical play in 1595, as if Simmes the printer, and W. W. the stationer, when they published and sold this edition of 1597, did not know, or were not authorized to state, that Shakespeare was the author of it. Precisely the same was the case with "King Richard III.," printed and published by the same parties in the following year, and also a second edition appeared in 1598, with the name of the author.

We will first speak regarding the date of the original production of the play of Richard II., and the time in which it is likely that the "new additions" were inserted.

It was entered on the Stationers Register in 1597, in the following manner:

"The Treagedye of King Richard the Second.

Andrew Wise [The Treagedye of Richard the Second]."

This memorandum was made anterior, but perhaps only shortly anterior, to the actual publication of "Richard II.," and it forms the earliest notice of its existence. Malone supposes that it was written in 1595, but he does not produce a single fact or argument to establish his position; nor perhaps could any be adduced beyond the circumstance, that having assigned the "Comedy of Errors" to 1592, and "Love’s Labour’s" to 1594, Malone suggested that Shakespeare was "the author" of the second Acts to the disturbances in Ireland. It is quite certain that the rebellion in that country was re- newed in 1594, and proclaimed in 1595: but it is far from the insurrection of Lords Essex and Southampton. Thorpe’s Caut.

1 There is another circumstance belonging to the title-page of the Duke of Devonshire’s copy which determines that the play was printed "as it hath beene properly actted by the Right Honorable the Lord Chamberlains, his servants." The company to which Shakespeare was attached at this time was the Lord Chamberlain after James I. came to the throne, but "the King’s Majesty’s servants," as in the title-page of the other copy of 1598. This copy was the one just found, and the second inscription made by Shakespeare was intended to reprint an edition of Richard II., including the "Parliament scene," but not mentioning it, before the death of Elizabeth; but that for some reason it was postponed for about five years.

2 There might be many reasons why the exhibition of the deposition of Richard II would be objectionable to Elizabeth, especially after the insurrection of Lords Essex and Southampton. Thorpe’s Caut.

Roffe, p. 58, contains an account of an interview between Lambarde (when he presented his pandect of the records of the Tower and Elizabeth, short time before that event) and the Queen, in his letter to her of the 11th of August, 1598. Lambarde replied, that "Such a wicked imagination was determined and attempted by a most unhind hand, in the most private manner." He said (the Queen) that will forsake God will also forget his benefactors." The publication of the "Civil Wars," without the mention on the title-page of "the Parliament Scene, and the deposition of King Richard," might have been contemplated about this date.

Newly corrected by W. Shakespere. London, Printed for Matthew Lawe, and are to be solde at his shop in Pauls Churchyard, near unto S. Anginstnes gate, at the signe of the Foxe. 1608. 4to. 40 leaves.

The edition of 1613 also consists of 40 leaves: and the only differences between its title-page and that of 1608 are the date, and the statement that it was "Printed by W. W." In the folio of 1623, "The First Part of Henry the Fourth, with the Life and Death of Henry Sir John Falstaffe," occupies twenty-six pages, viz. from p. 46 to p. 73 inclusive. In the later folio it is reprinted in the same form.

At the time when Shakespeare selected the portion of his history included in the following play, as a fit subject for dramatic representation, the stage was in possession of an old play, entitled, "The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth," written by W. Shakespere. London, Printed for Mathew Lawe, and are to be solde at his shop in Pauls Churchyard, near unto S. Anginstnes gate, at the signe of the Foxe. 1608. 4to. 40 leaves.

That a play upon the events of the reign of Henry V. was the original foundation of the present play is evident from the dramatic performances, it may be conjectured that "The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth" was not written until after 1589.

On the other three quartos were, more or less, printed from it, and the folio of 1623 seems to have taken the latest, that is, the last insertion of additions to this first part. We never find only in the folio, it may seem that the player-editors referred also to some extrinsic authority. It is quite certain, however, that the folio copied obvious and indisputable blunders from the quarto of 1597. This is the more curious, as the quarto and folio passed together in the quarto, in one instance to the destruction of the continuity of the sense, and in most to the detriment of the play. Hence not only the expediency, but the necessity, of revising and correcting the quarto, with some important additions, which gave it the attraction of a new play; for the receipts (as we find by Henslowe's

1 It may perhaps be inferred that there was an intention to publish the "history," with these "new additions," in 1603: at all events, in that year the right in "Richard II." and "Richard III." and "The Famous Victories of Richard the Fourth" was transferred to Matthew Lawe, in whose name the plays came out when the next editions of them appeared. The entry reading them in the books of the Stationers' Company runs thus:

2 "On the 7th June 1603

3 Matth. Lawe in full Court, ij Entertainers or players. The first of Richard the 3d." and "The Famous Victories of Richard the 4th, the 1st pte. all Kings."

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

"Diary" were of such an amount as was generally only produced by a first representation. Out of this circumstance may have arisen the publication of the early unacted editions in 1623. To the above quotation, the re-issue of "The Famous Victories" by a rival company, and the appearance of it from the press, possibly led Shakespeare to consider in what way, and with what improvements, he could avail himself further of the truth to which he belonged. This event would at once make the subject popular, and hence, perhaps, the re-impression of "The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth" in 1589. The year 1589 may possibly have been the date when Shakespeare wrote his "Henry V." Part i.

It is to be observed, that the incidents which are summarily dismissed in one old play, are extended by our great dramatist over three—three of the two parts of "Henry VI."

It is impossible to mistake between "The Famous Victories" and Shakespeare's dramas, for, besides that the former has reached us evidently in an imperfect shape, the impassable superiority of the latter is such, as to render any attempt to trace resemblance rather a matter of contrast than comparison. Who might be the writer of "The Famous Victories," it would be idle to speculate; but it is definitely inferior to most of the extant works of Marlowe, Greene, Peele, Kyd, Lodge, or any other of the more celebrated producers of the time.

Sir John Oldcastle is one of the persons in "The Famous Victories;" and no doubt can be entertained that the character of Sir John Falstaff, in the first part of Shakespeare's "Henry IV." was borrowed from Oldcastle. Any hesitation could formerly have been felt upon this point, it must have been recently entirely removed by Mr. Halliwell's very curious and interesting tract, "On the character of Sir John Falstaff," published by the Stationers' Company, 1841. How the identity of Oldcastle and Falstaff could ever have been questioned after the discovery of the following passage in a play by Nathaniel Field, called, "Amends for Ladies," 1618, it is difficult to comprehend: the lines seem to us decisive:

Did you ever see The play where the fat knight, hight Oldcastle,

This can allude to nothing but to Falstaff's speech in Act iv. sc. 2, of the ensuing play; and it would also show (as Mr. Halliwell points out) that Falstaff sometimes "retained the name of Oldcastle" after the death of Oldcastle and Falstaff. This fact is remarkable, recollecting that "Amends for Ladies" could hardly have been written before 1611, that prior to that date no fewer than four editions of "Henry IV." Part i., had been printed, on the title-pages of which Falstaff was styled "Sir Jack Oldcastle," and that he was called by no other name from the beginning to the end of that drama. The case is somewhat different with respect to Shakespeare's "Henry IV." Part ii., which contains a singular corroborative piece of evidence. Here, Oldcastle, the distinguishing character of that continuation of the "history" had been written and performed, in Act i. sc. 2 of the drama, Oid. is given as the prefix to one of Falstaff's speeches. The error is met with in no other place. When the text of the quart, 1600, was corrected for the press, this single passage escaped observation, and the ancient reading was preserved until it was expunged in the folio of 1623. Malone and Steevens, in opposition to Theobald, argue that Oid. was not meant for Oldcastle, but was the commencement of the name of some actor: none such belonged to Shakespeare's company, and the probability is all in favour of Theobald's supposition.

This change must have been made by Shakespeare anterior to the appearance of the first quart, 1600, and is the consequent entry in the Stationers' Registers, relating to the earliest edition of "Henry IV." Part i.

A book intituled the History of Henry the third, with his battle of Shrewsbury against Henry Hottspurre of the North with the conceived Mirth of Sir John Falstaff."

The third edition of "The Famous Victories" was printed after James I. came to the throne: it has no date, but it states on the title-page that "it was acted by the King's Majesty's servants." This was a title-page, and may have been the object of the stationer being induced to believe that it was the same play as Shakespeare's work, which was certainly performed by "the King's Majesty's servants" about the same time; and consequently it is marked in the title-page of "The Old Plays," Svo. 1779.

The same conclusion may perhaps be drawn from the mention of "fat Sir John Oldcastle," in the "Meeting of Gallians at an Ordinarie," 1604, 4to, a tract recently reprinted, under the editorial care of Mr. Halliwell, for the Percy Society.

As the year did not then end until the 25th March, the 25th February, 1597, was of course the 25th February, 1598; and of course the same! As to the above quotation from the first edition of "The History of Henry IV." with the date of 1598: we may infer, therefore, that it was ready, or nearly ready, to be issued at the time the memorandum was at Stationers' Hall, on the title-page, "The figures and contents of which are peculiarly obvious. It is certain, then, that before the play was printed, the name of Oldcastle had been altered to that of Falstaff. The reason for the change is asserted to have been, that some descendant of Sir John Oldcastle, or John Lodge, the good Lord Cobham, a play attributed to Shakespeare on the title-page of most of the copies printed in 1600, that other two copies of it have recently been discovered, and which have the same name. Hence, we are told, that the title-page was cancelled at the instance of our great dramatist, and another substituted.

There is another entry, under date 27th June, 1603, by which "Henry the 4 the first part," seems to have been transferred to Wriothesley, whom the editor of the "Old Plays," Mr. Halliwell, does not seem to have been aware, when speaking of "The First part of the true and honorable History of the life of Sir John Oldcastle, the good Lord Cobham," a play attributed to Shakespeare on the title-page of most of the copies printed in 1600, that other two copies of it have recently been discovered, which have the same name. Hence, we are told, that the title-page was cancelled at the instance of our great dramatist, and another substituted."

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

The Second part of Henrie the forth, continuing to his death, and coronation of Henrie the fift. With the honours of Sir John Falstaff, and swaggering Pistol. As it hath been sundrie times publicly acted by the right honourable, the Lord Chamberlaine his seruants. Written by Williame Shakespeare. London: Printed by F. S., for Andrew Who, 1600. 4to. 43 leaves. Other copies of the same edition, in quarto, not containing Sig. E 5 and F 6, have only 41 leaves.

In the folio, 1623, The Second Part of Henry the Fourth, continued to his death and coronation of King Henry the Fift, occupies twenty-nine pages in the division of "Histories," viz. from p. 74 to p. 102 inclusive, the last two not being numbered. Pages 89 and 90, by an error of the press, are numbered 91 and 92. In the reprint of the folio, 1623, this mistake is repeated. In the two later folios, the pagination continued from the beginning to the end of the volume.

We may state with more certainty than usual, that "Henry IV." Part II. was written before the 25th Feb. 1598. In the preliminary notice of "Henry IV." Part I., it is mentioned, that Act ii. sc. 2, of the "history" before us contains a piece of evidence that Falstaff was still called Oldcastle when it was written; viz. that the prefix of Old, is retained in the quarto, 1600, before a speech which belongs to Falstaff, and which is assigned to him in the folio of 1623. Now, we know that the name of Oldcastle was changed to that of Falstaff anterior to the entry of "Henry IV." Part I. in the books of the Stationers' Company on the 25th Feb. 1597-8. This circumstance overthrows Malone's theory, that "Henry IV." Part II. was not written until 1599. It requires no proof that it was produced after "Richard II." because that play is quoted in it.

The memorandum in the Stationers' Registers, printed and entered for publication in 1598, and not prepared for publication in 1597-8, as was first supposed, and is, therefore, not given in the column of the "Register," having been printed before the "Register," is an evident proof that "Henry IV." Part II. was printed in 1598.

The evidence shows that the edition was made up, not from any authentic manuscript, nor even from any combination of the separate parts delivered out to the actors by the copist of the theatre, but from what copies they had in their hands, while the performance was taking place. It is true that the quarto impressions contain not the slightest hint of the Choruses, nor of whole scenes, and long speeches, found in the folio of 1600. Yet the evidence seems to be that "Henry IV." was originally produced by Shakespeare in a comparatively incompleted state, and that large portions contained in the folio, and of which no trace can be pointed out in the quartos, were added at a subsequent date, to give greater novelty and attraction to the play, printed in haste for the satisfaction of public curiosity.

The quarto bear strong external and internal evidence of fraud: the earliest of them was not published by a bookseller or booksellers by whom Shakespeare's genuine dramas were issued; and the second and third came from the hands of Thomas Pavier, who was instrumental in giving to the world some pieces, with the composition of which Shakespeare had nothing to do. But no concern, though a few lines in the copist's hand are found in the quarto, and could be proved to have been written, while the performance was taking place. It is true that the quarto impressions contain not the slightest hint of the Choruses, nor of whole scenes, and long speeches, found in the folio of 1600, and the inference seems to be that "Henry IV." was originally produced by Shakespeare in a comparatively incomplete state, and that large portions contained in the folio, and of which no trace can be pointed out in the quartos, were added at a subsequent date, to give greater novelty and attraction to the play, printed in haste for the satisfaction of public curiosity.

"Shakespeare" was represented at Court on the 7th Jan. 1603, as we learn from "The Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels," edited by J. H. Millington, and published by the Shakespeare Society, p. 204; and these important additions may have been inserted for that occasion. The entry runs, literaliter, as follows:--

On the 7th January was played the play of Henry the Fifth.

In the margin we are informed that it was acted by the King's Majesty's players, but the name of the author is not in this instance given, although "Shakespeare" is placed opposite the title of "Measure for Measure," a strange mistake. The fact that the actors belonged to Shakespeare's company renders it most probable that his play was performed on the occasion; but it is to be recollected also, that the old play of The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth, reports on the title-page that it had been "acted by the King's Majesty's servants," even at so late a date as 1617, when the last edition of it made its appearance. Nevertheless, we may perhaps take for granted, that the "Henry

The Life of Henry the Fift. In the folio of 1623, occupies twenty-seven pages, viz. from p. 69 to p. 95 inclusive. The pagination from "Henry IV." Part II. to "Henry V." is not continued, but a new series begins with "Henry V." on p. 69, and is regularly followed to the end of the "Histories." The folio, 1623, adopts this error, but it is avoided in the two later folios, printed in haste for the satisfaction of public curiosity.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

The historical drama is first found in the folio of 1623: no earlier edition of it in any shape, or in any degree of imperfectness, has been discovered. Of the second and third parts of the quarto, under different titles, lengthened in some speeches, and abbreviated in others, there are extant; but the first part of "Henry VI," appeared originally in the collected edition of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies," put forth under the care of his executors, Henning and Conddell, without various scenes and speeches subsequently written and introduced: we are perfectly convinced that the three quarto editions of 1600, 1602, and 1608 do not at all contain the stage as it was acted in the first instance; but were originally made up of notes taken at the theatre during the performance, subsequendy patched together. Now that we meet with a few consecutive lines, similar to the authentic copy, but in general the text was altered and simplified. We might find proofs in support of our position in every part of the play, but as in his "Twenty quarto" Steevens has reprinted that of 1605. It will be needless to select more than a single specimen. We give the version as we find it, literalism, in the quarto, 1600, from the copy in the Library of the Duke of Devonshire: our extenu as an act, 2, 2, the speech of the King, just before the French Ambassadors are called in—

"Call in the messenger sent from the Dolphin, And let his lordship know the noble sires of our France being in's, well bring it to our awe,
Or break it all in pieces.

Either our Choresasses shall with full mouth speak
Freely of our acts,
Or else like changeless mates
My speech and faultless.

Such is the speech as it is abridged and corrupted in the quarto, 1600: the correct text, as contained in the folio of 1623, may be found in this edition.

It is not unfrequently happened that the person who took down the lines as the actors delivered them, for the purpose of publishing the quarto, 1600, misunderstood what was said, and used wrong words which in sound nearly resembled the right: thus, earlier in the same scene, the Archbishop of Canterbury says, among other things—

"They of these Marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our infand from the pillering borderers."

In the quarto, 1600, the materials for which were probably obtained on the theatre, as we have in the passage thus given:

"The Marches, gracious sovereign, shall be sufficient To guard your England from the pillering borderers."

We might multiply instances of the kind, but we do not think there can be any reasonable doubt upon the point.

The above facts are, therefore, composed between the 15th April and the 28th Sept. 1599, and most likely the Choresasses formed part of the piece as originally acted, although the short-hand writer did not think it necessary portion of the performance to be included in the earliest quarto, 1600, which was taken down in a greatly simplified form, and perhaps the length of these and other excursions might somewhat baffle his skill. Upon this supposition, the question when Shakespeare wrote his "Henry V," is brought to a narrow point; and confined as we are, by the omission of all mention of the play by Meres, in his "Palladis Tamia," 1598, we need feel little doubt that his first sketch came from the pen of Shakespeare, for performance at the Globe theatre, early in the summer of 1599. The enlarged drama, as it stands in the folio of 1623, was, of course, the result of two separate hands, and was not to be put in a complete shape in which it has there come down to us, until shortly before the date when it was played at Court.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

"The first Part of Henry the Sixth" was printed originally in the folio of 1623, where it contains twenty-four pages: viz. from p. 96 to p. 119 inclusive, in the division of "Histories." It was reprinted in the folios 1632, 1664, and 1685.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

"The second Part of Henry the Sixth, with the death of the Good Duke Humphrey," was first printed in the folio of 1583, where it occupies twenty-seven pages; viz. from p. 120 to p. 146 inclusive, in the division of "Histories." It fills the same place in the subsequent folio impressions.

The "history" is an alteration of a play printed in 1554, under the following title: "The First part of the Contention betwixt the two famous houses of York and Lancaster, with the death of the good Duke Humphrey. And the history of the famous Cardinal of Winchester, and the Calender," and are to be sold at his shop under Saint Peter's Church in Cornwall. 1584." By whom it was written we have no information; but it was entered on the Stationers' Registers on the 12th March, 1588. Millington published a second edition of it in 1600; and on the 16th April, 1592, it was assigned by Millington to Tho. Pavier, and we hear of it again, in the Stationers' Register, merely as "York and Lancaster," on the 8th November, 1595.

Coleridge acknowledges the important share he had in the publication of "The Greatworth of Wit," in his "Kind-hearts' Dream," which was printed at the close of 1592, or in the beginning of 1593, see the excellent reprint of this very curious and interesting tract wished to have it believed, that the old play was the production of our great dramatist.

Shakespeare's property, according to our present notions was only in the additions and improvements he introduced, which are included in the folio of 1623. In this section, we may see, with some accuracy, the first part of the Contention, as the sense, without it, is incomplete; but the old play has many passages which Shakespeare rejected, and the murder of Duke Humphrey is somewhat differently managed. In general, however, Shakespeare, in the minds of the story, and did not think it necessary to correct the obvious historical errors of the original.

It is impossible to assign a date to this play except by conjecture. Its success, perhaps, led to its being produced in the Hall of the older of the two Houses of York and Lancaster, and to its appearance from the press in 1594.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

"The Third Part of Henry the Sixth, with the death of the Duke of Yorke," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-six pages, in the division of "Histories," viz. from p. 147 to p. 172, inclusive, pages 165 and 166 being misprinted 167 and 168, so that these numbers are twice inserted. The error is corrected in the folio, 1632. The play is also contained in the folios of 1640 and 1645.

None of the commentators ever saw the first edition of the drama upon which, Shakespeare drew. Shakespeare's copy of "Henry VI. II.") bears the following title:— "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of Yorke, and the death of the good King Henrv the Sixth, with the whole contention betwixt the two houses Lancaster and York, as it was some times acted by the Company of Players brooke his sermons. Printed at London by P. S. for Thomas Millington, and are to be sold at his shoppe under Saint Peters Church in Cornwall. 1595." So this play, like the "First Part of the Contention," was reprinted for the same bookseller in 1600, 4to. About the year 1615 a re-impression of both plays was published by T. P., and the name of Shakespeare, as has been already observed in our Introduction to "Henry VI. part i., first appears in connection with the "histories" in that third folio.

Believing that Shakespeare was not the author of "The First Part of the Contention," 1594, nor of "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of Yorke, 1595, and that Malone established his position, that Shakespeare only enlarged and altered them, it becomes a question by whom they were produced. Chalmers, who possessed the only known copy of "The True Tragedy," 1595, without scruple assigned that piece to Christopher Marlowe. Although there is no ground whatever for giving it to Marlowe, there is no reason for supposing that it came from the pen of Robert Greene.

In the Introduction to "Henry VI." part I., we alluded, as far as was then necessary, to the language of Greene, when comparing his play with Shakespeare's. This tract was not published until after the death of its author, in Sept. 1599, when it appeared under the editorship of Henry Chettle; and what follows is the whole that relates to our great dramatist.—"Yes, trust them not; for there is an al- start cow beautified with our feathers, that with his tiger's heart, wrapp'd in a player's hide, supposes he is as well able to bombast out a blank verse as the best of you; and being an absolute Jaques Factotum, in his own conceit the most perfect, was in error, the most miserable (Drayton's Edit. of Greene's Works, i. lxxxii.) In this extract, although Greene talks of an "upstart cow beautified with our feathers," he seems to have referred principally to his own works, and to the manner in which Shakespeare had "stolen" them. This opinion is somewhat confirmed by two lines in a tract called "Greene's Funerals," by R. B., 1594, where the writer is advertting to the obligations of other authors to Greene:—"Say more, the man that as eclips'd his fame with a little A Philip over the sea of the subject."

Here R. B. nearly adopts Greene's words, "beautified wit our feathers," and applies them individually what Greene perhaps to avoid the charge of egotism and vanity, had stated more generally. It may be mentioned, also, as a confirmatory circumstance, that the words "tiger's heart, wrapp'd in a player's hide," in our extract from the "Greatworth of Wit," are a repetition, with the omission of an interjection and made for the Percy Society, under the editorial care of Mr. Rimbault. In his address to the "Gentlemen Readers," Chettle apologizes to Shakespeare (not by name) for having been instrumental in the publication of Greene's attack upon him.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

xix

the change of a word, of a line in "The True Tragedy," 1555,

"O'tiger's heart, wrap'd in a woman's hide!"

Thus Greene, when charging Shakespeare with having appropriated his plays, parodies a line of his own, as if to show the particular productions to which he alluded:

"O'tiger's heart, wrap'd in a woman's hide!"

There is a striking coincidence between a passage in "The True Tragedy" and some lines in one of Greene's acknowledged dramas, "Aphonsus, King of Arragon," printed, in 1599, by Thomas Creed, the same printer who, in 1594, had produced from his press the earliest edition of the "First Folio." 1 "Aphonsus" the hero kills Flaminius, his enemy, and thus addresses the dying man:

"Go, pack these hence onto the Stygian lake,
And make report unto the traitorous sire,
Here settle dead, and let every soul
Which he by treason set upon thy head:
And if he seek thee who did send thee down,
Aphonsus say, who now must wear thy crown."

In "The True Tragedy," 1555, Richard, while stabbing Henry VI. a second time, exclaims,

"If any spark of life remain in thee,
Drown, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither."

Shakespeare, when altering "The True Tragedy" for his own theatre, (for, as originally composed, it had been played by the Earl of Oxford's servants, for whom Greene was in the habit of writing) adopted the line,

"O'tiger's heart, wrap'd in a woman's hide!
without the change of a letter, and the couplet last quoted with only a very slight variation;

"If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Drown, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither."

As in "Henry VI." part ii., Shakespeare availed himself of the same coincidence, 1594, so in "The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York," 1595. He made, however, considerable omissions, as well as large additions, and in the last two Acts he sometimes varied materially from the conduct of the story as he found it in the older play. One improvement may be noticed, as it shows the extreme simplicity of our stage just before what we may consider Shakespeare's time; and to be ascertained by comparing two scenes of his "Richard IV."

(Act IV. sc. 2) with a portion of "The True Tragedy." In the older play, Warick, Oxford, and Clarence, aided by a party of soldiers, standing on one part of the stage, concert a plan for surprising Edward IV. in his tent on another part of the stage. Having resolved upon the enterprise, they merely cross the boards of Edward's encampment, the audience being required to suppose that the assailing party had travelled from their own quarters in order to arrive at Edward's tent (Act IV. sc. 2); whereas, Shakespeare showed his superior judgment by changing the place, and by interposing a dialogue between the Watchmen, who guard the King's tent. Robert Greene, in his "Pinner of Wakefield," (See "Hist. of Eng., Dram. Poetry and the Stage," 28) ape'ly interjects a portion of his auditors, exactly in the same way as the author of "The True Tragedy."

It is to be observed of "Henry VI." part iii., as was remarked in the Introduction to the second part of the same play, that a line, necessary to the sense, was omitted in the folio, 1623, and has been introduced into our text from "The True Tragedy," 1555. It occurs in Act II. sc. 6, and it was, perhaps, inadvertently omitted by the抄写员 of the copyst from Shakespeare's history, as it appears in the folio, was printed.

"The Tragedy of King Richard the third. In the landing of the Earl of Richmond, and the Battle at Bosworth Field," occupies thirty-two pages; viz. from p. 178 to p. 204. London. 4to. 1613. There is no material variation in the later folios.

The popularity of Shakespeare's "Richard the Third" must have been great, judging only from the various quartos which preceded the publication of it in the folio of 1623. It originally came out in 1597, without the name of the author: and the first reprints in 1598, with "By William Shakspeare," on the title-page, and again in 1602, all three impressions having been made for the same bookseller, Andrew Wisse. On the 27th June, 1603, it was assigned to Matthew Wisse, as appears by an entry in the Stationers' Registers; accordingly, he published the fourth edition of the date of 1605: the fifth edition was printed for the same bookseller in 1613.

This seems to have been the last time it came out in quarto, antecedent to its appearance in the first folio; but after that there were three other quartos: one in 1619, 1629, and 1634, and it is remarkable that these were all mere reprints of the earlier quartos, not one of them including any of the passages which the player-editors of the folio first interpolated in their copy: on the fact coinciding with the inference that the publishers of the later quartos did not know that there were any material variations between the earlier quartos and the folio, that they did not think them of importance, or that the projectors of the folio were considered to have some special right of copyright in the additions. These additions, extending in one instance to more than fifty lines, are pointed out in our notes. It will also be found that more than one speech in the folio is unintelligible without aid from the quarto; and some other characters are added. Particularly for one Act iv. sc. 2, it is not possible to account.

With respect to the additions in the folio of 1623, we have no means of ascertaining whether they formed part of the play. Stuven's list of 1602, printed in his "True Tragedy," contained a better text than the folio: such a list of our opinion; for though the quarto sets right several doubtful matters, it is not well printed, even for a production of that a reprint of the previous impressions of 1597 and 1598, for the same bookseller. It is possible that the augmentations observable in the later quartos of 1619, 1629, and 1634 were made in the same way. So it is not to be thought, that his edition of that year contained them. The quarto reprints, subsequent to that of 1602, all purport to have been newly augmented.

Malone gives the dates 1612, and in his copy at Oxford the last figure is blusht. The title-page in no respect differs from that of 1602, suggesting that the folio was "for the King's Majesty's servants." They were not so called, until after May, 1603.

"An impression in 1602 is mentioned in some lists, reset, as the case a copy of that date is doubtful."
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

Jay, and bears marks of having been brought out in haste, and from an imperfect manuscript. The copy of the "history" in the folio of 1623 was in some places a reprint of the quarto, 1602, as several obvious errors of the press are repeated, right for "right," help for "helms," etc. For the addition of some, it was as if they were committed by an editor, who, without saving the play, had made it subserve his purpose only. See the reprint of this tract by the Shakespeare Society, the text being taken from the first impression.

1 Stevens calls it "The Actors' Vindication," as indeed it was entitled when it was reprinted (with alterations and insertions) by Cambridge, 1691, without the date. See p. 22.

2 This new fact in the history of our early drama and theatres, we owe to Mr. Peter Cunningham, who establishes it beyond contradiction, in his interesting and important volume of "Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels at Court," printed for the Shakespeare Society. Introd. p. xxxii

The earliest entry in the Stationers' Registers relating to Shakespeare's "Richard the Third," is as follows:

"20 Oct. 1594.
Andrew Whysow. The Tragedie of Kinge Richard the Thirde, with the death of the Duke of Clarence.

This memorandum, probably, immediately preceded the publication of the quarto, 1597. The only other entry relating to Shakespeare's "Richard the Third" is the previous issue of the same play, belonging to other persons. The earliest known version of the first act of this play is in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire, and from it we transcribe the following title-page:

"The true Tragedie of Richard the third; Wherein is showen the death of Edward the fourth, with the smothering of the two young Princes in the Tower: With a lamentable and lamentable, and the comrade of Shore's wife, an example for all wicked women. And lastly, the conclusion and laying of the two noble Houses, Lancaster and Yorkes. As it was played by the Queen's players. Done by Richard Creede, and are to be sold by William Barley, at his shop in Newgate Market, near Christ Church doore. 1594."

This title-page so nearly corresponds with the entry in the Stationers' Registers, as to leave no doubt that the latter refers to the same play. The phraseology, the spelling, and the word usage of both indicate to a remarkable degree the authorship of Shakespeare. As a parallel to this very rare attempt to print a play is the collection of the Duke of Devonshire, and from it we transcribe the following title-page:

"Poetrie, Truth, well met.

Trwth. Thanks, Poetrie: what makes thou upon a stage?

Post. Shadows.

Trwth. Then, will I addde the shadows.

Thereupon depart, and give Truee leave
Thee read thy page.

Post. Why, will Truee be a Player?

Trwth. No: but Tragedia like for to present
A Tragedia in Edward ye laste daye,
That will revive the heartes of drooping mindes.

Post. Whereas?

Trwth. I do not know.

Hence Truth proceeds with a sort of argument of the play, but before the Induction begins, the ghost of George, Duke of Clarence, had passed over the stage, delivering two lines as it went, which we give precisely as in the original copy now before us:

"Cresce cruro sanguanii, satisfie sanguanii cresce,
Quod spero se peste. O seetio, seetio, vestenda!

The drama itself afterwards opens with a scene represent-
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS

KING HENRY VIII.

"The Famous History of the Life of King Henry the Eight," was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-eight pages; viz. from p. 205 to p. 223, inclusive. It is the last play in the division of "Historical". It fills the same place in the later impressions in the same form.

The principal question, in relation to Shakespeare's "Henry the Eighth," is, when was it written. We are satisfied that the "Sedley's Play" (a manuscript play, not known to us till the "Eighth", in Act v. sc. 4, is quite decisive. There the poet first speaks of Elizabeth, and of the advantages derived from her rule, and then proceeds in the clearest manner to notice her successor:—

"Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Her ashes new create another heart,
As great in estimation as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one
(Who from this cloud of darkness
Who from the sacred ashes of her honour)
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand fixed."

Ingenuity cannot pervert these lines to any other meaning; but it has been said that they, and some others which follow them, were a subsequent introduction; and, moreover, that they were the work of Ben Jonson, on some revival of the play in the reign of James I. There does not exist the slightest evidence to establish either proposition. Any person, reading the whole of Cranmer's speech at the christening, can hardly fail to perceive such an extensiveness and sequence of thoughts and words in it, as to make it very unlikely that it was dictated by the same intellect, and written by the same pen. Malone and others made up their minds that Cranmer's speech was written after the death of Elizabeth; and finding the genealogies we have quoted in the present of the teats of this supposition, they charged it as a subsequent addition, fixed the authorship of it upon a different poet, and printed it within brackets.

As to external evidence, there is no fact which has never had sufficient importance given to it. We allude to the following memorandum in the Registers of the Stationers' Company:—

"12 Feb. 1604
"Nath. Butter, for the get good allowance for the Enterludes of K. Henry 8th before he begun to print it, and then procure the warden's hands to yt for the entrance of yt: he is to have the same for his copy."

Claimers asserted, without qualification, that this entry related to a contemporaneous play by Samiel Rowley, under the title of "12 Feb. 1604," and that the "enterlude" is expressly called in the entry "K. Henry 8th," and we feel no hesitation in concluding that it referred to Shakespeare's drama, which had probably been brought out on the Globe Theatre in the summer of 1604. The memorandum, judging from its terms, seems to have been made not at the instance of Nathaniel Butter, the bookseller, but of the company to which Shakespeare belonged, and in order to prevent any "repetitions" publication of the play. The "12 Feb. 1604," refers to the second or subsequent occasion of the reekoning the 12 Feb. 1605, and at that date Butter had not begun to print "Henry the Eighth." No edition of it is known before it appeared in the folio of 1623, and we may infer that Butter failed in getting "good allowance" with the "Cardenio" (no part of the work by John Webster). It would never have been used by Shakespeare during the life of Elizabeth.

The Globe Theatre was destroyed on 29th June, 1618, the match with which it was covered having been fired by the discharge of some small pieces of ordnance. (Hist. of Eng. Drama, by S. Coleridge.) Notwithstanding the calamity, it was not until 1644 that the theatre was re-erected by the Earl of Nottingham, while it was occupied by the Earl of Stowe's Chronicle, that the play then in a course of representation was "Henry the Eighth," but Sir Henry Wotton, who is very particular in this portion of his History, states by Howes, in his continuation of Stowe's Chronicle, that the play then in course of representation was "Henry the Eighth," but Sir Henry Wotton, who is very particular in this portion of his History, states that in 1644, the Earl of Nottingham's players, on the events of the life of Cardinal Wolsey, including necessarily some of the chief incidents of the evidence and facts which came from the poet's pen after James I had ascended the throne.

Independently of the whole character of the drama, which was certainly "translated into the English" before 1602, it had been revised by Cranmer, in Act v. sc. 4, is quite decisive. There the poet first speaks of Elizabeth, and of the advantages derived from her rule, and then proceeds in the clearest manner to notice her successor:—

"Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Her ashes new create another heart,
As great in estimation as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one
(Who from this cloud of darkness
Who from the sacred ashes of her honour)
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand fixed."

Ingenuity cannot pervert these lines to any other meaning; but it has been said that they, and some others which follow them, were a subsequent introduction; and, moreover, that they were the work of Ben Jonson, on some revival of the play in the reign of James I. There does not exist the slightest evidence to establish either proposition. Any person, reading the whole of Cranmer's speech at the christening, can hardly fail to perceive such an extensiveness and sequence of thoughts and words in it, as to make it very unlikely that it was dictated by the same intellect, and written by the same pen. Malone and others made up their minds that Cranmer's speech was written after the death of Elizabeth; and finding the genealogies we have quoted in the present of the teats of this supposition, they charged it as a subsequent addition, fixed the authorship of it upon a different poet, and printed it within brackets.

As to external evidence, there is no fact which has never had sufficient importance given to it. We allude to the following memorandum in the Registers of the Stationers' Company:—

"Nath. Butter, for the get good allowance for the Enterludes of K. Henry 8th before he begun to print it, and then procure the warden's hands to yt for the entrance of yt: he is to have the same for his copy."

Claimers asserted, without qualification, that this entry related to a contemporaneous play by Samiel Rowley, under the title of "12 Feb. 1604," and that the "enterlude" is expressly called in the entry "K. Henry 8th," and we feel no hesitation in concluding that it referred to Shakespeare's drama, which had probably been brought out on the Globe Theatre in the summer of 1604. The memorandum, judging from its terms, seems to have been made not at the instance of Nathaniel Butter, the bookseller, but of the company to which Shakespeare belonged, and in order to prevent any "repetitions" publication of the play. The "12 Feb. 1604," refers to the second or subsequent occasion of the reekoning the 12 Feb. 1605, and at that date Butter had not begun to print "Henry the Eighth." No edition of it is known before it appeared in the folio of 1623, and we may infer that Butter failed in getting "good allowance" with the "Cardenio" (no part of the work by John Webster). It would never have been used by Shakespeare during the life of Elizabeth.

The Globe Theatre was destroyed on 29th June, 1618, the match with which it was covered having been fired by the discharge of some small pieces of ordnance. (Hist. of Eng. Drama, by S. Coleridge.) Notwithstanding the calamity, it was not until 1644 that the theatre was re-erected by the Earl of Nottingham, while it was occupied by the Earl of Stowe's Chronicle, that the play then in a course of representation was "Henry the Eighth," but Sir Henry Wotton, who is very particular in this portion of his History, states that in 1644, the Earl of Nottingham's players, on the events of the life of Cardinal Wolsey, including necessarily some of the chief incidents of the evidence and facts which came from the poet's pen after James I had ascended the throne.

made from the French of Amiot, Bishop of Auxerre, and appears to have been very popular; though published at a high price, it often required a rebinding, and was reprinted several times reprinted; and we may, perhaps, presume that our great dramatist made use of an impression nearer his own time, possibly that of 1595. In many of the principal scenes of the printed copy there is a marked difference in the style of verbal exactness; and he was indebted to it for the whole conduct of his plot. The action occupies less than four years, for it commences subsequent to the retirement of the people to Mons Saur in 262, after the foundation of Rome, and terminates with the battle of Corinnae in 2.681.

"The Tragedy of Corioli" originally appeared in the folio of 1620, where it is divided into acts but not into scenes; and it was registered at Stationers' Hall by Blount and Jaggers in 1611. The title-page, with its commendation with verbal exactness; this would certainly induce us to fix it somewhat late in the career of our great dramatist. It is on the whole well printed for the time in the folio of 1620; but in Act ii. sec. 5, either the transcriber of the manuscript or the compositor must have omitted a line, which Pope supplied from conjecture (with the aid of North's Pantler), and which has ever since been received into the text, because it is absolutely necessary to the intelligibility of the passage. The Shakespearean line is not punctuated, and printed the line within brackets, besides pointing out the circumstance in a note.

In the folio of 1623, "The Lamentable Tragedie of Titus Andronicus" occupies twenty-two pages, in the division of "Tragedies," viz. from p. 81 to p. 52 inclusive. The three later folios, of course, insert it in the same part of the volume.

We have no hesitation in assigning "Titus Andronicus" to Shakespeare. We have not the slightest doubt that the drama had been played not only by "the Lord Chamberlain's servants," of whom Shakespeare was one, but by the theatrical servants of the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Darby, and the Earl of Sussex. The presence of Shakespeare's name upon the title-page of the folio, as well as the fact that the tragedy was one of the most popular and among the most frequently printed of his plays, would have necessarily been to have been confined to the company to which he belonged; but we know from Henslowe's Diary that between 3rd June, 1594, and 15th Nov. 1596, the Lord Chamberlain's servants were acting in apparent connection with those of the Lord Admiral; one of the plays, enumerated by Henslowe as having been acted in this interval, is "Titus Andronicus," which circumstance he records under date of 12th June, 1594. This may have been the very play Shakespeare had written, and which he recommended to his patron. We know, however, that although the Earl of Nottingham's servants was not one of them, the fact was stated on the title-page of the earliest extant impression. It is to be observed, however, that Henslowe has the entry of the play on the 23rd Jan. 1594–5, when it appears to have been a new play. The "Titus Andronicus," therefore, acted on 12th June, 1594, may have been a repetition of a drama, which possibly had been got up for Henslowe, in consequence of the success which the play had met with when played in the company of the Lord Admiral. There can be little doubt that Shakespeare's "Titus Andronicus" was written several years earlier.

It is very possible that Shakespeare's "Titus Andronicus" was founded upon some anterior dramatic performance, but on this point we have no evidence beyond what may be conjectured only gave "some master-touches to one or two of the principal characters." 2 dated from the piece itself, in certain real or supposed dissimilitudes of composition.

When Dacier entered the "noble Roman History of Titus Andreonius" in 1598, he equipped it with "the ballad thereof," which probably is the same printed in Perey's "Religie," a text which has been published more than once, first mentioned by Be. Jonson in the Induction to his "Bartholomew Fair," (played first in 1614), as a piece of twenty-five or thirty years standing. This may have been Shakespeare's tragedy, that of John Heminges and Henry Condell, first printed in a quarto edition in 1623, and served as a foundation of both. The oldest notice of "Titus Andreonius" (excepting that by Meres) is contained in a tract called "Father Hubbard's Tales, or The Ant and the Nightingale," and dedicated to Thomas Middleton, where (Sign. E, 3) the author speaks of the "common old legend," or "like old Titus Andreonius." The loss of his hand by the hero would no doubt form an incident in every drama written upon the subject.

Newly corrected, augmented and amended: London Printed for John Smethwick, and are to be sold at his Shop in Saint Dunstan Church-yard, in Fleetstreet under the Dyall. 1609. 4to. 46 leaves.

In the folio of 1623 "The Tragedie of Romeo and Juliet" occupies twenty-five pages, viz. from p. 88 to p. 79, inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." It fills the same space in the folios of 1632, 1668, and 1685.

It is certain that there was an English play upon the story of Romeo and Juliet before the year 1600; and the fact establishes that, even at that early date, our dramatists resorted to Italian novels, or translations of them, for the subjects of their productions. It is the most ancient piece of evidence of the kind yet discovered, and it is given by Arthur Brooke, who in that year published a narrative poem, called "The Tragicall History of Romeus and Iuliet." At the close of his address "to the Reader" he observes: "Though I saw the same manuscript lately set forth on stage with more commendation than I can look for (being there much better set forth, than I have, or can do), yet the same matter, penned as it is, may serve the like good purpose." (The Dramatick Poets, 3rd Edition, Stage, vol. ii. p. 416.) Thus we see also, that the play had been received "with commendation," and that Brooke himself, unquestionably a competent judge, admits its excellence. There is not the slightest evidence of any other dramatic work founded upon the same interesting incidents between 1582 and the date when Shakespeare wrote his tragedy, a period of probably, more than thirty years; but no hint of the kind is given in any record, and certainly no such work, either manuscript or printed, has come down to us. Of the extreme popularity of the story we have abundant proof, and of a remote date. It was included by William Painter in the "second edition" of his "Palace of Pleasure," the dedication of which he dates 4th Nov. 1567; and in old writers we find frequent mention of the hero and heroine. Thomas Dulspeede gives the following brief "argument" in his "Pleasant Fable of Hermaphrodite and Salmeius," 1603: "A noble maiden of the city of Verona, in Italy, was the daughter of the old Lord Montecchio, and being pryeved early marr'd, her husband, after the death of her first spouse, gave her the sole of her two faithful friends." After this date the mention of the story becomes ever more frequent, and sometimes more particular; and our inference is, that it owed as much of its popularity, as it did to its excellence, to its being printed, pro or verce, or to the play spoken of by Brooke in 1599, but to subsequent dramatic representations, perhaps, more or less founded upon that early drama.

But for Shakespeare might be indebted to any such production we have no means of deciding; but Malone, Steevens, and others have gone upon the supposition, that Shakespeare was only under obligations either to Brooke's poem, or to that early dramatic piece, and that most of all the plays seem to have contemplated the possibility that he might have obtained assistance from some foreign source.

Arthur Brooke avowed that he derived his materials from Bandello (Part ii. Nov. 9), "La ciecutanee morte di due infelici amanti," and from Boistean's "Histoire de deux Amans," etc., in the collection of "Histoires Tragiqques," published by Belle-forest. Both Brooke's poem and Paynter's prose version have recently been reprinted as a work called "Shakespeare's Library," where the antiquity of the story is considered. Steevens does not seem to think that our great dramatist had obtained more from Paynter than from Brooke, while Malone supported, and we think, established, a contrary opinion. He examined a number of minute points of resemblance; but, surely, no doubt can be entertained by those who only compare the following short passage from a speech of Friar Laurence with three lines from Brooke's "Romeus and Juliet."

"Art thou a man? Then stand up, man; thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote the unreasonable fury of a beast."—(Act iii. sc. 3.)

This, as we shall see from what is subjoined, is almost verbatim from Brooke's "Romeus and Iuliet." Steevens says: "I must confess I had never before seen it in any manuscript."—(Skehrs Lib., p. 43.)

Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" originally came out, but in an imperfect manner, in 1597, quarto. This edition is in two different types, and was probably executed in haste by two different printers. It has generally been treated as an unauthorized impression from an authentic manuscript. Since, after the most careful examination, is not our opinion. We think that the manuscript used by the printer or printers (no Gooskeller's or stationer's name is placed at the bottom of the play) was made up from the play as it was acted, but muchly amended, and partly from notes taken at the theatre during representation. Our principal ground for this notion is, that there is such great inequality in different scenes and speeches, and in some places precisely that degree and kind of imperfections, which would belong to a manuscript prepared from defective short-hand notes. As Steevens printed the first and the third edition of "Romeo and Juliet" in his "Twety Quarters," a comparison, to test the worth of our remarks, cannot be received, as it do not of course go the length of contending that Shakespeare did not alter and improve the play, subsequent to its earliest production on the stage, but merely that the quarto, 1597, does not contain the tragedy as it was originally acted. The second edition was printed in 1609, and it professes to have been "newly corrected, augmented, and amended:" the third dated edition appeared in 1619; but some copies without a date are known, which most likely were posterior to 1609, but anterior to the appearances of the folio in 1623. The quarto, 1597, is of no authority.

The quarto, 1609, was printed from the edition which came out ten years earlier; and the repetition, in the folio of 1623, of a part also, is a decided evidence of its being copied, as a substitute for the quarto, 1609, or 1608, in that edition. The quarto, 1609, besides ordinary errors, makes several important omissions. Our text is that of the quarto, 1599, compared, of course, with the quarto, 1609, and with the folio (1623); and in some places, as for example, in the act and scene of the 19th of the 3rd act, of the value of this assistance, as regards particular words, we will only give a single instance, out of many, from Act iii. sc. 1, where Benvolio, in reference to the conflict between Mercutio and Tybalt, says of Romeo, his "right hand arm bears down their fatal points." The quarto, 1599 and 1609, and the folio of 1623, shrewdly read "aged arm;" and the editor of the folio of 1623 substituted "able arm!" the true word, for which no substitute equally good could be found, is only in the quarto, 1597.

It is stated that "Romeo and Juliet" was acted by the
It is remarkable that in no edition of "Romeo and Juliet," published anterior to the so-called Shakespearean edition, had Shakespeare’s name been appended thereto. This statement is verified by reviewing the history of the publication of "Romeo and Juliet," in which two distinct editions appeared in 1594 and 1597, respectively, before Shakespeare’s name was attached to the play, which was reprinted in 1599, 1600, and 1601. However, it is significant to note that the title-page of the 1599 edition inexplicably failed to include the name of the dramatist, while the 1600 and 1601 editions correctly displayed it.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

The Life of Tyr mus of Athens first appeared in the folio of 1623, where it occupies the division of "Tragedies," twenty-one pages, numbered from p. 80 to p. 98 inclusive; but pp. 81 and 82, by an error, are repeated. Page 98 is followed by a leaf, headed, "The Actors’ Names," and the list of characters fills the whole page; the back of it is left blank. The drama bears the same title in the later folios.

Shakespeare is supposed not to have written "Timon of Athens" until late in his theatrical career, and Malone has fixed upon 1610 as the probable date when it came from his pen. We know, however, that in 1611, the "L. of Marston" of the Stationers’ Company was charged with inserting it in the "corrected, augmented, and amended" edition of 1599. But it is wanting even in the impression of 1608, although Shakespeare’s popularity must then have been great. Hence it is clear that the "L. of Marston," who ostentatiously called it "M. Willman Shakespere, his, &c. Life and Death of King Lear," and his Sonnets, in 1609, were recommended to purchasers, as "Shakespeare’s Sonnets," in unusually large characters on the title-page.

1 The Registers of the Stationers’ Company throw little light upon the question when "Romeo and Juliet" was first written. On 8 Aug., 1596, Edward White entered "A newe ballad of Romeo and Juliet," which may possibly have been the tragedy, printed (without a bookseller’s name) in 1597, though called only a ballad. On 22 Jan., 1597, "Romeo and Juliet" (together with "Love’s Labour’s Lost," and "The Taming of a Shrew") was entered to "Mr. Linge," with the statement that "Mr. Burbage, Master of Actors, &c." entered the same. On 29 Jan., 1597, "Hamlet," "The Taming of a Shrew," "Romeo and Juliet," and "Love’s Labour’s Lost," as having derived his property in them from Linge.
follow creatures. He said that the whole piece was a bitter dramatic satire,—a species of writing in which Shakespeare had never attempted, and that he could render it the very highest point of excellence. Coleridge could not help suspecting that the subject might have been taken up under some temporary feeling of vexation and disappointment.

How far this notion was or could be matter of conjecture and discussion; but a whole play could hardly be compos-ited under a transient fit of irritation, and to us it seems more likely, that in this instance, as in others, Shakespeare had adopted the story because he thought he could make it acceptable as a dramatic representation. We are in thinking that there probably existed some earlier popular play of which Timon was the hero. The novels in Pynter's "Palace of Pleasure" were the common property of our readers of the day and to the strange and beastly nature of Timon of Athens 6 is inserted in the first volume of that collection, which came out before 1657. Pynter professes to have derived his brief materials from the life of Marc-Antony, in the style of a learned essay. Shakespeare himself introduces Timon into "Love's Labour's Lost," where, in its original shape, must certainly have been one of our great dramatist's early plays. In Edward Gibbin's collected Editions of Satires, published, until the year 1598, we meet with the following line, (Epigr. 52.) which seems to refer to some scene in which Timon had been represented:—

'Like hate-man Timon in his cell he sits!'

In the anonymous play of "Jack Drum's Entertainment," printed in 1601, one of the characters uses these expressions:—

"But if all the brevets' jades in the town can drage me from the love of myself, they shall do more than 'er the seven wise men of Greece... Come, come, now I'll be as sociable as Timon of Athens.

We know also that there existed about that date a play upon the subject of Timon of Athens. The original manuscript of it is in the library of the Rev. Alexander Dyce, who has recently superintended an impression of it for the Shakepeare Society. He gives it as his opinion, that it was "intended for the amusements of an academic audience," and although the epilogue may be considered rather of a contrary character, the learned editor is probably right: it is, however, nearly certain that it was acted; and although it will not bear a moment's comparison with Shakespeare's "Timon of Athens," similar incidents and persons are contained in both.

The "Timon," as the said manuscript is devoured by flatterers: he becomes poor, and is at once deserted by all but his faithful steward— but before he abanonds Athens in disgust, he invites his parasites to a last banquet, and the whole historic analogy is again artificially, which he flings at them as he drives them out of his hall. Shakespeare represents Timon as regaling his guests with warm water; but it is very remarkable, that at the end of his mock-banquet scene, after the hero has quitted the stage, leaving certain lords behind him, upon whom he had thrown the warm water, the following dialogue occurs:—

1 Lord. Let's make no stay.

2 Lord. Timon's mad.

3 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones.

Shakespeare's Timon had cast no "stones" at his guests, and the above extract reads exactly as if it had formed part of such an original work. The following is in the note (p. 169, 4th ed.) of the Rev. A. Dyce: "Had been employed instead of warm water.

unless stones had been thrown, there could, as Steevens observes, be no propriety in the mention of them by the fourth

Lord. Shakespeare not having in his mind the chorus play which we have alluded to, a fragmentary essay by accident has found its way into his "Timon of Athens," which belonged to some other drama, where the banquet-scene was differently conducted. It is just possible that our great master, on that particular date, altered his text by draft, and by oversight left in the rhyming couplet with which the third Act concludes. We need not advert to other resemblances between the academic play and "Timon of Athens," because by the liberty of the possessor of the manuscript, it may be now said to have become public property.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

JULIUS CAESAR.

["The Tragedy of Julius Cæsar" was first printed in the folio 1623, where it occupies twenty-two pages; viz. from p. 109 to p. 109 exclusive. Widespread edition of "Timon of the Acts, but not the Scenes, are distinguished; and it appears in the same manner in the three later folios.]

No early quarto edition of "Julius Cæsar" is known, and there is reason to believe that it never appeared in that form.

The manuscript originally used for the folio of 1608 must have been extremely perfect, and free from corruptions, for there is, perhaps, no drama in the volume more accurately printed.

"Scribes and others have arrived at the conclusion that

"Julius Cæsar" could not have been written before 1607.

We think there is good ground for believing that it was acted before 1609.

A great deal of the above opinion upon some circumstances connected with the publication of Drayton's "Barons' Wars," and the resemblance between a stanza there found, and a passage in "Julius Cæsar," both of which it will be necessary to quote.

In Act v. sc. 5, Antony gives the following character of Drusus:—

"His life was gentle; and the elements

So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up

And say to all the world, This was a man."

In Drayton's "Barons' Wars," book iii. edit. Svo. 1608, we meet with the subsequent stanza. The author is speaking of

Mortimer:—

"Such one he was, of him we boldly say

In whose rich soul all sovereign powers did suit,

In whom in peace the elements all lay

So mix'd, as some severe and sullen impute;

As all did govern, yet all did obey;

His lively temper was so absolute,

That 'tis seem'd, when heaven his model first began,

In him it should perfection in a man."

It is hardly necessary to establish that one poet must have swailed himself, not only of the thought, but of the very words of the other. The question is, was Shakespeare indebted to Drayton, or to the author of "Mortimer," for the passage? We shall not enter into general probabilities, founded upon the original and exhaustless stores of the mind of our great dramatist, but advert to a few dates, which, we think, warrant the conclusion that Drayton, having heard "Julius Cæsar," at the theatre, or seen it in manuscript before 1609, applied to his own purpose, perhaps unconsciously, what, in fact, belonged to another poet.

Drayton's "Barons' Wars" first appeared in 1598, quarto, under the title of "Mortimeriad." Malone had a copy without date, and he and Steevens imagined that the poem had originally been printed in 1598. In the quarto of 1596, and in the undated edition, it is not divided into books, and the whole history of Mortimer's Forest and the English ballad-form to the Italian ottava rima. This course he took before 1608, when it came out in octavo, with the stanza first quoted, which contains so marked a similarity to the lines from "Julius Cæsar," We apprehend that he did so because he had heard or seen Shakespeare's tragedy before

1608; and we think that strong presumptive proof that he was the borrower, and not Shakespeare, is derived from the fact, that in the subsequent impressions of "The Barons' Wars," in 1605, 1613, 1618, and 1623, this stanza remained precisely as in the edition of 1608; but that in 1619, after

Shakespeare's death and before "Julius Cæsar" was printed,

Drayton made even a nearer approach to the words of his original, thus:—

"He was a man; then boldly dare to say,"

"In whose rich soul the virtues well did suit;"

"In whom so mix'd the elements did lay."

"That noon, whose dark eyes could severely impute;"

"As all did govern, so did all obey;"

"He of a temper so absolute,"

"As it seem'd, when heaven's model first began,"

"She meant to show all that might be in man."

We have been thus particular, because the point is obviously of importance, as regards the date when "Julius Cæsar" was brought upon the stage. Malone seems to have thought that "The Barons' Wars" were brought out in 1608, and that the resemblance to Shakespeare was first to be traced in that impression. He and he consulted the copies of 1608, or 1605 (which were not in his possession), for if he looked at all, he looked in the impression that Drayton had copied "Julius Caesar" an early as 1608, and once, and, Shakespeare imitated Drayton, that tragedy must then have been in existence. That Drayton had not remodelled his "Mortimeriadus" as late as 1602, we gather from the circumstance that any contemporary printer had not without "The Barons' Wars" in any form or under any title.

Another slight circumstance might be added to show that "Julius Caesar" was even an older tragedy than "Hamlet." In that act (Act 111. sec. 2) it is said that Julius Caesar was "beheld in thy picture," and Shakespeare's drama and representation, although contrary to the truth of history. This seems to have been the popular notion, and we find it confirmed in Sir Edward Dyer's "A Prayse of Nothing," 1585, where, in a translation of the Roman history, it is thus spoken of: "This stately Cæsar (proud Rome) had not beheld the bloody fall of pacified Cæsar, if nothing had accompanied him." Robert Greene, a graduate of both Universities, makes the same statement, and Shakespeare may have followed the conversation. In the same translation occurs, in the Capitol: "Chaucer had so spoken of it in his "Monk's Tale." It is not, however, likely, that Dr. Eedes, who wrote a Latin academical play on the story, acted at Oxford in 1582, which is the only claim Greene made. Shakespeare appears to have derived nearly all his materials from Plutarch, as translated by Sir Thomas North, and first published in 1579. At the same time, it is not unlikely that there was a preceding play, and our reason for thinking so is founded on the following fact. It is a new invention, taken from an entry in Hemswell's Diary dated May 22, 1602, that Anthony Munday, Michael Drayton, John Webster, Thomas Middleton, and other poets, were engaged upon a tragedy entitled "The Tragedy of Cæsar." The probability is, that these dramatists united their exertions, in order to delay to bring out a tragedy on the same subject as that of Shakespeare, which, perhaps, was then performing at the Globe Theatre with success. Malone states, that there is no proof that any such play had been presented. We may model a story that had already employed the pen of Shakespeare." He forgot that Ben Jonson was engaged upon a "Richard Crookback" in 1602; and he omitted, when examining Hemswell's Diary, to observe, that in the same year four "plots," and "other plots," were employed upon "Cæsar's Fall." From Vertue's manuscripts we learn that a play, called "Cæsar's Tragedy," was acted at Court in 1618, which might be the production of Lord Strange's Shakespeare's drama, that written by Munday, Drayton, Webster, Middleton, and others, or a play printed in 1607, under the title of "The Tragedy of Cæsar and Pompey, or Cæsar's Revenge." Mr. Peter Cunningham, in his "Revels' Accounts," (Intro. p. xxx.) has shown that the "nameless, blind tragedy of Cæsar," was exhibited at Court on Jan. 31, 1605-6.

MACBETH.

"The Tragedy of Macbeth" was first printed in the folio of 1623, where it occupies twenty-one pages; viz. from p. 181 to 210 inclusive, in the division of "Dramatick." The Acts and Scenes are regularly marked there, as well as in the later folios.

The only ascertained fact respecting the performance of "Macbeth," in the lifetime of its author, is that it was represented at the Globe Theatre on the 20th of April, 1610. What company produced it, or played it, is not known, but we are inclined to think that it was not, and that Macbeth was right in his conjecture, that it was first acted about the year 1606. The subsequent account of the plot is derived from Dr. Simon Forman's manuscript Diary, preserved in the Ashmolean Museum, from which it appears, that he saw "Macbeth" played at the Globe on the day we have stated:—

"In Macbeth, at the Globe, the 10th of April, Saturday, there was to be observed, first, how Macbeth and Banquo, two noblemen of Scotland, were going to the theatre, attended to themselves by Fairies, or Nymphs, and saluted Macbeth, saying three times unto him, Hal! Macbeth, King of Cæsar, for thou shalt be a King, but shall beget no Kings, &e., then said Banquo, What's all to Macbeth, and nothing to me? Yes, said the Nymphs, Halli to thee, Banquo: then shalt beget Kings, yet be no King. And so they departed, and came to the Court of Scotland, to Duncan, King of Scots, as it was said."

Lord Strange published a tragedy under the title of "Julius Caesar." In 1604 the resemblances are by no means numerous, and probably not more than may be accounted for by the fact, that two writers were treating the same subject. The popularity in the days of Edward the Confessor. And Duncan had then so kindly welcome, and made Macbeth forthwith Prince of Northumb-
Those who read the two will, perhaps, wonder how a doubt could have been entertained. "The Witch," in all probability, was not written until about 1618; and what most assuredly might have been a piece at the author's disposal for decades, is the simple, the plain, and yet the most degrading of all Shakespeare's inventions; for, although, as Lamb observes, "the power of Middleton's witches is in some measure over the mind," (Specimens of Eng. Dram. Poets, p. 174) they are of a degenerate race, as if, Shakespeare having created them, no other mind was sufficiently gifted even to continue their existence.

Whether Shakespeare obtained his knowledge regarding the existences of the faculty of the witch, he supposes them to have frequented, from actual observation, is a point we have considered in the Biography of the poet. The existing evidence on the question is there collected, and we have shown, that ten years before the date hitherto assigned to that circumstance, the compiler of the Quarto Players' Registers, claimed to have discovered the Queen's Players' Company in Edinburgh. This fact is quite new in the history of the introduction of English theatrical performances into Scotland. That the Queen's comedians were north of the Tweed in 1599, or at best, 1600, is contrary; we know also that they were in Aberdeen in 1601, when the freedom of the city was presented to Laurence Fletcher (the first name in the patent of 1596); but to establish that they were in Edinburgh in 1598 gives much more latitude for speculation on the question, whether Shakespeare, in the interval of about fourteen years before James I. ascended the throne of England, had at any time accompanied his fellow-countrymen.

At whatever date we suppose Shakespeare to have written "Macbeth," we may perhaps infer, from a passage in Kemp's "Nine Days' Wonder," 1600, that there existed a ballad upon the story, which may have been older than the tragedy: such is the statement in his notes to the longprint of this tract by the Camden Society, p. 24. The point, however, is doubtful, and it is obvious that Kemp did not mean to be very intelligible; his other allusions to ballad-makers of his time are purposely obscure.

"Macbeth" was inserted by the printer-editors in the folio of 1623; and, as in other similar cases, we may presume that it had not come from the press at an earlier date, because in the same year, 1608, it is regarded by Biont and Jagard, on the 8th of November, 1629, as one of the plays "not formerly entered to other men." It has been handed down in an unusually complete state, for not only are the divisions of the acta pointed out, but the subdivisions of the scenes carefully and accurately noted.

This undated edition was probably printed in 1607, as it was entered at Stationers' Hall on Nov. 19, in that year. An impression, by R. Young, in 1616, has also John Smethwick.

In the folio of 1623, "The Tragedie of Hamlet, Prince of Denmerke," occupies thirty-one pages, in the division of "Tragodys," viz. from p. 152 to p. 280, inclusive, there being a mistake between p. 156 and what ought to have been p. 157.

The story upon which, there is reason to believe, Shakespeare founded his tragedy of "Hamlet," has recently been reprinted, from the only known perfect copy, as part of a work called "Shakespeare's Library;" and there is, perhaps, nothing more remarkable than the fact, which our great dramatist wrought these barbarous, uncouth materials into the magnificent structure he left behind him. A comparison of "The Historie of Hamlet," as it was translated at an early date from the French of Bellerofte, with "The Tragedy of Hamlet," shows a vast superiority in Green and Lodge was obvious in "The Winter's Tale," and "As You Like It," but the novels of "Pandosto" and "Rosalynde," as narratives, were perhaps as far above "The Historie of Hamlet," as "The Winter's Tale" and "As You Like It" were above the originals from which their main incidents were derived. Nothing, however, much more can be said in favor of his style and form, than the production to which it is supposed Shakespeare was indebted for the foundation of his "Hamlet."

There is, however, some ground for thinking, that a lost play upon similar incidents preceded the work of Shake- speare. How far that lost play may have influenced, the old translated "Historie," we have no means of deciding, nor to what extent Shakespeare availed himself of such improvement. A drama, of which Hamlet was the hero, was performed in being prior to the year 1600, (in all probability not too early a date for Shakespeare to have been the writer of it) for we find it thus alluded to by Thomas Nash, in his prophyliminary epistle to the "Memphon" of Robert Greene, published in that year (1594). Yet English drama on the candle-light, yields many good sentences, as blood is a byggar, and so forth; and if you entertain him fair in a frosty morning, he will afford you whole Hamletes, I should say handfuls, of speeches. This the writer of "As You Like It" reckons as their productions at that period, and he seems to have gone out of his way, in order to introduce the very name of the performance against which he was directing ridicule. Another piece of evidence, to the same effect, but of a more questionable kind, is to be found in Heywood's Diary, under the date of June 9th, 1594, when a "Hamlet" was represented at the theatre at Newington Butts: that it was then an old play, is ascertained from the absence of the mark, which the old first edition usually pronounced. But it is very probable that his share of the receipts was only nine shillings. At that date, however, the company to which Shakespeare belonged was in joint occupation of the same theatre, and it is conceivable, though probably impossible, that Hamlet was presented on June 9th, 1594, was Hexed's "Hamlet."

We feel confident, however, that the "Hamlet," which has come down to us in at least six quarto impressions, in the folio of 1623, and in the later impressions in that form, was not written until the winter of 1601, or the spring of 1602.

Malone, Steevens, and the other commentators, were acquainted with no edition of the tragedy anterior to the quarto of 1604, which professes to be "elarg'd to almost as much again as it was," though it seems from a passage in the copy that had been printed before; and within the last twenty years a single copy of an edition in 1608 has been discovered. This, in fact, seems to have been the abbreviated and imperfect edition, consisting of only about half as much as the impression of 1604. It belongs to the Duke of Devonshire, and, by the favour of his Grace, is now before us. From it, perhaps, we have no information; but it is professed to be the old quarto printed for N. L. and W. J. in 1604, and the following year was printed by I. R. for N. L. only; and why Trundell ceased to have any interest in the publication we know not. N. L. was Nicholas Ling; and I. R., the printer.

Bellerofte derived his knowledge of the incidents from the History of Denmark, by Saxo Grammaticus, first printed in 1514.

We give the date of 1557 on the excellent authority of the Rev. Mr. Thomas W. Green's "Shakespeare's World," xxvii. xxi. Perhaps, he never been able to meet with any impression earlier than that of 1553. Sir Egerton Bridges reprinted the tract from the edition of 1558, when its name was changed to "Green's Arcadia," in "Archives," vol. i.
INTRODUCTION TO THE PLAYS.

of the edition of 1604, was, no doubt, James Roberts, who, two years before, had made the following entry in the Register of the Stationers' Company:

James Roberts. A booke, The Revenge of Hamlett, Prince of Denmark, as yt was latecly actedy by the Lord Chamberlayn his servantes.

"The words, as it was lately acted," are important upon the point whether the authorship of the play is proved, that it was not just a plain hack job and that the tragedy had been performed by the company to which Shakespeare belonged. In the spring of 1603, the Lord Chamberlain's servants became the King's players; and on the title-page of the quarto of 1606, it was "acted by his Highness' servants." On the title-page of the quarto of 1604 we are not informed that the tragedy had been acted by any company.

Thus we see, that in July, 1602, there was an intention to print and publish a play called "The Revenge of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark?" and this intention, we may fairly conclude, arose out of the popularity of the piece, as it was then acted by "the Lord Chamberlain's servants," which, in May following, obtained the title of "the King's servants." The object of Roberts in making the entry already quoted, was to secure it to himself, being, no doubt, aware that other printers and booksellers would endeavor to anticipate him. It seems probable, that he was unable to obtain such a copy of the play as would put him in possession of it; but some inferior and nameless printer, who was not so scrupulous, having surreptitiously secured a manuscript of the play, however imperfect, which would answer the purpose, and gratify public curiosity, the edition bearing his name, was published. Such, we have little doubt, was the origin of the impression of which only a single copy has reached our day, and of which, probably, but a few were sold, as its worthlessness was soon discovered, and it was quickly entirely superseded by the earlier edition of 1604.

As an accurate reprint was made in 1625 of "The Tragedial Historie of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark," 1608, it will be unnecessary to go into detail in proofs to establish, as we could do without much difficulty, the following points:—it is true, in the earliest edition of 1603, Polonius is called Coramis, and his servant, Montano, and we may not be able to determine why these changes were made in the immediately subsequent impression; but we may perhaps conjecture that the change in the name of Coramis, which is in the copy of the play itself, and the name of Montano, or names which Shakespeare at first introduced, and subsequently thought fit to reject. We know that Ben Jonson changed the whole dramatic personae of his "Every Man in his Humour," and

But although we entirely reject the quarto of 1608, as an authentic "Hamlet," it is of high value in enabling us to settle the text of various important passages. It proves, besides, that certain portions of the play, as it appears in the folio of 1623, which do not form part of the quarto of 1604, were originally acted, and were not, as has been hitherto imagined, subsequent introductions. We have pointed out these and other peculiarities so fully in our notes, that we need not dwell upon them here; but we may mention, that in Act II., Scene ii., the name of Yorick, who, as we shall presently show, was at the time the chief performer of the part when the short-hand writer saw the tragedy, with a view to the speedy publication of a fraudulent impression.

"My father, in his habit as he lived," are the words he recorded from the mouth of the actor of Hamlet.

The impression of 1604 being intended to supersede that of 1603, which gave a most mangled and imperfect notion of the drama in its true state, we may perhaps presume that the quarto of 1604 was, at least, as authentic a copy of Hamlet as any of Shakespeare's plays were printed from the press during his lifetime. It contains various passages, some of them of great importance to the conduct and character of the hero, not to be found in the folio of 1623; while the folio omits other scenes, and in other passages. Although, as before remarked, we have the evidence of the quarto of 1608, that they were originally acted. The different quarto impressions were printed from each other and even that of 1607, though it makes some verbal changes, contains no distinct indication that the printer had resorted to the folio.

The three later folios, in this instance as in others, were printed from the immediately preceding edition in the same way as the quarto of 1604 and the first quarto of 1623. We are not, therefore, surprised to find, that the folio of 1623, were not composed from some now unknown quarto, it was derived from a manuscript obtained by Heminge and Condell from the theatre. The Acts and Scenes are, however, marked only in the first and second Acts, after which, no divisions of the kind are noticed; and where Act and Scene are mingled, the order is merely matter of modern conjecture. Some large portions of the play appear to have been omitted for the sake of shortening the performance; and any editor who may undertake a new edition of Hamlet, will, without additions from the quarto, would present but an imperfect notion of the drama as it came from the hand of the poet. The text of "Hamlet," it is, in fact, only to be obtained from a comparison of the editions in quarto and folio, but the misprints in the latter are quite as numerous and glaring as in the former. In various instances we have been able to correct the one by the other, and it is in this respect chiefly that the quarto of 1604 is of intrinsic value.

A further advantage, after vouchsafed to us from the occasion that he had derived his ideas of Hamlet from Schlegel, (and we heard him boast them some years before the Lectures, Uber Dramatische Kunst und Literatur, were published,) from a few sentences, sums up the character of Hamlet. Shakespeare, he says, "in order to discomfit the moral necessity of a due balance between our attention to the objects of our senses, and our meditation on the workings of our mind,—an equilibrum between the real and the imaginary worlds. In Hamlet this balance is disturbed: his thoughts and the images of his fancy are far more vivid than his actual perceptions; and his very perceptions, instantly passing through the medium of his contemplations, acquire, as they pass, a form and a color not naturally their own. Hence we see a great, almost an enormus, intellectual activity, and a proportionate aversion to real action consequent upon it, with all its symptoms and accompanying qualities. This character Shakespeare places in circumstances which are a perfect foil to Hamlet's bravo, and endless of death; but he vacillates from sensibility, and procrastinates from thought, and loses the power of action in the energy of resolve." (Lit. Rem. vol. II. p. 295.)

It has generally been supposed that Joseph Taylor was the original actor of Hamlet—and Wright, in his "Historia Histrionica, 1669, certainly speaks of him as having performed the part. This, however, must have been after the death of Richard Burbage, which happened precisely eighty years before Wright published his tract. We know, from the manuscript Elegy upon Burbage, sold among Heber's books, that he was the earliest representative of Hamlet; and there the circumstance of his being what we call in the language of to-day, a "thorough-bred" of Shakespeare, and the very words of Shakespeare. Taylor did not belong to the company for which Shakespeare wrote at the date when "Hamlet" was produced.

KING LEAR.

W. M. Shakespear: His True Chronicle Historie of th' Infortunate Life, Death and Death of Lear. It is commonly affirmed that the "Infortunate Life of Edgar, and his son and assumed name of Tom o' Bedlam. As it was played before the Kings Majestie a Whitehall vpon S. Stephens night in Christmas Hollidays. An Impression on Paper newly Printed at the Banke-side. London, Printed for Nathaniel Butter and are to be sold at his shop in Paul's Church-yard, at the sign of the Pige Bull nere St. Austin's Gate. 1608. 4to 41 leaves.
M. William Shakspeare, His True Chronicle History of the life and death of King Lear, and his three Daughters. With the unfortunate life of Edgar, sonne and heir to the Earle of Gloucester, and his sullen and assumed name of Earl of Betham. The last, and one by chance, by an error, is numbered 88, instead of 309. In the first, as well as in the folios of 1632, 164, and 1685, the Acts and Scenes are regularly marked.

The most remarkable circumstance connected with the early publication of "King Lear" is, that the same stationer published the three quarto impressions of it in 1605, that stationer being a person who had not put forth any of the authentic (as far as they can deserve to be so considered) editions of Shakespeare's plays. After it had been three times printed (for they were not merely re-issues with fresh title-pages) in the same year, the tragedy was not again printed until it appeared in the folio of 1623. Why it was never republished in quarto, in the interval, must be matter of speculation, but such an omission cannot be reconciled with the wonderful and great dramatist: his "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Merchant of Venice," and "Troilus and Cressida" were twice printed, the first in 1600, and the last in 1609, and they were not again seen in type until 1623, when there was also a second quarto edition of "Much ado about Nothing," nor of "Love's Labour's Lost." The extreme popularity of "King Lear" seems proved by the mere fact that the public demand for it, in the first year of its publication, could not be satisfied without three distinct impressions.

It will be seen by the exact copies of the title-pages which we have inserted on the opposite leaf, that although Nathaniel Butter, the publisher of the first quarto edition, he only put his address on the title-page of one of them. It is perhaps impossible now to ascertain on what account the difference was made; but it is to be observed that "Printed by J. Roberts," without any address, is found at the bottom of the title-pages of some of the copies of "The Merchant of Venice" and "Midsummer Night's Dream" in 1600. A more remarkable circumstance, in relation to the title-pages of "King Lear," is, that the name of William Shakespeare is not to be found at the top of the page, nor on the first or second leaf, but that used for any other part of the work: moreover, we have it again at the head of the leaf on which the tragedy commences, "M. William Shakespeare, his History of King Lear." This peculiarity has been contracted sufficiently to show that it was not only to no other of Shakespeare's plays, but to no other production of any kind of that period which we recollect. It was clearly intended to enable purchasers to make sure that they were buying the drama which "M. William Shakespeare" had written upon the story of King Lear.

The cause of it is, perhaps, to be found in the fact, that there was another contemporary drama upon the same subject, and with very nearly the same names to the principal characters, which was not by Shakespeare, but which the publisher probably had endeavored to pass off as his work. An edition of this play was printed in 1605, under the following title:—"The True Chronicle History of King Lear," with the Kings Cordelia, Regan, and Cordelia. As it had divers and sundry times lately acted." It was printed.

Simon Stafford, for John Wright; and we agree with one in thinking that this impression was put forth in consequence of Shakespeare's "King Lear," which was then in a course of successful performance at the Globe theatre. That this edition of "The True Chronicle History of King Lear" was a re-impression we have little doubt; for it was entered on Stationers' Hall for publication as early as 16th May, 1694: it was entered again on 8th May, 1695, anterior to the appearance of the impression with that date, the title-page of which we have above quoted.

We may presume that in 1605 no hoje was put in order for Shakespeare's "King Lear," for there is perhaps no point in our early state-history more clear, than that the different companies took every precaution in order to prevent the publication of plays belonging to the same. However, in the autumn of 1607, Nathaniel Butter had in some way possessed him of a manuscript of "King Lear," and on the 26th November he procured the following unusually minute memorandum to be made in the Stationers' Registers:—

29 Nov. 1607.

Na. Butter and Jo. Bvbny entered for Iac. Cope under 1' bands of Sir Geo. Bucke, Kt. and the Wardens, a booke called Mr. William Shakespeare, his History of Kinge Lear, as it was played before the Kinge's Majestie at White-Hall, upon S. Stephens night, in Christmas Hollidais. By his Malesties Servants, playing usually at the Globe on the Bank-side. Printed for Nathaniel Butter.

"This entry establishes that Shakespeare's "King Lear" had been acted at Court on St. Stephen's Eve, 1607, and that it was performed before the King's Majesty at White-Hall, on St. Stephen's night at Christmas last, by his Malesties Servants playing usually at the Globe on the Bankside."

The memoriam which we have just inserted would lead us to believe that the play was not performed till after the Christmas interval, although his name does not otherwise at all appear in connection with it. The differences between the quarto are seldom more than verbal, but they are sometimes important: after a very patient comparison, we may state, that the quarto without the publisher's address are more accurate than that with his address; and we presume that the latter was first issued. It would seem that the folio of 1623 was composed from a manuscript, which had been much, and not very judiciously, emended for the purposes of the theatre, and although it contains some additions, not in any of the quarto, there are, perhaps, few quarto of any of Shakespeare's plays more valuable for the quantity of matter they contain, of which there is no trace in the folio.

We have said we agree with Malone in opinion, the "King Lear" was brought out at the Globe Theatre in the spring of 1605, according to our present mode of computing the year. We may decide with certainty that it was not performed until after the Christmas interval. Below is a "Discovery of Popish Impostors" in 1608, because from it, as Stevens established, are taken the names of various fiends mentioned by Edgar in the course of his scenes of pretended madness. As we find a "King Lear" entered on the Stationers' books in 1594, we can have no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the old play, printed by Simon Stafford for John Wright, in 1605, when Shakespeare's "King Lear" was (as we have supposed) experiencing a run of popular success at the Globe, was considerably superior in point of date. There is little doubt that Shakespeare was acquainted with it, and probably adopted from it at least part of that conduct of his story which relates to the faithful Kent. There are other general, but few particular resemblances; for both the chief materials were evidently derived from D'Ulisse, but Shakespeare varied from all authorities in his catastrophe; he seems to have thought, that to abandon the course of the ordinary and popular narrative, would heighten and improve the interest of his drama, and give a novelty to its termination. The story of Lear and his daughters is briefly told by Spenser in B. ii. c. 10, of his "Faerie Queene," and thenoe it has been thought that Shakespeare obtained the name of Cordelia, that of Corinna, and the general plot which relates to the Earl of Gloucester, he may have procured from Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia," first printed in 1590, 4to. B. ii. c. 19, of that romance is thus headed —

*The last page and story of the Falanghinae imaginary King, and his kind son." An early ballad on 'King Lear was also published (see Percy's Reliques, vol. ii. p. 245; edit. 1812), but no copy with a date has come down to us; although it employs the older names of some of the characters, it adopts that of Corinna; and the general scheme is that of a new and more modern style of composition, which leads us to the belief that it was written posterior to the production of Shakespeare's Tragedy."

OTHELLO.

"The Tragedy of Othello, the Moor of Venice." As it hath beenes diverse times acted at the Globe, and at the Blackfriars, by his Majesty's Servants, at the Theatre in Blackfriars. Shakespeare. London, Printed by N. O. for Thomas Walkley, and are to be sold at his shop, at the Eagle and Child, in Brittan's Burse. 1622. 4to. 43 leaves, irregularly paginated."

"The Tragedy of Othello, the Moor of Venice," occupies thirty pages in the folio of 1623; viz. from p. 310 to p. 389 inclusive, in the division of "Tragedies." It is there, as in the three later folios, divided into Acts and Scenes, and on the last page is a list of the characters, headed, "The Name of the Actors."

"The Tragedy of Othello, the Moor of Venice."
By the subsequent extract from "The Egerton Papers," printed by the Camden Society, (p. 345) it appears that "Othello" was acted for the entertainment of Queen Elizabeth, or at her request, at the residence of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal at Harlefield, in the beginning of August, 1602:—

"At Harlefield, 1602. Rewards to the Vaulters, players, and Jinxers. Of this to Barbeidge's players for Othello, Istliii xviii. x."

The part of the memorandum which relates to "Othello" is interlined, as if added afterwards; but we find decisively, that this tragedy was in being in the summer of 1602; and the probability is, that it was selected for performance because it was a new play, having been brought out at the Globe Theatre, in the month of May, 1601. The incidents, with some variation, are to be found in Cinthio's Herósmóthi, where the novel is the third Deceit, and it bears the following explanatory title in the Monte Regale edition of 1563:—"Un Capitano Merigo piglia per le cure di una Venetiana un' Alferiina di astuzia al marito; certa che l'Alferiina nascasi colui ch'egli credea l'adultero: il Capitano ucide la moglie, è accusato dell'Alferi, non confessa il Moro, ma essendovi chieri indulti è bandito; et lo scelerato Alferi, errando nascosto ad altri, procede a se la morte miseramente." This novel was early translated into French, and in all probability into English, but no such version has descended to us. Our great dramatist may indeed have read the story in the original language; and it is highly probable that he was sufficiently acquainted with Italian for the purpose. Hence he took only the name of Desdemona.

We have seen, by the quotation from "The Egerton Papers," that "Othello" was acted by Barbeidge's players at Harlefield, and there can be no doubt that he was the leading actor of the company, and thereby in the account gave his name to the association, though properly denominated the Lord Chamberlain's Servants. Richard Burbage was the original actor of the part of Othello, as we learn from an elegy upon his death, among the late Mr. Heber's manuscripts. To the same that we may quote the concluding stanza of a ballad, on the incident of "Othello," written after the death of Burbage, which also came down to us in manuscript:—

"Dick Burbage, that most famous man, That actor without peer, With this same part his course began, And kept it many a year."

Shakespeare was fortunate, I know, That such an actor had: If we had but his equal now, For one I should be glad."

The writer speaks at random, when he asserted that Burbage began his career with Othello, for we have evidence to show that he was an actor of high celebrity, many years before Shakespeare's "Othello" was written, and we have no proof that there was any play upon the subject. There are two quarto editions of "Othello," one bearing date in 1622, the year before the first folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies" appeared, and the other, which is a revised quarto, was entered for the quarter of 1622, will be found in the usual place, and that published in 1650 differs only in the imprint, which in 1685, by A. M., for Richard Hawkins, &c. We have had frequent occasion in our notes to refer to this impression, which has often been, as it is frequently the case with quarto editions, a subject of dispute. So little like sufficient attention has been paid to it. Malone summarily dismissed it as "an edition of no authority," but it is very clear that he had never sufficiently examined it. It was unquestionably made from a manuscript different from that used for the quarto of 1622, or for the folio of 1632; and it presents a number of various readings, some of which singularly illustrate the original text of "Othello." Of this fact it may be fit here to remind the reader. In Act iii, sc. 8, a passage occurs in the folio of 1623, which is not contained in the quarto of 1622, and which runs thus imperfectly in the folio:—

"I was named as the Porticase, Whose joy is coyness, not coarse: Ne'er keeps retiring ebb, but keeps due on To the Propostick and the Hellpont," &c.

It will not be disputed that "Ne'er keeps retiring ebb"

It appears from Mr. P. Conington's "Excerpts from the Account of the Revels at Court," (printed for the Shakespeare Society) p. 93, that a play, called "The Moor of Venet," no doubt, "Othello," was acted at Whitehall on Nov. 1st, 1601. The tragedy seems to have must be wrong, the composer of the folio having caught "keeps" from the latter portion of the same line. In Pope's edition, "feels" was substituted for "keeps," and the word has since universally come into use. Mr. Malone's correction was made by Mr. Pope. The truth is, that Pope was right in his conjecture as to the misprinted word, for in the quarto of 1630, which Malone could not have consulted, but which he nevertheless pronounced "of no authority," the passage stands thus:—

"Like to the Porticase, Whose joy is coyness, not coarse: Ne'er keeps retiring ebb," &c.

If Malone had looked at the quarto of 1630, he would have seen that Pope had been anticipated in his proposed emendation about a hundred years; and that in the manuscript from which the quarto of 1630 was printed, the true word was "feels," and not "keeps," as it was misprinted in the folio of 1623. We will take an instance, only six lines earlier in the same scene, to show the value of the quarto of 1630, in supporting the quarto of 1622, and in corroborating the folio of 1623. Othello exclamns, as we find the words in the folio, and these are exactly the words in the quarto of 1630, although it can be established that it was printed, not from the quarto of 1622, nor from the folio of 1623, but from a manuscript which in many places differed materially from both, and in some few supplied a text inferior to both. It is not necessary to go beyond this point, since we have already shown how abundantly the quarto of 1630, instead of being "of no authority," is of great value, with reference to the true reading of some important passages.

"Arius, black vengeance, from the hollow cell!"

Walkley, the publisher of the quarto of 1623, thus entered that edition on the Stationers' Registers, shortly previous to its appearance:

"Oct. 1623. The Tragedy of Othello, The Moire of Venice." It is perhaps not too much to presume, that this impression, though dated 1623, had come out at the close of 1621; and that it preceded the folio of 1623 is very obvious, from the fact, that "Othello" was not included in their list by Blount and Jaggard, the publishers of the folio of 1623, because they were aware that it had already been printed, and that it had been entered as the property of another bookseller. The quarto of 1623 was preceded by the following address:—

"The Stationer to the Reader.

"To set forth a book without an epistle were like to the old English proverb, 'A blue eoeat without a badge;' and the author being of the same sententia, I have ventured to print this play, and leave it to the general censure. Yours, THOMAS WALKLEY"

The publishers of the folio of 1623, perhaps purchased Walkley's interest in "Othello".
The novel by Boccaccio has many corresponding features. It is the ninth of Giornata I., and bears the following title: "Bernabo da Genova, da Ambrogignolo innanzato, per l'Andromeda, chi ha scopato a metà di otto anni; e di tutta l'infanzia, e scena, e et in habito di buono servo il Soldano; ritrova l'in-gannatore, e Bernabo conclude in Alessandria, dove l'inganno-tore punito, ripreca habito femminile col marito ricchi si ritrova in Genova."

This tale includes one-circumstance only found there and in Shakespeare's play: we allude to the mole which Iachimo saw on the breast of Imogen. The parties are all merchants in Boccaccio, excepting towards the close of his novel, where the Soldano is introduced: the villain, being suspected of being poisoned, is punished by being anointed with honey, and exposed in the sun to flies, wasps, and mosquitoes, which eat the flesh from his bones.

A modification of this production seems to have found its way into some contemporaneous French plays in the sixteenth century. Steevens states that it was printed in 1608, and again in 1620, in a tract called "Westward for Smells." If there be no error as to the date, the edition of 1608 has been found, for no copy of that year now seems to exist in any public or private collection. Mr. Halliwell, in his reprint of The First Sketch of The Merry Wives of Windsor, (for the Shakespeare Society) p. 185, has expressed his opinion that Steevens must have been mistaken, and that "Westward for Smells" was not published until 1620; only one copy even of this impression is known; and if, in fact, it were not, as Steevens supposes, a reprint of Shakespeare, nor could have resorted to it; however, he might, perhaps, have been much more easily satisfied that this version may then have been in existence, of which he availed himself, but which has not come down to our day. The incidents in "Westward for Smells" are completely anglicized, and the play is supposed to have been composed by Shakespeare and Edward IV. In the French and Italian versions, Iachino (or the person answering to him) is conveyed to Imogen's chamber in a chest, but in "Westward for Smells," where the scene is in other respects vulgarized, he conceals himself under her bed.

Some German critics, whose opinions are often entitled to the most respectful consideration, have supposed that "Cymbeline" was written in 1610 or 1611, not earlier. This is certainly a probable supposition, because the circumstances that Shakespeare had then reenacted all connection with the stage, and had retired from the metropolis. Malone thought that 1609 was the year which might be most probably fixed upon; and although we do not adopt his reasoning upon the point, we are strongly inclined to believe that this drama was not, at all events, written at an earlier period. Forman, the astrologer, was present when "Cymbeline" was acted—most likely, in 1610 or 1611—but he does not mention any literal present, and we have not found any record of the time when, or place where, he saw it. His brief account of the plot, in his "Books of Plays and Notes thereof" (MS. Ashmol. No. 208), is in the following terms:

"Remember, also, the story of Cymbeline, king of England in that time; how Lucius and Regan, and the daughter of the king and being desired, after sent Lucius with a great army of soldiers, who landed at Milford Haven, and after were vanquished by Cymbeline, and Lucius taken prisoner; and all by means of three panes of the which two of them were the sons of Cymbeline, stolen from him when they were but two years old, by an old man whom Cymbeline had punished; and he kept them in his own house to have them with him in a cave. And how one of them slew Cletus, that was the queen's son, going to Milford Haven to seek the love of Imogen the king's daughter, whom he had banished also for loving his daughter."

"And how the Italian that came from her love conveyed himself to her, and said it was not wise to play, and the others to be presented to the king. And in the deepest of the night, the being scarce, he opened the chest and came forth of it, and viewed the jewels of her bed, and the body of the queen's son, and after accused her of adultery to her love, and. In the end, how he came with the Romans into England, and was a great king, and after, and after, and after, and after, and in man's apparel, and did to meet her love at Milford Haven; and chances to fall on the cave in the woods where her two brothers were, and by which the official turned, and then the cave was dead, and laid her in the woods, and the body of Cletus by her in her love's apparel that he left behind him, and how she was found dead."

We have certainly no right to conclude that "Cymbeline" was a new piece when Forman witnessed the performance of it; but various critics have concurred in the opinion (which we ourselves entertain) that in style and versification it resembles "The Winter's Tale," and then belong to about the same period of the poet's life. "The Winter's Tale" was a new piece when Forman witnessed the performance of it; but various critics have concurred in the opinion that in style and versification it resembles "The Winter's Tale," and then belong to about the same period of the poet's life.
we feel persuaded that we could extract nearly every line that was not dictated by his great intellect. We are assured that Shakespeare found a device for the story in the possession of one of the companies performing in London, and that, in accordance with the ordinary practice of the time, he made additions to and improvements in it, and procured it to be represented at the Globe. We have preserved the original piece, it is true; but the ideas it contained were altered, and it is impossible that such was the case with "Pericles." The circumstance that it was a joint production, may account for the non-appearance of "Pericles" in the folio of 1623. Ben Jonson, when printing the "Tragedy of Borne," in 1616, excluded for the "same Altered," and added, "By Robert Ho," in the composition of which he had been engaged with others; and when the player-editors of the folio of 1623 were collecting their materials, they perhaps omitted "Pericles" because some licence was necessary, and it is only impossible that such was the case with "Pericles." The Registers of the Stationers Company show that on the 20th May, 1608, Edward Blount (one of the proprietors of the folio of 1623) entered "The book of Pericles, Prince of Tyre," with one of the notes, "Philadelphia" and "Cleopatra." Nevertheless, "Pericles," was not published by Blount, but by Gossen in the following year; and we may infer, either that Blount sold his interest to Gossen, or that Gossen anticipated Blount's edition. A manuscript of the play, by the author, has subsequently been printed with "Pericles" by Thomas Favier and hence the re-impression by the latter in 1619, having thus spoken of the internal evidence of authorship, and of the possibility of the identity of "Pericles" was not included in the folio of 1623, we will now advert briefly to the external evidence, that it was the work of our great dramatist. In the first place it was printed in 1609, with its name at full length, and rendered unusually obvious by Blount's notes, the number, of course, must be this a fraud, and that this had previously been committed in the cases of the first part of "Sir John Oldcastle," 1600, and of "The Yorkshire Tragedy," 1608. It is undoubtedly true, that Shakespeare's name is usually on those title-pages; but we know, with regard to "Sir John Oldcastle," that the ordinary title-page, stating it to have been "Written by William Shakespeare," was cancelled, no doubt at the instance of the author to whom it was falsely imputed; and as to the Yorkshire Tragedy, there is no evidence that the book existed, in which we join, that Shakespeare had a share in its composition. We are not to forget that, in the year preceding, Nathaniel Butter had made very prominent use of Shakespeare's name, for the sale of three impressions of "Lear;" and when "Pericles" came out, Thorpe had printed a collection of scattered poems, recommending them to notice in very large capitals, by stating emphatically that they were "Shakespeare's Sonnets."

The proof of what precedes, it may be mentioned, that previously to the insertion of "Pericles" in the folio of 1664, it had been imputed to Shakespeare by S. Shepherd, in his "Times displayed in Six Sestads," 1616; and in lines by J. Turham, prefixed to R. Brome's "The Jovial Crew," 1652, he gave it to Shakespeare in 1675, in the Prologue to C. Davenant's "Gree." Thus, as far as stage tradition is of value, it is uniformly in favour of our position; and it is moreover to be observed, that we will comparatively modern texts have never been suspected.

The incidents of "Pericles" are found in Lawrence Twine's translation from the Gesta Romana, first published in 1576, under the title of "The Pattern of Pleasant Adventures," in which the hero is named Pericles Shakespeare, but are called Apolloins, Lucius, and Tharsis.

This novel was several times reprinted, and an

1 By a list of theatrical apparel, formerly belonging to Alleyn, and preserved at Dulwich College, it appears that he had probably some of the materials of Edward Alleyn, printed for the Shakespeare Society, p. 21. This might be the play which Shakespeare altered and improved.

2 The novel is contained in a work called "Shakespeare's Library," as well as Gower's poetical paraphrases of the same incidents, extracted from his Confessio Amantis. Hence the propriety of making Gower the speaker of the various interpolations in "Pericles," and as we find him in the dedication of these verses, in a "sacra catalogiae," in 1598; it purports to have been "printed for S. S." This fact would show, that Shakespeare did not then con edition of it came out in 1607, which perhaps was the year in which "Pericles" was first represented "at the Globe on the Bank-side," as is stated on the title-page of the earliest edition in 1609. The drama seems to have been extremely popular, but the usual difficulty being experienced by booksellers in obtaining a copy of it, Nathaniel Butter probably employed some person to attend the performances at the theatre, and with the aid of notes there taken, and of Twine's version of the story, (which, as we remarked, had just before been reprinted) to compose a novel out of the incidents of the play under the following title, "The Painfull Adventures of Pericles Prince of Tyre. Being the true History of the Play of Pericles, as it was lastly presented by the worthy and ancient Poet John Gower. At London. Printed by T. P. for Nat. Butter. 1607." It has also a wood-cut of Gower, no doubt, in the costume he wore at the Globe. This publication is valuable, not merely because it is the only known specimen of the kind of that date in our language, but because through in prose, (with the exception of a song), it gives some of the speeches more at length, than in the play as it has come down to us, and explains several obscure and disputed passages. For this latter purpose it will be seen that we have availed ourselves of it in our notes; but it will not be out of place here to speak of the strong presumptive evidence it affords, that the drama has not reached us by any means in the shape in which it was originally represented.

The subsequent is given, in the novel of 1608, as the speech of Mariana, when she is visited in the brothel by Lysimachus, the governor of Miletus, whom, by her virtue, beauty, and eloquence, she diverts from the purpose for which he came."

"If you say, my lord, you are the governor, let not your authority, which should teach you to rule others, be the means to make you misgovern yourself. If the eminence of your place came unto you by descent, and the royalty of your blood, let not your life prove your birth bastard: if it were thrown up, you have done wisely. That opinion was the cause to make you great. What reason is there in your justice, who hath power over all, to undo any? If you take from me mine honour, you are like him that makes a gap into forbidden ground, after whom many enter, and you are guilty of all their evils. My life is yet unspotted, my chastity untaimed; thought: then, if your violence deface this building, the workmanship of heaven, made up for good, and not to be the exercise of sin's intermixture, you do kill your own honour, abuse your own justice, and impoverish me."

Of this speech in the printed play we only meet with the following emphatic term:

"If you were born to honour, show it now:
If put upon you, make the judgment good,
That thought you worthy of it."—(A. iv. sc. 6.)

It will hardly be required of me to argue, that the powerful address, copied from the novel founded upon "Pericles," could not be the mere enlargement of a short-hand writer, who had taken notes at the theatre, who from the very difficulty of the operation, and from the haste with which he must afterwards have committed the history, would be much more likely to abridge than to expand. In some parts of the novel it is evident that the prose, there used, was made up from the blank-verse composition of the drama, as acted at the Globe. In the latter we meet with no passage similar to what succeeds, but still the case with which it may be restored into blank-verse renders it almost certain that it was so originally. Pericles tells Simonides, in the novel that "His blood was yet untainted, but with the heat got by the wrong the king had offered him, and that he boldly durst and did defy none, his subjects, and the profound danger that such tyranny could inflict upon him." To leave out only two or three expletives renders the sentence perfect dramatic blank-verse:

"His blood was yet untainted, but with heat,
Got by the wrong the king had offered him;
And that he boldly durst and did defy him,
His subjects, and the profound danger that
Or tyranny or treason could inflict.""

Many other passages to the same end might be produced from the novel of which there is no trace in the play. We shall not, however, dwell further upon the point, than to mention a peculiarly Shakespearean expression, which occurs in the novel, and is omitted in the drama. When Lycurgus brings the new-born infant to Pericles, who in the printed play (Act iii. sc. 1) says to it,

"This is the rudest welcome to this world
That ever prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding a nativity
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make."

In the novel founded upon the play, the speech is thus given, and we have printed the expression, which, we think, must have come from the pen of Shakespeare, in italic type:

"Poor child of nature! (quoth he) thus art as rudely welcome to the world, as ever prince's babe was, and hast as chiding a nativity as fire, air, earth and water can afford thee."

The existence of such a singular production was not known to any of the commentators; but several copies of it have been preserved, and one of them was sold in the library of the late Mr. Heber. It will have been remarked, that the novel printed in 1688 states that "Pericles" had been "lately presented," and on the title-page of the edition of the play in 1609 it is termed "the late and much-admired Play called Pericles." It is, besides, spoken of as "a new play," in a poetical tract called "Finnicus or Run Red-Cap," printed in 1666. Another piece, called "Shore," is mentioned in "Finnicus," under exactly the same circumstances: the story of Duke Shore, and this, like "Pericles," had, in all probability, about the same date been revived at one of the theatres, with additions.

"Pericles" was five times printed before it was inserted in the folio of 1664, viz. in 1609, 1611, 1619, 1630, and 1635. The folio seems to have been copied from the last of these, with a multiplication of errors, but with some corrections. The first edition of 1609 was obviously brought out in haste, and there are many corruptions in it; but more pains were taken with it than Malone, Steevens, and others imagined: they never compared different copies of the same edition, or they would have seen that the impressions vary importantly, and that several mistakes, discovered as the play went through the press, were carefully set right: these will be found pointed out in our notes. The commentators dwelt upon the blunders of the old copies, in order to warrant their own extraordinary innovations; but wherever we could do so with due regard to the sense of the author we have restored the text to that of the earliest impression.

ACT. 1.

SCENE II. — The Island; before the cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the welkin's heat,1 Dashes the fire out. O! I have suffered
With those that I saw suffer: a brave vessel,
Who had no doubt some noble creatures2 in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O! the cry did knock Against my very heart. Poor souls, they perish'd.
Had I been any god of power, I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The rafting souls within her.

Pro. Be collected: No more amazement. Tell your piteous heart,
There's no harm done.

Mir. O, woe the day!

Pro. No harm.

I have done nothing but in care of thee,
(Of thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter!) who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am; nor that I am more better
Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

Mir. More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Pro. 'Tis time
I should inform thee farther. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garment from me.—So:

[ lays down his robe?

Lie there my art.—Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort.
The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd
The very virtu of compassion in thee,
I have with such provision3 in mine art
So safely order'd, that there is no soul—
No, not so much perdition as an hair,
Betid to any creature in the vessel
Which thou hadst cry, which thou sawst sink. Sit down;
For thou must now know farther.

Mir. You have often
Began to tell me what I am; but stopp'd,
And left me to a bootless inquisition;
Concluding, "Stay, not yet."

Pro. The hour's now come,
The very minute bids thee open thine ear;
Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember
A time before we came unto this cell? [Sits down.4
I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not
Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pro. By what? by any other house, or person?
Of any thing the image tell me, that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mir. 'Tis far off;
And rather like a dream, than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants. Had I not Four or five women once, that tended me?

Pro. Thou hastd, and more, Miranda. But how is it,

That thus lives in thy mind? What seemest thou else
In the dark backward and abyss of time?
If thou remember'st aught, ere thou cam'st here,
How thou cam'st here, thou may'st.

Mir. But that I do not.

Pro. Twelve years since, Miranda, twelve years since Thy father was the duke of Milan, and
A prince of power.

Mir. Sir, are not you my father?

Pro. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said — thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was duke of Milan, thou' his only heir
And princess, no worse issued.

Mir. O, the heavens!

What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessed was't, we did?

Pro. Both, both, my girl:
By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heav'd thence:
But blessedly loft hither.

Mir. O! my heart bleeds
To think o' the teen? that I have turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance. Please you, farther

Pro. My brother, and thy uncle, call'd Antonio.—
I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should
Be so peridious! — he whom, next thyself,
Of all the world I love'd, and to him put
The manage of my state; as, at that time,
Through all the signiories it was the first,
(And Prospero the prime duke, being so reputed
In dignity) and, for the liberal arts,
Without a parallel: those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rap't in secret studies. Why false uncle—
Dost thou attend me?

Mir. Sir, most heedfully.

Pro. Being once perfected how to grant suit,
How to deny them, whom all advance, and whom
To trash 5 for over-lopping, new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or chang'd them,
Or else new form'd them; having both the key
Of officer and office, set all hearts if the state
To what time pleas'd his ear; that now he was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suck'd my verdure out on't. Thou attend'st not Mir. O good sir! I do.

I pray thee, mark me.

I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which but by being so retired
O'er-priz'd all popular rate, in my false brother
Awak'd an evil nature: and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood, in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus loaded,5
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact,—like one,
Who having to untruth,6 by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie, — he did believe
He was indeed the duke: out of the substitution,
And executing th' outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative—hence his ambition
Growing—Dost thou hear?

Mir. Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

Pro. To have no screen between this part he play'd
And him he play'd it for, he needs will be

THE TEMPEST.

I prize above my dukedom
Mira. Would I might
But ever see that man!
Pro. Now I arise. — [Put's on his robe again]
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
Here in this island we arriv'd; and here
Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit
Than other princes' can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.
Mira. Heavens thank you for't! And now, I pray you, sir,
For still 'tis beating in my mind, your reason
For raising this sea-storm?
Pro. Know thus far forth.—
By accident most strange, bountiful fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore; and by my prescience
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star, whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Here cease more questions.
Thou art inclined to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way:—I know thou canst not choose.—
[MIRANDA sleeps.

Come away, servant, come! I am ready now.
Approach, my Ariel: come!

Enter Ariel.
Ari. All hail, great master; grave sir, hail. I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be 't to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl'd clouds: to thy strong bidding task
Ariel, and all his quality.

Pro. Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee?
Ari. To every article.
I boarded the king's ship: now on the beak,
Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd amazement: sometimes, I'd divide,
And burn in many places: on the topmast,
The yards and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meet, and join. Jove's lightnings, the precursors
O' the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary
And sight-ontrunning were not: the fire, and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring the most mighty Neptune
Seem to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dread trident shake.

Pro. My brave spirit!
Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?
Ari. Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad, and play'd
Some tricks of desperation. All, but mariners,
Plung'd in the foaming brine, and quit the vessel,
Then all a-fire with me: the king's son, Ferdinand.
With hair up-staring (then like reeds, not hair)
Was the first man that leap'd; cried, "Hell is empty
And all the devils are here."

Pro. Why, that's my spirit!
But was not this nigh shore?
Ari. Close by, my master.
Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe?
Ari. Not a hair perish'd;
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before; and, as thou bad'st me
In troops I have dispers'd them 'bout the isle.
The king's son have I landed by himself,
Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs
In an old angle of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.
Of the king's ship
The mariners, say, how thou hast disposed,
And all the rest o' the fleet?

Safely in harbour
is the king's ship: in the deep, where once
Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch me
From the still-Vex'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:
The mariners all under hatchets stow'd;
Whom, with a charm joined to their suffer'd labours,
i have left asleep; and for the rest o' the fleet
Which I dispers'd, they all have met again,
And all upon the Mediterranean float,
Bound sadly home for Naples,
Supposing that they saw the king's ship weed'd,
And his great person perish.

Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more work.
What is the time o' the day?

Past the mid season.

At least two glasses. The time 'twixt six and now
Must be spent most preciously.

Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains,
Let me remember thee what thou hast promise'd,
Which is not yet perform'd me.

How now! moody?

What is 't thou canst demand?

My liberty.

Before the time be out? no more.

I prithee
Remember, I have done thee worthy service;
Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakes, serv'd
Without or grudge, or grumblings. Thou didst promise
To bate me a full year.

Dost thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?

No.

Thou dost; and think'st it much, to tread the ooze
Of the salt deep,
To run upon the sharp wind of the north,
To do me business in the veins o' th' earth,
When it is bâk'd with frost.

I do not, sir.

Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who, with age and envy,
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?

No, sir.

Thou hast. Where was she born?

Speak; tell me.

Sir, in Argier.

O! was she so? I must,
Once in a month, recount what thou hast been,
Which thou forget'st. This damn'd witch, Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from Argier,
Thou know'st, was banish'd: for one thing she did,
They would not take her life. Is not this true?

Ay, sir.

This blue-eyed hag was lither brought with child,
And here was left by the sailors: thou, my slave
As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant:
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hosts, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rite
Imprison'd, thou didst painfully remain
A dozen years: within which space she died,
And left thee there, where thou didst vent thy groans
As fast as mill-wheels strike. Then was this island (Save for a son that she did litter here,
A freckled wisp, lag-born) not honour'd with
A human shape.

Yes; Caliban, her son.

Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban,
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did find thee in: thy groans
Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts
Of ever-angry bears. It was a torment
To lay upon the dam'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo: It was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine, and let thee out.

I thank thee, master.

If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Pardon, master:
I will be correspondent to command,
And do my spriting gently.

Do so, and after two days
I will discharge thee.

That's my noble master!

What shall I do? say what? what shall I do?

Go, make thyself a like nymph o' the sea: be subject
To no sight but thine and mine; invisible
To every eyeball, else. Go, take this shape,
And hither come in't; go; hence, with diligence.

[Exit Ariel.

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well;

Mira. The strangeness of your story put [Waking?]
Heaviness in me.

We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never Yields us kind answer.

'Tis a villain, sir,
I do not love to look on.

But, as 'tis,
We cannot miss him: he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood, and serves in offices
That profit us.—What ho! slave! Caliban!
Thou earth, thou! speak.

[Enter Caliban.

There's wood enough within.

Come forth, I say; there's other business for thee;
Come, thou torment! when?

Re-enter Ariel, like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel,
Hark in thine ear.

My lord, it shall be done. [Exit

Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself.

Upon thy wicked dam, come forth!

As wicked dow, as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen,
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er!

For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have crampes
Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up;—

For that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made 'em.

I must eat my dinner.

This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me. When thou camst here first,
Scene II.

The Tempest.

Thou strok'st me, and mad'st much of me; would'st give me
Water with berries in 't; and teach me how
To name the bigger light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I lov'd thee,
And show'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
The fresh springs, brine pits, barren place, and fertile.
Cursed be I that did so!—All the charms
Of Syracus, toads, beetles, bats, light on you;
For I am all the subjects that you have.
Which first was mine own king: and here you stye me,
In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me
The rest o' th' island.

Pro. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, not kindness. I have us'd thee,
Fifth as thou art, with human care: and lodg'd thee
In mine own cell; till thou didst seek to violate
The honour of my child.

Cal. O ho! O ho!—would it had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had peopled else
This isle with Calibans.

Pro. Abhorred slave,
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee.
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not savage,
Know thine own meaning, but wars't gallib like
A thing most brutal, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known: but thy vile race.
Thought thou didst learn, had that in't which good Nature could not abide to be with: therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin'd into this rock,
Who hadst deserv'd more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language: and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse. The red plague rid you,
For learning me your language!

Pro. Hag-seed, hence! [Exit Caliban.
Re-enter Ariel, invisible, playing and singing; Ferdinand following.

Ariel's Song.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Court'sied when you have, and kiss'd
The wild waves whist,
Foot it feathly here and there;
And, sweet sprites, the burden bear
Hark, hark!

Burden. Bow, wow.
The watch dogs bark:
Burden. Bow, wow.
Hark, hark!

The strain of strutting chanticlere
Wheep, cock-a-doodle-doo.

Fer. Where should this music be? 'tis th' air, or th' earth?

It sounds no more:—and sure, it waits upon
Some god o' th' isle. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury, and my passion,
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather:—but 'tis gone.—
No, it begins again.

Ariel sings.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes;
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange,
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:

[Burden: ding-dong]

Hark! now I hear them.—ding-dong, bell.

Fer. The ditty does remember my drown'd father—
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes:—I hear it now above me.

[Music above.

Pro. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance
And say, what thou seest yond?

Mira. What is 't? a spirit?

Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir,
It carries a brave form:—but 'tis a spirit.

Pro. No, wench: it eats, and sleeps, and hath such senses
As we have: such. This gallant, which thou seest,
Was in the wreck; and but he's something staint
With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou might'st call him
A goodly person. He hath lost his fellows,
And strays about to find 'em.

Mira. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pro. It goes on. I see,

[Aside. As you my soul prompts it:—Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free thee Within two days for this.

Fer. Most sure, the goddess [Seeing her]
On whom these airs attend!—Yon safe, my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island, [Kneels
And that you will some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!
If you be maid, or no?

Mira. No wonder, sir;—
But, certainly a maid.

Fer. My language! heavens!—Rises
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pro. How! the best?
What wert thou, if the king of Naples heard thee?

Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me,
And that he does I weep; myself am Naples;
Who with mine eyes, ne'er since at ebb, beheld
The king, my father, wreck'd.

Mira. Alack, for mercy!

Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the duke of Milan,
And his brave son, being twain.

Pro. The duke of Milan,
And his more braver daughter, could control thee,
If now 'twere fit to do it. [Aside] At the first sight
They have chang'd eyes:—delicate Ariel,
I'll set thee free for this!—[To him] A word, good sir.
I fear, you have done yourself some wrong: a word
Mira. Why speaks my father so urgently? This

1. f. e. have "him." 2. The old copies read: "Foot it feathly here and there, and sweet sprites bear the burden." 3. The MS. annotation of the fofo of 1632, indicates the absence of the phrase as it stands in the text. 4. Owls. 5. Not in f. e. 6. Not in f. e.
THE TEMPEST.

ACT II.

Is the third man that e'er I saw; the first
That e'er I sigh'd for. Pity move my father
To be inclin'd my way!

Fer. O! if a virgin.
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.

Pro. Soft, sir; one word more.—

[Aside.] They are both in either's powers: but this swift business
I must uncase make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light.—[To him.] One word more: I charge thee,
That thou attend me. Thou dost here usurp
The name thou owest not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.

Fer. No, as I am a man.
Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell within such a temple:
If the ill spirit have so fair a house,
Good things will strive to dwell with't.

Pro. Follow me.—[To Ferd.
Speak not you for him: he's a traitor.—Come.
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together;
Sea-water shalt thou drink, thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn eradiated. Follow.

Fer. No;
I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy has more power.

Mira. [He draws, and is charmed from moving.
O, dear father!
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle, and not fearful.

Pro. What! I say:
My foot my tutor?—Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who mak'st a show, but dar'st not strike, thy conscience
Is so possess'd with guilt: Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick,
And make thy weapon drop.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo,
Adrian, Francisco and Others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry: you have cause
(That soe we all) of joy, for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our hint of woe
Is common: every day, some sailor's wife,
The master of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe; but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then, wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

Alon. Pr'ythee, peace.

Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.

Ant. The visitor will not give him e'er so.

Seb. Look; he's winding up the watch of his wit:
By and by it will strike.

Gon. Sir.—
Seb. One:—tell.

Gon. When every grief is entertain'd, that's offer'd,
Comes to the enterainer—

Seb. A dollar.

Gon. Doloure comes to him, indeed: you have spoken
Truer than you purposed.

Mira. Beseech you, father!

Pro. Hence! hang not on my garments.

Mira. Sir, have pity
I'll be his surety.

Pro. Silence! one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What! An advocate for an impostor? hush!

Thou think'st there are no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban: foolish wench!

To the most of men this is a Caliban,
And they to him are angels.

Mira. My affections
Are then most humble: I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

Pro. Come on; obey:—[To Ferd.
Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
And have no vigour in them.

Fer. So they are:
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up,
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, nor this man's threats,
To whom I am debat'd, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o'th' earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Pro. It works.—Come on.—
Thou hast done well, fine Ariel!—Follow me.—

[To Ferd. and Mir.
Hark, what thou else shalt do me. [To Ariel

Mira. Be of comfort.

My father's of a better nature, sir,
Than he appears by speech: this is unwonted,
Which now came from him.

Pro. Thou shalt be as free
As mountain winds: but then, exactly do
All points of my command.

Ari. To the syllable.

Pro. Come, follow.—Speak not for him. [Exeunt

Seb. You have taken it wiselier than I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore, my lord,

Ant. Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue?

Alon. I pr'ythee, spare.

Gon. Well, I have done. But yet—

Seb. He will be talking.

Ant. Which, or he or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

Seb. The old cock.

Ant. The cockrel.

Seb. Done. The wager?

Ant. A laugh.

Seb. A match.

Adr. Though this island seem to be desert,—

Seb. Ha, ha, ha!

Ant. So, you're paid.

Adr. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible,—

Seb. Yet—

Adr. Yet—

Ant. He could not miss it.

Adr. It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench.
Seb. Ay, and a subtle, as he most learnedly delivered.

Adr. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had lungs, and rotten ones.

Or. At or 'twere perfumed by a fen.

Gon. Here is every thing advantageous to life.

True; save means to live.

Gon. That there's none, or little.

Seb. How lusty and lusty the grass looks! how green!

Ant. The ground, indeed, is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of green in 't.

Ant. He misses not much.

Seb. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rarity of it is, which is indeed almost yeond credit—

Seb. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, hold, notwithstanding, their freshness, and glosses; being rather new dyed, than stain'd with salt water.

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say, he lies?

Seb. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon. Methinks, our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

Seb. Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

Adr. Tunis was never grace before with such a paragon to their queen.

Gon. Not since widow Dido's time.

Ant. Widow? a pox o' that! How came that widow in? Widow Dido!

Seb. What if he had said, widowier Anness too? good lord, how you take it!

Adr. Widow Dido, said you! you make me study of that: she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

Adr. Carthage?

Gon. I assure you, Carthage.

Ant. His word is more than the miraculous harp.

Seb. He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

Ant. What impossible matter will he make easy next?

Seb. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

Adr. And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Gon. Ay?

Adr. Why, in good time.

Seb. Sir, we were talking, that our garments seem now as fresh, as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

Ant. And the rarest that e'er came there.

Seb. Bate, I beseech you, widow Dido.

Ant. O! widow Dido; ay, widow Dido.

Gon. Is not, sir, my doubt just as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.

Ant. That sort was well fish'd for.

Gon. When I wore it at your daughter's marriage?

Adr. You crâne these words into mine ears against he stomach of my sense. Would I had never Married my daughter there! for, coming thence, My son is lost; and, in my rate, she too, Who is so far from Italy remov'd, I ne'er again shall see her. O thou, mine heir Of Naples and of Milan! what strange fish Hath made his meal on thee?

1 Jutey. 2 Bright shade of color. 3 at: in e. 4 She'd: in f e. 5 it is; nation, would I answer Plato, that hath no kinds of traffike, no knowledge of Letters, no intelligence of numbers, no name of magistrate, nor of politicks supernaturals; no use of service, of riches or of poverty; no contracts, no successions, no dividend, no occupation but idle; no respect of kinred, but common, no apparence but natural, no murmuring of lands, no use of wine, corn, or mettle. The very that import lying, filthiness, treason, disquisitions, covetousnes, envy, distraction, and pardon, were never heard of amongst them—Montaigne, Florio's translation, 1603. 4 Piracy.
Ant. Long live Gonzalo!

Gon. And, do you mark me, sir?—

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you: so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given!

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are gentlemen of brave mettle; you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter ARIEL above; invisible, playing solemn music.

Seb. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not so angry.

Gon. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy?

Ant. Go sleep, and hear us.

| All sleep but ALON. SEB. and ANT. |

Alon. What! all so soon asleep? I wish mine eyes Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find, They are inclined to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir, Do not omit the heavy offer of it: It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth, It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord, Will guard your person while you take your rest, And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you. Wondrous heavy.—[Alon. sleeps.

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! It is the quality of the climate.

Alon. Why doth it not, then, our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.

Ant. Nor I: my spirits are nimble. They fell together all, as by consent; They dropp'd, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, Worthy Sebastian?—O! what might?—No more:— And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face, What thou shouldst be. Th' occasion speaks thee, and My strong imagination sees a crown Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What! art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and, surely, It is a sleepy language, and thou speakest Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say? This is a strange repose, to be asleep With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving, And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian, Thou le'st thy fortune sleep—die rather; wink'st Whilest thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost snore distinctly:

There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if need me; which to do, T'shles thee 'er.

Seb. Well; I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

---

Ant. If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish, Whiles thus you mock it! how, in stripping it, You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed, Most often do so near the bottom run By their own fear, or sloth.

Seb. Pr'ythee, say on.

The setting of thine eye, and cheek, proclaim A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed, Which throes thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir, Although this lord of weak remembrance, this (Who shall be of as little memory, When he is earth'd) hath here almost persuaded (For he's a spirit of persuasion, only Professes to persuade) the king, his son's alive, 'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd, As he that sleeps here, swims.

Seb. I have no hope

That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O! out of that no hope, What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high a hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond, But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Who's the next heir of Naples?

Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from Naples Can have no note, unless the sun were post, (The man if the moon's too slow) till new-born chins Be rough and razorable; she, for whom We all were sea-swallow'd, though some cast again: And by that destiny to perform an act Whereof what's past is prologue, what's to come, In yours and my discharge.

Seb. What staff is this!—How say you?

'Tis true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis; So is she heir of Naples; 'twixt which regions There is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit Seems to cry out, "How shall that Claribel Measure us back to Naples?"—Keep in Tunis, And let Sebastian wake!—Say, this were death That now hath seized them; why, they were no worse Than now they are. There be, that can rule Naples As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate As amply, and unnecessarily, As this Gonzalo; I myself could make A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore The mind that I do! what a sleep were this For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Seb. Methinks, I do.

Ant. And how does your content Tender your own good fortune?

Seb. I remember, You did supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. True: And look how well my garments sit upon me; Much feater than before. My brother's servants Were then my fellows, now they are my men.

Seb. But, for your conscience—

Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? if it were a kyte 'Twould put me to my slippers; but I feel not This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences, That stand 'twixt me and Milan, candied be they,
And yet I needs must curse; but they'll not pinch,
Fright me with archim shows, pitch me if the mire.
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but
For every trifle are they set upon me:
Sometimes like apes, that moe and chatter at me.
And after, bite me: then like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall: sometime am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.—Lo, now! lo!

Enter Trinculo.

Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
For bringing wood in slowly: I'll fall flat;
Perchance, he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing: I hear it sing 't the wind: yond' same black cloud, yond' huts one, looks like a foul bombard; that would shed liq-
"What have we here? [Seeing Caliban,] a man or a fish? Dead or alive?
A fish; he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell: a kind of, not of the newest, Poor-John.
A strange fish! Were I in England now, (as once I was) and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but who would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man: any strange beast there makes a man. When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Leg'd like a man! and his dus like arms! Warm, o' my troth! I do now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunder-bolt [Thunder.] Alas! the storm is come again: my best way is to creep under his garderobe; there is no other shelter hereabout: misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. I will here shroud, till the drench of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano, singing; a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die a-shore.—

This is a very sev'ry tune to sing at a man's funeral.

Well, here's my comfort. [Drinks]

The master, the swabber, the boatswain, and I,
The gunner, and his mate,
Lov'd Moll, Meg, and Mariam, and Margery,
But none of us car'd for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a long,
Would cry to a sailor, Go, hang:
She lov'd not the savour of tar, nor of pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where-e'er she did itch,
Then, to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

This is a sev'ry tune too; but here's my comfort. [Drinks]

Cal. Do not torment me: O!

Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here?
Do you put tricks upon us with savages, and men of Inde? Ha! I have not 'spear'd drowning, to be afraid now of your four legs; for it hath been said, as proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground, and it shall be said so again, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me: O!

Ste. This is some monster of the isle, with four legs who hath got, as I take it, an ague. Where the devi should he learn our language? I will give him some-relief, if it be but for that: if I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on neat's-leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, pray thee: I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now, and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him: he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways: open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you, eat. Open your mouth: this will shake your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again. [Caliban drinks!]

Trin. I should know that voice. It should be—but he is drowned, and these are devils. O, defend me!—

Ste. Four legs, and two voices! a most delicate monster. His forward voice, now, is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches, and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague. Come.—Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano!

Ste. Dost thy other mouth call me? Mercy! mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spone.

Trin. Stephano!—if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me, for I am Trinculo: be not afraid, thy good friend Stephano.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth. I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, indeed! How came'st thou to be the siege of this moon-calf? Can he vent Trinculos?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke.

—But art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now, thou art not drowned. Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaberline for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano! two Neapolitans 'scape?

Ste. Pr'ythee, do not turn me about: my stomach is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, an they be not sprites. That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor: I will kneel to him.

Ste. How didst thou 'scape? how came'st thou hither? swear by this bottle, how thou cam'st hither. I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved over-board, by this bottle! which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast a-shore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy true subject, for the liquor is not earthly. [Kneels.]

Ste. Here: swear, then, how thou escap'st.

Trin. Swam a-shore, man, like a duck: I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book. Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano! hast any more of this?

Ste. The whole butt, man: my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf! how does thine ague?

Cal. Hast thou not dropped from heaven?

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore thee: my mistress showed me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents. Swear.

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster.—I knew of him—a very weak monster.—The man in the moon!—a most poor credulous monster.

Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' the island; and I will kiss thy foot. I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster: when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot: I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on, then; down and swear.

[Caliban lies down.]

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most securvy monster: I could find in my heart to beat him, —

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. —But that the poor monster's in drink. An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries;

I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough. A plague upon the tyrant that I serve!

I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs grow; And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts; Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how To snare the nimble marmozet: I'll bring thee To clustering filberds, and sometimes I'll get thee Young scamels from the rock: Wilt thou go with me?

Ste. I pr'ythee now, lead the way, without any more talking.—Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here.—Here; bear my bottle.—Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again. Cal. Farewell, master; farewell, farewell. [Sings drunkenly]

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish;

Nor feath in firing

At requisiting;

Nor scrape trencher, nor wash dish;

'Ban 'Ban, Cu—Caliban,

Has a new master—Get a new man.

Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom! hey day, freedom!

Ste. O brave monster! lead the way. [Exeunt]
The mistress which I serve quickens what's dead, and makes my labours pleasures: O! she is Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbit:
And he's composed of harshness. I must remove
Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up,
Upon a sore injunction: my sweet mistress
Weeps when she sees me work: and says, such baseness
Had never like executor. I forget:
But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labours;
Most busy, blest 1 when I do it.

Enter MIRANDA; and PROSPERO behind.

Mira. Alas! now, pray you, work
Not so hard: I would, the lightning had Burnt up those logs that you are enjoin'd to pile.
Pray, set it down, and rest you: when this burns,
'Twill weep for having wearied you. My father
Is hard at study; pray now rest yourself:
He's safe for these three hours.

Fer. O, most dear mistress!
The sun will set, before I shall discharge
What I must strive to do.

Mira. If you'll sit down,
I'll bear your logs the while. Pray, give me that:
I'll carry it to the pile.

Fer. No, precious creature:
I had rather crack my sinews, break my back,
Than you should such dishonour undergo,
While I sit lazy by.

Mira. It would become me
As well as it does you; and I should do it
With much more ease, for my good will is to it,
And yours it is against.

Pro. Poor worm! thou art infected:
This visitation shows it.

[Mira aside.

Mira. You look wearily.

Fer. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with me,
When you are by at night. I do beseech you,
Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers,
What is your name?

Mira. Miranda.—O my father!
I have broke your hest to say so.

Fer. Adm't! Miranda!
Indeed, the top of admiration; worth
What's dearest to the world! Full many a lady
I have eye'd with best regard; and many a time
The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues
Have I liked several women: never any
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she ow'd,
And put it to the foil: but you, O you!
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best.

Mira. I do not know
One of my sex; no woman's face remember,
Save, from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen
More that I may call men, than you, good friend,
And my dear father. How features are abroad,
I am skillless of; but, by my modesty,
(The jewel in my dower) I would not wish
Any companion in the world but you;
Nor can imagination form a shape.
Besides yourself, to like of. But I prattle
Something too wildly, and my father's precepts
I therein do forget.

Fer. I am, in my condition,
A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king;
[I would, not so!] and would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than to suffer

The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak:
The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service; there resides,
To make me slave to it; and for your sake,
Am I this patient log-man.

Mira. Do you love me?

Fer. O heaven! O earth! bear witness to this sound
And crown what I profess with kind event,
If I speak true: if hollowly, invert
What best is boded me to mischief! I,
Beyond all limit of aught 2 else i' the world,
Do love, prize, honour you.

Mira. I am a fool,
To weep at what I am glad of.

Pro. Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections! Heavens rain grace
On that which breeds between them!

[Aside.]

Fer. Wherefore weep you?

Mira. At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer
What I desire to give; and much less take,
What I shall die to want. But this is trifling;
And all the more it seeks to hide itself,
The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cunning,
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!
I am your wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I'll die your maid; to be your fellow
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

Fer. My mistress, dearest,
And I thus humble ever.

[kneels.]

Mira. My husband then?

Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing
At bondage e'er of freedom: here's my hand.

Mira. And mine, with my heart in't: and now farewell,
Till half an hour hence.

Fer. A thousand thousand! [Exit Fer. and Mira.

Pro. So glad of this as they, I cannot be,
Who are surpris'd with all: but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book;
For yet, ere supper time, must I perform
Much business appertaining. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Island.

Enter STEPHANO and TRINCULO; CALIBAN following with a bottle

Ste. Tell not me: when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board 'em. Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster? the folly of this island!
They say, there's but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if the other two be brained like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee: thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.

Ste. My man-monster hath drowned his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me: I swam, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light. Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Ste. We'll not run, monsieur monster.

Trin. Nor go neither; but you'll lie, like dogs, and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-call, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-call.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shoe
THE TEMPEST.

Act III.

I'll not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignominy monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou daubed fish thou, was there ever man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrons lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mockes me! wilt thou let him, my lord?

Trin. Lord, quoth he!—that a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I pr'ythee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head: if you prove a mutineer, the next tree—The poor monster's my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be plac'd to hearten once again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I; kneel and repeat it: I will stand, and so shall Trinculo. [CALIBAN kneels.]

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant; a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me of the isle.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou; I would, my valiant master would destroy thee:

I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing. [Ceed.

Ste. Mum then, and no more.—[To CALIBAN.] Pro-

Cal. I say by sorcery he got this isle;

From me he got it: if thy greatness will,

Revenge it on him—for, I know, thou dar'st;

But this thing dare not.

Ste. That's most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

Ste. How, now, shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Ven, ven, my lord: I'll yield him thee asleep,

Where thou may'st knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not.

Cal. What a pedi' ninny's this! Thou scurv'y patch! I do beseech thee greatness, give him blows,

And take his bottle from him: when that's gone,

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show him Where the quick freshes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no farther danger: interrupt the monster one word farther, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Ste. Didst thou not say, he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? take thou that. [Strikes him.] As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie. Out o' your wits, and hearing too? A pox o' your bottle! this can sack, and drinking do. A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Ste. Ha, ha, ha!

Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee stand farther off.

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time,

I'll beat him too.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him I' the afternoon to sleep; then thou may'st brain him,

Having first seiz'd his books: or with a log

Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake,

Or cut his wazand with thy knife. Remember,

First to possess his books; for without them

He's but a soat, as I am, nor hath not

One spirit to command: they all do hate him,

As rootedly as I. Burn but his books;

He has brave utensils, (for so he calls them)

Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal:

And that most deeply to consider is

The beauty of his daughter; he himself

Calls her a nonpareil: I never saw a woman,

But only Sycorax my dam, and she;

But she as far surpasseth Sycorax,

As great'st does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant

And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be king and queen; (save our graces!) and Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroy's. Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee; but,

While thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep;

Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry; I am full of pleasure.

Let us be jocund: will you troll the catch

You taught me but while-ere?

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings.

Floot 'em, and scout 'em; and scout 'em, and floot 'em:

Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

[ARIEL plays a tune on a Tabor and Pipe.

Ste. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of No-body.

Ste. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness: if thou beest a devil, take't as thou list.

Trin. O, forgive me my sins!

Ste. He that dies, pays all debts: I defy thee.—

Mercy upon us!

Cal. Art thou afraid?

Ste. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not afraid; the isle is full of noises,

Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments

Will burn about mine ears; and sometimes voices,

That, if I thou had wak'd after long sleep,

Will make me sleep again: and then, in dreaming,

The clouds, methought, would open, and show riches Ready to drop upon me, that when I wak'd I cry'd to dream again.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where

I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroyed.

Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away: let's follow it, and after do our work.

Ste. Lead, monster; we'll follow—I would, I could see this taborer: he lays it on.

Trin. Wilt come? I'll follow, Stephano. [Exit.]
SCENE III.—Another part of the Island.

Federico Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adriano, Francisco, and Others.

Gon. By'r la'kin! I can go no farther, sir; my old bones ache: here's a maze trod, indeed. Through forth-rights, and meanders! by your patience, I needs must rest me.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee, who am myself attac'd with weariness, to the dulling of my spirits: sit down, and rest. Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it no longer for my flatterer: he is drown'd. Whom thus we stray to find; the sea mocks our frustrated search on land. Well, let him go.

Ant. I am right glad that he's out of hope.

[Aside to Sebastian]

Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose that you resolved to effect.

[Seb.]

Will we take thoroughly.

Ant. Let it be to-night.

For, now they are oppress'd with travail, they will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance, as when they are fresh.

Seb. I say, to-night: no more.

[Solemn and strange music; and Prospero above, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet: they dance about it with gentle actions of salutations; and, inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.]

Alon. What harmony is this? my good friends, hark! Marvellous sweet music! Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Seb. A living drollery. Now I will believe that there are unicorns; that in Arabia there is one tree, the phoenix' throne; one phoenix at this hour reigning there.

Ant. I'll believe both: and what does else want credit, come to me. And I'll be sworn 'tis true: travellers never did lie; though fools at home condemn them.

[Alon.]

If in Naples I should report this now, would they believe me? If I should say, I saw such islanders, (for, certes, these are people of the island) who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note, their manners are more gentle, kind, than of our human generation you shall find. Many, may, almost any.

Pro. [Aside.] Honest lord, thou hast said well; for some of you there present, are worse than devils.

Alon. I cannot too much muse, [ing such shapes, such gestures, such sounds,] although they want the use of tongue! a kind of excellent dumb discourse.

Pro. [Aside.] Praise in departing.

Fran. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since they have left their viands behind, for we have stomachs.

Will you taste of what is here?

Ant. Not I.

Gon. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys,

Who would believe that there were mountaineers dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at them. Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men, whose heads stood in their breasts? which now, we find, each puller-out of five for one will bring as good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to, and feed, although my last: no matter, since I feel the best is past.—Brother, my lord the duke, stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel, like a harpy, claps his wings upon the table, and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny (that hath to instrument this lower world, and what is in't) the never-surfaced sea hath caused to beliech, and on this island where man doth not inhabit; you, most men, being most unfit to live. I have made you mad. And even with such like valour men hang and drown their proper selves. You fools! and I and my fellows are ministers of fate: the elements, [Alon., Seb., &c., draw their Swords.]

Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well wound the loud winds, or with beno'ck'd-at stabs kill the still-closing waters, as diminish one dowel's that's in my planne: my fellow-ministers are like uninvulnerable. If you could hurt your swords are now too massy for your strengths, and will not be uplifted. But, remember, for that's my business to you, that you three from Milan did supplant good Prospero: expos'd unto the sea (which hath requit it) Him, and his innocent child: for which foul deed the powers, delaying not forgetting, have Incess'd the seas and shores, yet, all the creatures, against your peace. Thee, of thy son, Alonso, they have bereft; and do pronounce by me, lingering perdition (worse than any death) Can be at once) shall step by step attend you, and your ways; whose wrath's to guard you from (which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls Upon your heads) is nothing, but heart's sorrow, and a clear life ensuing. He vanishes in thunder: then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance with mock's and moves, and carry out the table.

Pro. [Above.] Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring. Of my instruction hast thou nothing hated, in what thou hast to say: so, with good life and observation strange, my meaner ministers Their several kinds have done. My high charms work and these, nine enemies, are all knit up in their directions: they now are in my power: and in these fits I leave them, while I wish Young Ferdinand, whom they suppose is drown'd) and his and my lord's darling. [Exit Prospero.]

Gon. If the name of something holy, sir, why stand you in this strange stare?

Alon. O, it is monstrous! monstrous! Methought, the billows spoke, and told me of it; the winds did sing it to me; and the thunder, that deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounc'd the name of Prosper: it did bare my trespass.
THE TEMPEST.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero’s Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Prospero. If I have too austernly punished you, Your compensation makes amends; for I Have given you here a thread of mine own life, Or that for which I live: whom once again I tender to thy hand. All thy vexations Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test: here, afores Heaven, I ratify this my rich gift! O Ferdinand! Do not smile at me that I bestow her off, For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise, And make it halt behind her.

Ferdinand. I do believe it, Against an oracle.

Prospero. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchase’st, take my daughter: but If thou dost break her virgin knot before All sanctimonious ceremonies may, With full and holy rite, be minister’d, No sweet aspersions shall the heavens let fall To make this contract grow; but barren hate, Sour-eyed disdain, and discord, shall bestrew The union of your bed with weeds so loathly, That you shall hate it both: therefore, take heed, As Hymen’s lamps shall light you.

Miranda. As I hope For quiet days, fair issue, and long life, With such love as ‘tis now, the greatest den, The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion Our worser genius can, shall never melt Mine honour into lust, to take away The edge of that day’s celebration, When I shall think, or Phoebus’ steeds are founder’d, Or night kept chain’d below.

Prospero. Fairly spoke.

Miranda. Sit then and talk with her; she is thine own. What, Ariel! my industrious servant Ariel!

Enter Ariel.

Ariel. What would my potent master? here I am.

Prospero. Thou and thy menors fellows your last service Did worthy perform, and I must use you In such another trick. Go, bring the rabble, O’er whom I give thee power, here, to this place: Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art; it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Ariel. Presently?

Prospero. Ay, with a twinkle.

Ariel. Before you can say, “Come,” and “go,” And breathe twice; and ery, “so so,” Each one, tripping on his toe, Will be here with mop and mop. Do you love me, master? no? 1

Like poison given to work a great time after, Now ‘gins to bite the spirits.—I do beseech you, That are of superfluous joints, follow them swiftly, And hinder them from what this ecstasy May now provoke them to.

Prospero. Dearly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach Till thou dost hear me call.

Ariel. Well I conceive. [Exit]

Prospero. Look, thou be true. Do not give dalliance Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw To the fire i’ the blood. Be more abstemious, Or else, good night, your vow.

Ferdinand. I warrant you, sir. The white-cold virgin snow upon my heart Abates the ardour of my liver.

Prospero. Well.—

Now come, my Ariel! bring a corollary, Rather than want a spirit: appear, and pertain— No tongue all eyes; be silent. [Soft music.

A Masque. Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats, and peas; Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep, And flat meads thatch’d with stover, ’tis for them to keep: Thy banks with pioned and tilled brims, Which spenzy April at thy hest betrims, To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy brown groves, Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves, Being less-lorn; thy pole-clip vineyard; And thy sea-marge, sterile, and rocky-hard, Where thou thyself dost air; the queen of the sky, Whose watery arch and messenger am I, Bids thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace, Here on this grass-plot, in this very place, [Juno descends slowly To come and sport. Her peacocks fly amain: Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Ceres. Hail, many-coloured messenger, that ne’er Dost disoblige the wife of Jupiter; Who with thy saffron wings upon my flowers Diffuseth honey-drops, refreshing showers; And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown My bosky acres, and my unshrubbed down, Rich scarf to my proud earth; why hath thy queen Summon’d me hither, to this short-graz’d green? Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate, And some donation freely to estate On the bless’d lovers.

Ceres. Tell me, heavenly bow. If Venus, or her son, as thou dost know, Do now attend the queen? since they did plot The means that dusky Dis my daughter got, Her and her blind boy’s scandal’d company I have forsworn.

Iris. Of her society Be not afraid: I met her deity Cutting the clouds towards Paphos, and her son Dove-drawn with her. Here thought they to have done Some wanton charm upon this man and maid,
SCENE I.

THE TEMPEST.

Whose vows are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymen’s torch be lighted; but in vain:
Mars’ hot minion is return’d again;
Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with sparrows,
And be a boy right out.

Cer. Highest queen of state,
Great Juno comes: I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Jun. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me,
To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be,
And honour’d in their issue.

SONG.

Juno Honour, riches, marriage, blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,
Hourly joys be still upon you!

Juno sings her blessings on you.

Earth’s increase, joison plenty,
Barns, and garner’s never empty;
Vines, with clus’ring bunches growing;
Plants, with goosebun bovying;
Rain* come to you, at the farthest,
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcity and want shall skim you:
Ceres’ blessing all is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold
To think these spirits?

Pso. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines call’d to enact
My present fancies.

Fer. Let me live here ever:
So rare a wonder’d father, and a wife,*
Makes this place Paradise.

Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.

Pro. Sweet now, silence!
Juno and Ceres whisper seriously;
There’s something else to do. Hush. and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr’d.

Iris. You nymphs, call’d Natoids, of the winding brooks,
With your sedge* crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command.

Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love: be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.

You sun-burn’d sickle-men, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow, and be merry.
Make holy-day: your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country foot.”

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof —

Pso. Pro. The song ends, and Pro. speaks; and Pro. takes off the dance, being over;
Whispers. — You have forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,
Against my life: the minute of their plot
Is almost come. — [To the Spirits.] Well done.

Avoid; — no more.

Fer. This is strange: your father’s in some passion
That works him strongly.

Mira. Never till this day,
Saw I him touch’d with anger so dismister’d.

Pro. You do look, my son, in a mov’d sort,
As if you were dismay’d: be cheerful, sir.
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,

As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air.
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp’d towers, the glorious palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep. — Sir, I am vex’d;
Bear with my weakness; my old brain is troubled:
Be not disturb’d with my infirmity.
If you be pleas’d retire into my cell,
And there repose: a turn or two I’ll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Fer. Mira. We wish your peace. [Exeunt

Pro. Come with a thought! — I thank thee. — Ariel come!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to. What’s thy pleasure?

Pro. Spirit,
We must prepare to meet with Caliban.

Ari. Ay, my commander: when I presented Ceres,
I thought to have told thee of it; but I fear’d
Lost I might anger thee.

Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?

Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinking
So full of valour, that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces: beat the ground
For kissing of their feet, yet always bending
Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor,
At which, like unback’d colts, they prick’d their ears.

Advanc’d their eye-lids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt music: so I charm’d their ears,
That, call-like, they my lowing follow’d, through Tooth’d briners, sharp furzes, prickling gorse, and thorns
Which enter’d their frail skins: at last I left them;
I the hilly mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to the chins, that the foul lake
O’erstunk their feet.

Pro. This was well done, my bird.

Thy shape invisible retain thou still:
The trumpery in my house, go, bring it hither,
For stale* to catch these thieves.

Ari. I go, I go. [Exit

Pro. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurtre never can stick; on whom my pains,
Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost;
And as with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind cankers. I will plague them all,

Re-enter Ariel, laden with glistening apparel, &c.

Even to roaring. — Come, hang them on this line.

Ariel hangs them on the line, and with Prospero remains unseen.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell.

Ste. Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harm less fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss, at which my nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you; look you,

Trin. Thou went but a lost monster.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy favour still.

Be patient, for the prize I’ll bring thee to
THE TEMPEST.

ACT V.

Shall hood-wink this mischance: therefore, speak softly;
All's hush'd as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool,— Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That's more to me than my wetting: yet this be your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o'er ears for my labour.

Cal. Pr'ythee, my king, be quiet. Seest thou here?
This is the mouth of the cell: no noise, and enter:
Do that good mischief, which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,
For aye thy foot-licker.

Ste. Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stephano!
look, what a wardrobe here is for thee!
[Seeing the apparel.]

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool: it is but trash.

Trin. O, lie, monster! we know what belongs to a trappery.—O king Stephano!

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo: by this hand, I'll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.

Cal. The dropsy down this fool! what do you mean,
To doat thus on such luggage? Let 't alone,
And do the murder first: if he awake,
From too to crown he'll fill our skins with pinches;
Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be ye quiet, monster.—Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line; now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin.

Trin. Do, do: we steal by line and level, and't like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that jest; here's a garment for't: wit shall not go unrewarded, while I am king of this country. "Steal by line and level," is an excelling pass of taste; there's another garment for't.

Trin. Monster, come; put some line upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on't: we shall lose our time.
And all be turn'd to barnacles, or to apes
With foreheads villainous low.

Ste. Monster, lay to your fingers: help to bear this away where my hogshead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom. Go to; carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

[A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in shape of hounds, and hunt them about: Prospero and Ariel setting them on.]

Pro. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pro. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark, hark!

[Cal., Ste., and Trin. are driven out.]

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorn up their sinews
With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make them,
Than pard, or cat o' mountain. [Cries and roaring]

Ari. Hark! they roar.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:
Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou
Shall have the air at freedom: for a little,
Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes; and Ariel.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head:
My charms crack not, my spirits obey, and time
Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day?

Ari. On the sixth hour: at which time, my lord,
You said our work should cease.

Pro. I did say so,
When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit,
How fares the king and his followers?

Ari. Confideth together
In the same fashion as you gave in charge:
Just as you left them: all prisoners, sir,
In the pine-grove which weather-tends your cell;
They cannot budge till your release. The king,
His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted,
And the remainder mourning over them.

Wreath-full of sorrow, and dismay; but chiefly
His tears run down his beard, like winter's drops
From eaves of reeds. Your charm so strongly works them.

That if you now behold them, your affections
Would become tender.

Pro. Doth thou think so, spirit?

Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human.

Pro. And mine shall.

Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions, and shall not myself,

One of their kind, that relish all as sharply,
Passion as they, be kindlier mov'd than thou art?
Thou' with their high wrongs I am struck to the quick.
Yet, with my nobler reason, 'gainst my fury
Do I take part. The rarer action is
In virtue, than in vengeance: they being penitent.
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frowner farther. Go; release them, Ariel.
My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.

Ari. I'll fetch them, sir [Exit

Pro. Ye clives of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves;

And ye, that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him,
When he comes back; you damny-puppets, that
By moonshine do the green-ward' ringlets make,
Whereof the eoe not bites; and you, whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms; that rejoice
To hear the solemn curlew; by whose aid
(Weak masters though ye be) I have be-dimm'd
The noontide sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
And 'twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault
Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt: the strong-bas'd promontory
Have I made shake; and by the spurs pluck'd up
The pine and cedar: graves, at my command,
Have waked their sleepers; oped, and let them forth
By my so potent art. But this rough magic
I hear a noise; and, when I have requir'd
Some heavenly music, (which even now I do)
To work mine end upon their senses, that
This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And, deeper than did ever plummet sound,
I'll drown my book. [Solemn music.
Re-enter Ariel: after him Alonso, with a frightful gesture, attended by Gonzalo: Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks.
A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains,
Now useless, boild within thy skull! There stand.
For you are spell-stopp'd.-
Noble Gonzalo, honourable man.
Mine eyes, even sociable to the flow of thine,
Fallellowly drops. -The charm dissolves apace;
And as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. -O good Gonzalo!
My true preserver, and a loyal servant!
To him thou follow'st, I will pay thy graces
Home, both in word and deed. -Most cruelly
Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter:
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act -
Thou'th'rinch'd for know, Sebastian. -Flesh and blood,
You brother mine, that entertain'd ambition,
Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian.
Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong
Would here have kill'd your king: I do forgive thee.
Unnatural though thou art. -Their understanding
Begins to swell, and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shores,
That now he soul and muddy. Not one of them.
That yet looks on me, e'er would know me. -Ariel.
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell; [Exit Ariel.
I will dis-case me, and myself present,
As I was sometime Milan. -Quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.
Ariel re-enters singing, and helps to attire Prospero.
Ari. Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
Into the coyness of her lie:
There I conk. When oaks do cry,
On the hat's back I do fly.
After summer, merrily,
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.
Pro. Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee:
But yet thou shalt have freedom: -so, so, so, -
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches; the master, and the boatswain.
Being awake, entertain them to this place,
And presently, I pr'ythee.
Ari. I drink the air before me, and return
Or e'er your pulse twice beat. [Exit Ariel.
Gon. All forment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabit here; some heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearful country!
Pros. [Attire as Duke] Behold, sir king,
The wronged duke of Milan, Prospero.
For more assurance that a living prince
Doth now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alo. Where thou beest he, or no,
Or some enchanted devil to abuse me,
As late I have been, I not know; thy pulse
Beats as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee.
Th' affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me. This must evade
(An if this be at all) a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign; and do entreat
Thou pardon me thy wrongs.—But how should Prospero
Be living, and be here?
Pros. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honour cannot
Be measur'd, or censur'd. Gonzalo,
Or be not, I'll not swear.

Pros. You do yet taste
Some subtleties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain.—Welcome, my friends all.
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
[Aside to Seb. and Ant.]
I here could pluck his highness' brown upon you.
And justify you traitors: at this time
I will tell no tales.

Seb. [Aside.] The devil speaks in him.

Pros. For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest faults; all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which, perforce, I know
Thou must restore.

Alo. If thou beest Prospero,
GIVE us particulars of thy preservation:
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Wore reck'd upon this shore: where I have lost, (How sharp the point of this remembrance is!)
My dear son Ferdinand.

Pros. I am woefully, sir.
Alo. Irreparable is the loss, and patience
Says it is past her cure.

Pros. I rather think,
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace,
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

Pros. You the like loss?
Pros. As great to me, as late: and, supportable -
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alo. A daughter?
O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddled in that oozy bed
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pros. In this last tempest, I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire,
That they devour their reason, and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth. their words
Are natural breath; but, howsoever you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were reck'd, was landed.
To be the lord on't. No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Revealing this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing;
At least, brine forth a wonder, to content ye.
As much as me my dukedom.
Prospero draws a curtain, and discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.
Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.
Fer. No, my dearest love,
I would not for the world.
Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,
And I would call it fair play.
Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son *
Shall I twice lose.
Sch. A most high miracle!
Fer. Though the seas threaten they are merciful:
I have cured them without cause.
[Knells to Alon.
Alon. Now, all the blessings
Of a kind godfather compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou canst here.
Mira. O, wonder!
How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O, brave new world,
That has such people in't!
Pro. 'Tis new to thee.
Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast at play?
Your old acquaintance cannot be three hours;
is she the goddess that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?
Fer. Sir, she is mortal;
But, by immortal providence; she's mine:
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown.
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life, and second father
This lady makes him to me.
Alon. I am hers,
But O! how oddly will it sound, that I
Must ask my child forgiveness.
Pro. There, sir, stop:
Let us not burden our remembrances
With a heaviness that's gone.
Gon. I have inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you gods.
And on this couple drop a blessed crown,
For it is you that have chalk'd forth the way,
Which brought us hither!
Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo.
Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O! rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars. In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis;
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom.
In a poor isle: and all of us, ourselves,
When no man was his own.
Alon. Give me your hands:
[To Fer. and Mir.
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you joy!
Gon. Be it so: Amen.
Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain.
amazingly following.
O look, sir! look, sir! here are more of us,
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown.—Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore?
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?
Boats. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our king, and company: the next, our ship,
Which but three glasses since we gave out split,
Is tight, and yare, and bravely rigg'd, as when
We first put out to sea.
Ari. Have I done since I went.
Pro. My tricksey spirit!
Ari. Alon. These are not natural events; they strengthen
From strange to stranger.—Say, how came you hither?
Boats. If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep,
And (how we know not) all clapp'd under hatchets.
Where, but even now, with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awak'd: straightway, at liberty:
Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good, and gallant ship; our master
Capering to eye her: on a truce, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither.
Ari. Was't well done?
Pro. Bravely, my diligence! Thou shalt
[Aside.
Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod;
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduced of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.
Pro. Sir, my liege,
Do not infest your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you  (Which to you shall seem probable) of every
These happen'd accidents; till when, be cheerful,
And think of each thing well.—Come hither, spirit
[Aside.
Set Caliban and his companions free;
Until the spell. [Ex. Ariel.] How farse my gracious sir!
There are yet missing of your company
Some few odd lads, that you remember not.
Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, in their stolen apparel.
Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself, for all is but fortune.—Coragio!
bully-monster, coragio!
Trim. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly eight.
Cal. O Setebos! these be brave spirits, indeed
How fine my master is! I am afraid
He will chastise me.
Sch. Ha, ha!
What things are these, my lord Antonio?
Will money buy them?
Ant. Very like: one of them is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.
Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords
Then say, if they be true.—This mis-shapen knave,
His mother was a witch; and one so strong
That could control the moor, make flies and eels,
And deal in her command with all her power.
These three have robb'd me; and this demi-devil
(For he's a bastard one) had plotted with them
To take my life; two of these fellows you Must know, and own; this thing of darkness i Acknowledge mine.
Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death
SCENE I.

THE TEMPEST.

Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?
Sch. He is drunk now: where had he wine?
Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where should they Find this great liquor that hath gilded 'em?
How came'st thou in this pickle?
Tri. I have been in such a pickle, since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing.
Sch. Why, how now, Stephano!
Ste. 'O! touch me not: I am not Stephano, but a cramp.
Pro. You'd be king of the isle, sirrah?
Ste. I should have been a sore one then.
Alon. This is as strange a thing as e'er I look'd on.
[Pointing to Caliban.
Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his manners,
As in his shape.—Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.
Cal. Ay, that I will: and I'll be wise hereafter,
And seek for grace. What a thrice-double ass
Was I, to take this drunkard for a god,
And worship this dull fool?
Pro. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.
Sch. Or stole it, rather. [Ex. Cal., Ste., and Tri
Pro. Sir, I invite your highness, and your train.
To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest
For this one night; which, part of it, I'll waste
With such discourse, as, I not doubt, shall make it
Go quick away; the story of my life,
And the particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle; and in the morn,
I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,
Where I have hope to see the nuptial
Of these our dear-beloved solemniz'd;
And thence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.
Alon. I long
To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.
Pro. I'll deliver all;
And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
And sail, so expeditious, that shall catch
Your royal fleet far off.—My Ariel;—chick,—
That is thy charge: then, to the elements;
Be free, and fare thou well!—Please you draw near

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by Prospero.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown,
And what strength I have's mine own;
Which is most faint; now, 'tis true,
I must be here confin'd by you,
Or sent to Naples. Let me not,
Since I have my dukedom got,
And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell
In this bare island, by your spell;
But release me from my hands,
With the help of your good hands.

Exeunt:

Gentle breath of yours my sails
Must fill, or else my project fails,
Which was to please. Now I want
Spirits to enforce, art to enchant;
And my ending is despair
Unless I be relief'd by prayer;
Which pierces so, that it assaults
Mercy itself, and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardon'd be,
Let your indulgence set me free.

[Exeunt Omnes]

Scene: sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan, and on the frontiers of Mantua.

ACT I.

Scene I.—An open place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus:
Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits.
Wor the not, affection chains thy tender days
To the sweet glances of thy honour'd love,
I rather would entreat thy company
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.
But since thou lovest, love still, and thrive therein,
Even as I would, when I to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou begone? Sweet Valentine, adieu.

Think on thy Proteus, when thou haply seest
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel:
Wish me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy bead's-man, Valentine.

Pro. Upon some book I love, I'll pray for thee.

Val. That's on some shallow story of deep love,
How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont.

Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love,
For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. 'Tis true; but thou art ever boots in love,
And yet you never swam the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots.

Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What?

Val. To be in love where scorn is bought with groans;
Coy looks, with heart-sore sighs; one fading moment's mirth.

With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights:
If haply won, a hapless gain;
If lost, wlt then a grievous labour won:

However, but a folly bought with wit,
Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance you call me fool.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I tear you'll prove

Pro. 'Tis love you cavil at: I am not love.

Val. Love is your master, for he masters you;
And he that is so yoked by a fool,
Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells, so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly; blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime,
And all the fair effects of future hopes.
But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee,
That art a votary to fond desire?
Once more adieu. My father at the road
Expecting my coming, there to see me shipp'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave
To Milan let me hear from thee by letters,
Of thy success in love, and what news else
Betideth here in absence of thy friend,
And I likewise will visit thee with mine.

Pro. All happiness bechance to thee in Milan.

Val. As much to you at home; and so, farewell. [Exeunt

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after love:
He leaves his friends to dignify them more:
I leave myself, my friends, and all for love.
Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time,
War with good counsel, set the world at nought,
Made wit with musing weak, heart sick with thought.

Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you. Saw you my master?
Pro. But now he parted hence to embark for Milan.

Speed Twenty to one, then, he is shipp'd already,
And I have play'd the sheep in losing him.

Pro. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray,
As if the shepherd be awhile away.

Speed. You conclude, that my master is a shepherd, then, and I a sheep?

Pro. I do.

Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether
I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep.

Pro. True, and thy master a shepherd.

Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another.

Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep.

Pro. The shepherd for fodder follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep; thou for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore, thou art a sheep.

Speed. Such another proof will make me cry "baw."

Pro. But dost thou hear? gay'st thou my letter to Julia?

Speed. Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons.

Speed. If the ground be overcharged'd, you were best stick her.

Pro. Nay, in that you are a stray, 't were best pound you for carrying your letter.

Pro. You mistake: I mean the pound, the pinfold.

Speed. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over,
T is threefold too little for carrying a letter to your lover.

Pro. But what said she? did she nod?

Speed. I. [Speed nods.]

Pro. Nod, I? why that's noddy. 3

Speed. You mistook, sir: I say she did nod, and you ask me, if she did nod? and I say I.

Pro. And that set together, is noddy.

Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it
'tgether, take it for your pains.

Pro. No, no; you shall have it for bearing the letter.

Speed. Well, I perceive I must be fain to bear with you.

Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?

Speed. Marry, sir, the letter very orderly; having nothing but the word noddy for my pains.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.

Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.

Pro. Come, come; open the matter in brief; what said she?

Speed. Open your purse, that the money, and the matter, may be both at once deliver'd.

Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains. What said she?

[Speed nods.

Pro. Speed. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.

Pro. Why? Couldst thou perceive so much from her?

Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her better.

No, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter;
And being so hard to that brought to her? your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling you her mind,

Give her no token but stones, for she's as hard as steel.

Speed. What! said she nothing?

Speed. No, not so much as—'Take this for thy pains.' To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testern'd me; in requital whereof, henceforth I carry your letters yourself. And so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.

[Exit]

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck.

Which cannot perish, having the board. 6

Being destin'd to a drier death on shore.

I must go send some better messenger;
I fear my Julia would not deign my lines.

Receiving them from such a worthless post. [Exit

SCENE II.—The Same. Julia's Garden.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say. Lucetta, now we are alone,
Wouldest thou, then, counsel me to fall in love?

Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not unheedfull
Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen,
That every day with parole encounter me.

In thy opinion which is worthiest love?

Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll show my mind,
According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour? 8

Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;
But, were I you, he never should be mine.

Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Merentio? 9

Luc. Well, of his wealth: but of himself, so, so.

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?

Luc. Lord, lord! to see what folly reigns in us!

Jul. How now? what means this passion at his name?

Luc. Pardon, dear madam: 't is a passing shame,
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus a loving gentleman.

Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?

Luc. Then thus,—of many good I think him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason:
I think him so, because I think him so.

Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?

Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why, he, of all the rest, hath never mov'd me.

Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.

Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.

Luc. Fire that's closest keep'd burns most of all.

Jul. They do not love, that do not show their love.

Luc. O! they love least, that let men know their love:

Jul. I would know his mind.

Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.

Luc. That the contents will show

Jul. Say, say, who gave it thee?

Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from Proteus.

He would have given it you, but I, being in the way,
Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault, I pray
Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker!

Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?

To whisper and conspire against my youth?

Now, trust me, 't is an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place.

There, take the paper: see if he return'd, [Gives it back.]

Or else return no more into my sight.

Luc. To plead for love deserves more feé than hate.

Jul. Will you be gone?

1 Most commentators make this mean, a dressed-up courtesan. Knight suggests that, (he being used in its primitive meaning of a thing that catches or seizes) it means caught sheep. 2 The old name for the knave or fool of a pack of cards. 3 Not in f. 4 to her not in f. 5 telling your mind: in f. 6 This speech is printed as prose in f. 7 A testern is a sixpence. 8 Not in f. 9
Exrunt: in f. 10 Mercatio: in f. e. 11 on lovely: in f. c. 12 Not in f. e.
That you may ruminate. [Exit.]

Jul. And yet, I would I had o’erlook’d the letter.

It were a shame to call her back again,
And pray her to a fault for which I chid her;
What tool is she, that knows I am a maid,
And would not force the letter to my view,
Since maids, in modesty, say "No,"
To that Which they would have the proflerer construe, "Ay."

Fie, fie! how tardy is this foolish love,
That like a testy babe will scratch the nurse,
And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod.

How curtly I chid Lucetta hence,
When willingly I would have had her here:
How angrily I taught my brow to crown,
When inward joy enforce’d my heart to smile.

My penance is to call Lucetta back,
And ask remission for my folly past.—
What ho! Lucetta:—

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. What would your ladyship?—

Jul. Is it near dinner-time?—

Luc. I would, it were;
That you might kill your stomach on your meat,
And not upon your maid.

[Looks at the letter, and takes it up again.]

Jul. What is ’t that you took up so gingerly?

Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why did you stoop, then?

Luc. To take a paper up That I let fall.

Jul. And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns,
Unless it have a false interpreter.

Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune,
Give me a note: your ladyship can set
Jul. As little by such tools as may be possible.

Best sing it to the tune of “Light o’ love.”

Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

Jul. Heavy? belike, it hath some burden then.

Luc. Ay; and melodious were it, would you sing it.

Jul. And why not you?

Luc. I cannot reach so high
Jul. Let’s see your song.—[Snatching the letter.]

How now, minion!—

Luc. Keep tune there still, so you will sing it out:
And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune.

Jul. You do not?

Luc. No, madam; it is too sharp.

Jul. You, minion, are too saucy.

Luc. Nay, now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descent:—

There wanteth but a mean’st to fill your song.

Jul. The mean is drown’d with your unruly base.

Luc. Indeed I bid the base for Proteus.

Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me.
Here is a coil with protestation:—

[Teares the letter, and throws it down.]

Go: get you gone, and let the papers lie:
You would be fingering them to anger me. [Exit.

Luc. She makes it strange, but she would be pleas’d to be so anger’d with another letter.]

Jul. Nay, would I were so anger’d with the same!
O hateful hands! to tear such loving words:
Injuruous wasps, to feed on such sweet honey,
And kill the bees that yield it with your stings!
I’ll kiss each several paper for amends.

Look, here is writ—“Kind Julia;—unkind Julia!”

As in revenge of thy ingratitude,
I throw thy name against the bruising stones,
Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.

And here is writ—“Love-wound Proteus,”—
Poor wounded name! my bosom, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal’d.

And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.

But twice, or thrice, was Proteus written down;

Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away,
Till I have found each letter in the letter,

Except mine own name; that some whirlwind bear
Unto a rugged, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea.

Lo! here in one line is his name twice writ,—
Poor forlorn Proteus; passionate Proteus.

To the sweet Julia:— ’tis that I’ll bear away;

And yet I will not, sith so prettily
He couples it to his complaining name.

Thus will I fold them one upon another:
Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you will.

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. Madam,

Dinner is ready, and your father stays.

Jul. Well, let us go.

Luc. What shall these papers lie like tell-tales here
Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.

Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down;
Yet here they shall not lie for catching cold.

Jul. I see, you have a mouth’s mind* unto them.

* Luc. Ay, madam, you may see what sights you think;
I see things too, although you judge I wink.

Jul. Come, come; will’t please you go? [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Antonio’s House.

Enter Antonio and Pamphilo.

Ant. Tell me, Pamphilo, what sad? talk was that Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?

Pamp. ’T was of his nephew Proteus, your son.
Ant. Why, what of him?

Pamp. He wonder’d, that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some, to discover islands far away;
Some, to the studious universities.
For any, or for all these exercises,
He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet,
And did request me to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age
In having known no travel in his youth.

Ant. Nor need’st thou much importune me to this.

Whereon this month I have been hammering.
I have consider’d, and his less of time,
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutored in the world:

Experience is by industry achiev’d,
And perfected by the swift course of time.

Then, tell me, whither were I best to send him?

Pamp. I think, your lordship is not ignorant
How his companion, youthful Valentine,

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove.

Val. Not mine; my gloves are on.

Speed. Why then this may be yours, for this is but one.

Val. Ha! let me see; ay, give it me, it’s mine.—

Sweet ornament that decks a thing divine!

Ah Silvia! Silvia!

Speed. Madam Silvia! madam Silvia!

Val. How now, sirrah?

Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.

Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?

Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.

Val. Well, you’ll still be too forward.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.

Val. Go to, sir. Tell me, do you know madam Silvia?

Speed. She that your worship loves?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed. Marry, by these special marks. First, you have learned, like sir Proteus, to wreath your arms, like a malcontent; to relish a love song, like a robin-red-breast; to walk alone, like one that hath the petition to sigh, like a schoolboy that hath lost his A B C; to weep, like a young wench that hath buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one

Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?

Pro. As one relying on your lordship’s will,

And not depending on his friendly wish.

Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.

Musie not that I thus suddenly proceed,

For what I will, I will, and there an end.

I am resolv’d, that thou shalt spend some time

With Valentine in the emperor’s court:

What maintenance he from his friends receives,

Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.

To-morrow be in readiness to go:

Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.

Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided:

Please you, deliberate a day or two.

Ant. Look, what thou want’st shall be sent after thee.

No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go.

Come on, Panthino: you shall be employ’d

To hasten on his expedition.

[Exit Antonio and Panthino.

Pro. Thus have I shunn’d the fire for fear of burning,

And drench’d me in the sea, where I am drown’d.

I fear’d to show my father Julia’s letter,

Lest he should take exceptions to my love:

And, with the vantage of mine own excuse,

Hath he excepted most against my love.

O! how this spring of love resembled

The uncertain glory of an April day,

Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,

And by and by a cloud takes all away.

Re-enter Panthino.

Ant. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you:

He is in haste; therefore, I pray you, go.

Pro. Why, this it is: my heart accords thereto,

And yet a thousand times it answers no. [Exit
Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like it?
Sil. Yes, yes: the lines are very quaintly writ,
But since unwillingly, take them again.
Nay, take them. [Giving it back
Val. Madam, they are for you.
Sil. Ay, ay; you writ them, sir, at my request,
But I will none of them; they are for you.
I would have had them writ more movingly.
Val. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.
Sil. And, when it's writ, for my sake read it over
And if it please you, so; if not, why, so.
Val. If it please me, madam; what then?
Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour:
And so good-morrow, servant. [Exit
Speed. O jest! unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple.

My master sues to her, and she hath taught her suitor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor.
O excellent device! was there ever heard a better.
That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?
Val. How now, sir! what, are you reasoning with yourself?
Speed. Nay, I was rhyming: 'tis you that have the reason.
Val. To do what?
Speed. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.
Val. To whom?
Speed. To yourself. Why, she wooed you by a figure.
Val. What figure?
Speed. By a letter, I should say.
Val. Why, she hath not writ to me?
Speed. What need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?
Val. No, believe me.
Speed. No believing you, indeed, sir: but did you perceive her earnest?
Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.
Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.
Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.
Speed. And that letter hath she deliver'd, and there and end.
Val. I would it were no worse!
Speed. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well:
For often have you writ to her, and she, in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply;
Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover,
Her self hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.—
All this I speak in print, for in print I found it.—
Why muse you, sir? 'tis dinner time.
Val. I have dined.
Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir: though the cameleon love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourish'd by my viuitals, and would fain have meat. O! be not like your mistress: be moved, be moved. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Verona. A Room in JULIA's House.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.
J ul. I must, where is no remedy.
Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.
J ul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner
Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.
Pro. Why then, we'll make exchange; here, take you this. [Exchange rings
J ul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

_Sir Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, and Speed._

_Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy; and when that hour o’er-slips me in the day, Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake, the next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me for my love’s forgetfulness._

_Thurio._ Nay, now, thou art with tears; and that tide will stay me longer than I should. [Exit Julia.]

_Pro._ Farewell,—What! gone without a word? Ay, true love should do; it cannot speak; for truth hath better deeds, than words, to grace it._

Enter Pantaloon.

_Pant._ Sir Proteus, you are stay’d for.

_Pro._ Go; I come, I come.—

_Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb._

Enter Launce, leading his Dog.

_Launce._ Nay, t’will be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault. I have received my proporcion, like the prodigious son, and am going with sir Proteus to the imperial’s court. I think Crab, my dog, be the sourest-natured dog that lives; my mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear. He is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog; a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my grandmother having no eyes, look her, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I’ll show you the manner of it. This shoe is my father;—no, this left shoe is my mother;—no, no, this left shoe is my mother.—nay, that cannot be so, neither.——yes, it is so, it is so; it hath the worser sole. This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father. A vengeance on’t! there ’tis: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wand; this hat is Nan, our maid: I am the dog;—no, the dog is himself, and I am the dog.—O! the dog is me, and I am myself: ay, so, so. Now come to my father: “Father, your blessing!” now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping: now should I kiss my father; woe, he weeps on. Now come to my mother, (O, that she could speak now!) like a wild woman;—well, I kiss her; why there ’tis: here ’s my mother’s breath, up and down. Now come to my sister; mark the moon she makes: now, the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word, but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter Pantaloon.

_Pant._ Launce, away, away, aboard: thy master is shipped, and thou art to post after with oars. What’s the matter? why weep’st thou, man? Away, ass; you’ll lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

_Launce._ It is no matter if the tide were lost; for it is the unkindest tied that ever any man tied.

_Pant._ What’s the unkindest tide?

_Launce._ Why, he that’s tied here: Crab, my dog.

_Pant._ Tut, man, I mean thou ’llost the flood; and, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master; and, in losing thy master, lose thy service; and, in losing thy service. Why dost thou stop my mouth?

_Launce._ For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

_Pant._ Where should I lose my tongue?

_Launce._ In thy tale.

_Pant._ In thy tail?

_Launce._ Lose the tied, and the voyage, and the master, and the service, and the tide. Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pant. _Come; come, away, man: I was sent to call thee._

_Launce._ Sir, call me what thou dar’st.

_Pant._ Will thou go?

_Launce._ Well, I will go. [Exit.

Enter Silvia, Proteus, Thurio, and Speed.

_Sil._ Sir Valentine, what’s the news?

_Prot._ Ay, boy, it’s for love.

_Sil._ Not of you.

_Prot._ Of my mistress, then.

_Speed._ ’T were good you knock’d him.

_Sil._ Servant, you are sad.

_Prot._ Indeed, madam, I seem so.

_Thur._ Seem you that you are not?

_Sil._ Haply, I do.

_Thur._ So do counterfeits.

_Sil._ So do you.

_Thur._ What seem I that I am not?

_Val._ Wise.

_Thur._ What instance of the contrary?

_Val._ Your folly.

_Thur._ And how quote you my folly?

_Val._ I quote it in your jerkin.

_Thur._ My jerkin is a doublet.

_Val._ Well, then, ’twill double your folly.

_Thur._ How?

_Sil._ What, angry, sir Thurio? do you change colour?

_Val._ Give him leave, madam: he is a kind of causeleon.

_Thur._ That hath more mind to feed on your blood than live in your air.

_Val._ You have said, sir.

_Thur._ Ay, sir, and done too, for this time.

_Val._ I know it well, sir: you always end ere you begin.

_Sil._ A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

_Val._ ’T is indeed, madam; we thank the giver.

_Sil._ Who is that, servant?

_Val._ Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship’s looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

_Val._ I know it well, sir: you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers; for it appears by their bare liveries, that they live by your bare words.

_Sil._ No more, gentlemen, no more. Here comes my father.

Enter the Duke.

_Duke._ Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset. Sir Valentine, your father’s in good health: What say you to a letter from your friends Of much good news? You are so welcome.

_Val._ My lord, I will be thankful.

_Duke._ To any happy messenger from hence.

_Val._ Know you Don Antonio, your countryman?

_Ay, my good lord; I know the gentleman._

_Duke._ To be of wealth, and worthy estimation, and not without desert so well reputed.
Duke. Hath he not a son?
Val. Ay, my good lord; a son, that well deserves
The honour and regard of such a father.
Duke. You know him well?
Val. I knew him, as myself; for from our infancy
We have convers'd, and spent our hours together:
And though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection,
Yet hath sir Protes, for that's his name,
Made use and fair advantage of his days:
His years but young, but his experience old;
His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe;
And in a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow)
He is complete in feature, and in mind,
With all good grace to grace a gentleman.
Duke. Beshrew me, sir, but, if he make this good,
He is as worthy for an empress' love.
As meet to be an emperor's counsellor,
Well, sir, this gentleman is come to me
With commendation from great potentates:
And here he means to spend his time a-while.
I think, 'tis no unwelcome news to you.
Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he.
Duke. Welcome him, then, according to his worth.
Silvia, I speak to you; and you, sir Thurio:
For Valentine. I need not 'cite him to it.
I'll send him hither to you presently. [Exit Duke.
Val. This is the gentleman, I told your ladyship,
Had along with me, but that his mistress
Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal looks.
Sil. Belike, that now she hath entranch'd them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty.
Val. Nay, sure, I think, she holds them prisoners still.
Sil. Nay, then he should be blind; and, being blind.
How could he see his way to seek you out?
Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes.
Thur. They say, that love hath not an eye at all.
Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself:
Upon a homely object love can wink.

Enter Proteus.

Sil. Have done, have done. Here comes the gentleman
Val. Welcome, dear Proteus!—Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favour.
Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from.
Val. Mistress, it is. Sweet lady, entertain him
To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.
Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.
Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant
To have a look of such a worthy mistress
Val. Leave off discourse of disability.—
Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.
Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.
Sil. And duty yet did never wait his need.
Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.
Pro. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself.
Sil. That you are welcome?
Pro. That you are worthless.

Re-enter Thurio.

Thur. Madam, my lord, your father, would speak with you.
Sil. I wait upon his pleasure: come, sir Thurio,
Go with me.—Once more, new servant, welcome:
I'll leave you to confer of home-affairs:
When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.
[Exeunt Silvia, Thurio, and Proteus.
Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?
Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.
Val. And how do yours?
Pro. I left them all in health.
Val. How does your lady, and how thrives your love?
Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you:
I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.
Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now:
I have done penance for contemning love;
Whose high impetuous thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter fasts, and penitent groans,
With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs;
For, in revenge of my contempt of love.
Love hath chas'd sleep from my enthrall'd eyes,
And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow
O, gentle Proteus! love's a mighty lord,
And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,
There is no voice to his correction,
Nor, to his service, no such joy on earth!
Now, no discourse, except it be of love;
Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,
Upon the very naked name of love.
Pro. Enough: I read your fortune in your eye.
Was this the idol that you worship so?
Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?
Pro. No, but she is an earthly paragon.
Val. Call her divine.
Pro. I will not flatter her.
Val. O! flatter me, for love delights in praises.
Pro. When I was sick you gave me bitter pills,
And I must minister the like to you.
Val. Then speak the truth by her: if not divine,
Yet let her be a principality,
Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.
Pro. Except my mistress.
Val. Sweet, except not any,
Except thou will except against my love.
Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?
Val. And I will help thee to prefer her, too:
She shall be dignified with this high honour,—
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss,
And, of so great a favour growing proud.
Disdain to root the summer-smelling flower,
And make rough winter everlasting.
Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?
Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can, is nothing
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing.
She is alone.
Pro. Then, let her alone.
Val. Not for the world. Why, man, she is mine own:
And I as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold
Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love.
My foolish rival, that her father likes
Only for his possessions are so huge,
Is gone with her along; and I must after,
For love, thou know'st is full of jealousy.
Pro. But she loves you?
Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd; nay, more, our marriage hour,
With all the cunning manner of our flight
Determined of: how I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords, and all the means
Plotted, and 'greed on for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.

Pro. Go on before; I shall enquire you forth.
I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessaries that I needs must use,
And then I 'll presently attend on you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will. [Exit Valentine.

Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it mine own, or Valentine's praise.
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me, reasonless, to reason thus?
She's fair, and so is Julia that I love. —
That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.
Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold.
And that I love him not, as I was wont.
O! but I love his lady too much:
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I dote on her with more advice,
That thus without advice begin to love her?
T is but her picture I have yet beheld.
And that hath dazzled so my reason's light;
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.
If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milian.
Launce. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this always—that a man is never undone, till he be hang'd; nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say, welcome.

Speed. Come on, you mad-cap, I 'll to the alehouse with you presently; where for one shot of five pence thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with madam Julia?
Launce. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Launce. No.

Speed. How then? Shall he marry her?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Launce. Marry, thus: when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou? I understand thee not.

Launce. What a block art thou, that thou canst not.

My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou say'st?

Launce. Ay, and what I do too: look thee; I 'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Launce. Why, stand-under and under-stand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will 't be a match?

Launce. Ask my dog: if he say, ay; it will: if he say, no; it will: if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is, then, that it will.

Launce. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how
So 'st thou, that my master is become a notable lover?

Launce. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

Launce. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistak'st me.

Launce. Why, fool, I meant not thee: I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Launce. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love, if thou wilt go with me to the ale-house: if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Launce. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the ale with a Christian. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service.

SCENE VI.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn;
And even that power, which gave me first my oath,
Proves me to this threefold perjury:
Love bad me swear, and love bids me forswear.

O sweet-suggesting love! if I have sin'd,
Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it,
At first I did adore a twining star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.
Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken,
And he who thinks, will that wants resolved will
To learn his wit to exchange the bad for better.
Fie, fie, unrevendere tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast prefer'd
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths.
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;
But there I leave to love, where I should love
Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose:
If I keep them. I needs must lose myself;
If I lose them, thou find I, by their loss,
For Valentine, myself; for Julia, Silvia.
I to myself am dearer than a friend,
For love is still most precious to itself;
And Silvia, (witnesse heaven that made her fair)
Shows Julia but a swarthly Ethiop.
I will forget that Julia is alive.
Remembering that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I 'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia, as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself
Without some treachery used to Valentine.
This night, he meaneth with a cased ladder
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window;
Myself in counsel, his competitor.
Now, presently I 'll give her father notice
Of their disguising, and pretended flight;
Who, all euraged, will banish Valentine,
For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter.
But, Valentine being gone, I 'll quickly cross
By some sly trick blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.
SCENE VII.—Verona. A Room in Julia’s House.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me:
And, even in kind love, I do conjure thee.
Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly character’d and engrav’d,
To lesson me; and tell me some good mean,
How, with my honour, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

Luc. Alas! the way is wearisome and long.

Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps.
Much less shall she, that hath love’s wings to fly;
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as sir Proteus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Proteus make return.

Jul. O! know’st thou not, his looks are my soul’s food?
Pity the death that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Then wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc. I do not seek to quench your love’s hot fire,
But qualify the fire’s extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou dam’st it up, the more it burns
The current, that with gentle murmurs glides,
Thou know’st, being stopp’d, impatiently doth rage;
But, when his fair course is not hindered.
He makes sweet music with the enamelled stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
And so by many winding nooks he strays
With willing sport to the wide’st ocean.
Then, let me go, and hinder not my course.
I’ll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And there I’ll rest, as, after much turmoil,
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc. But in what habit will you go along?

Jul. Not like a woman, for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men.
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may beseech some well-reputed page.

Luc. Why, then your ladyship must cut your hair.

Jul. No, girl; I’ll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots
To be fantastic, may become a youth
Of greater time than I shall show to be.

Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your breeches?

Jul. That fits as well, as—’tis tell me, good my lord.
What compass will you wear your farthingale?

Luc. You must needs have them with a codpiece, madam.

Jul. Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favoured.

Luc. A round hose, madam, now’s not worth a pin
Unless you have a codpiece to stick pins on.

Jul. Lucetta, as thou lov’st me, let me have
What thou think’st meet, and is most mannerly.
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unsta’d a journey?
I fear me, it will make me scandaliz’d.

Luc. If you think so, then stay at home, and go not
Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then never dream on infamy, but go,
If Proteus like your journey, when you come,
No matter who’s displeas’d, when you are gone.
I fear me, he will scarce be pleas’d withal.

Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear.
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,
And instances as infinite of love
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.

Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.

Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect;
But truer stars did govern Proteus’ birth:
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;
His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

Luc. Pray heaven, he prove so, when you come to him!

Jul. Now, as thou lov’st me, do him not that wrong.
To hear a hard opinion of his truth:
Only deserve my love by loving him,
And presently go with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my loving journey.
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose, my goods, my lands, my reputation;
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
Come; answer not, but to it presently:
I am impatient of my tarryance.

[Exit.

ACT III.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave. I pray, awhile:
We have some secrets to confer about.—Exit Thurio.

Now, tell me, Proteus, what’s your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover,
The law of friendship bids me to conceal;
But, when I call to mind your gracious favours
Done to me, undeserving as I am,
My duty pricks me on to utter that,
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.
Know, worthy Prince, sir Valentine, my friend,
This night intends to steal away your daughter:

Myself am one made privy to the plot.
I know you have determin’d to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And should she thus be stol’n away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus, for my duty’s sake, I rather chose
To cross my friend in his intended drift,

Beneath its necessary, to your timeless grave.

Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care.
Which to requite, command me while I live.

Thy love of theirs myself have often seen,
Happy, when they have judged me fast asleep,
And oftentimes have purposed to forbid
Sir Valentine her company, and my court;
But, tearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
(A rashness that I ever yet have shamed)
I gave him gentle looks: thereby to find
That which thyself hast now disclosed to me.
And, thou may'st perceive my fear of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower.
The key whereof myself have ever kept:
And thence she cannot be conveyed away.

Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devis'd a mean
How he her chamber-window will ascend.
And with a corded ladder fetch her down.
For which the youthful lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently,
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,
That my discovery be not aimed at;
For love of you, not hate unto my friend.

Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my lord: sir Valentine is coming. Enter VALENTINE, in his cloak.

Duke. Sir Valentine methinks is away so fast?

Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends.
And I am going to deliver them.

Duke. Be they of much import?

Val. The tenor of them doth but signify
My health, and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay, then no matter: stay with me awhile.
I am to break with thee of some affairs.
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend, sir Thurio, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match
Were rich and honourable: besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities
Bespeaking such a wife as your fair daughter.

Cannot your grace win her fancy to him?

Duke. No, trust me: she is peevish, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty;
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor fearing as if I were her father:
And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers
Upon advice hath drawn my love from her;
And, where I thought the remains of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty,
I now am full resol'd to take a wife.
And turn her out to who will take her in.
Then, let her beauty be her wedd'n dowry:
For me and my possessions she esteems not.

Val. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady in Milan here, Whom I affect; but she is nice, and coy.
And nought esteems my aged eloquence:
Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
(Err long ago have I forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is chang'd)
How, and which way, I may bestow myself,
To her, regarded in her sun-bright eye.
Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words.
Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words do move a woman's mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Val. A woman sometime scorner what best contents her.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  ACT III.

Thank me for this, more than for all the favours Which, all too much, I have bestow'd on thee: But if thou linger in my territories Longer than swiftest expedition Will give thee time to leave our royal court, By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love I ever bore my daughter, or thyself. Begone: I will not hear thy vain excuse; But, as thou lovest thy life, make speed from hence.

Val. And why not death, rather than living torment? To die, is not to be banish'd from myself. And Silvia is myself: banish'd from her, Is self from self; a deadly banishment. What light is light, if Silvia be not seen? What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by? Unless I be, to think that she is by, And feed upon the shadow of perfection. Except I be by Silvia in the night, There is no music in the nightingale; Unless I look on Silvia in the day, There is no day for me to look upon. She is my essence; and I leave to be, If I be not by her fair influence. Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom: Tarry I here, I but attend on death; But fly I hence, I fly away from life. [Exit Proteus and Launce.]

Pro. Run, boy: run, run, and seek him out. Launce. So-ho! so-ho! Pro. What seem thou? Launce. Him we go to find: there's not a hair on his head, but 'tis a Valentine. Pro. Valentine? Val. No. Pro. Who then? his spirit? Val. Neither. Pro. What then? Val. Nothing. Launce. Can nothing speak? master, shall I strike? Pro. Whom wouldst thou strike? Launce. Nothing. Pro. Villain, forbear. Launce. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing: I pray you,— Pro. Sirrah, I say, forbear.—Friend Valentine, a word. Val. My ears are stopp'd, and cannot hear good news, So much of bad already hath possess'd them. Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine. For they are harsh, untuneable, and bad. Val. Is Silvia dead? Pro. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia!— Hath she forsworn me? Pro. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me!— What is your news? Launce. Sir, there is a proclamation that you are vanish'd. Pro. That thou art banish'd: O! that is the news, From hence from Silvia, and from me, thy friend. Val. O! I have fed upon this woe already, And now excess of it will make me forslit. Hath Silvia know'd that I am banished? Pro. Ay, ay: and she hath offer'd to the doom, (Which, unresolv'd, stands in effectual force) A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears: Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd, With them, upon her knees, her humble self; Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became them, As if but now they waxed pale for woe: But neither bended knees, pure hands held up, Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears, Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire, But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die. Besides, her intercession chas'd him so, When she for thy repeal was suppliant, That to close prison he commanded her, With many bitter threats of 'biding there. Val. No more; unless the next word that thou spakest, Have some malignant power upon my life: If so, I pray thee, breathe it in my ear, As ending anthem of my endless doleour. Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help, And study help for that which thou lamentest. Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love; Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life. Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that, And manage it against despairing thoughts. Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love. The time now serves not to expostulate: Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate, And, ere I part with thee, confer at large Of all that may concern thy love affairs. As thou lovest Silvia, though not for thyself, Regard thy danger, and along with me. Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my boy, Bid him make haste, and meet me at the north-gate. Pro. Go, sirrah, find him out. Come, Valentine. Val. O my dear Silvia! hapless Valentine! [Exit Valentine and Proteus.]

Launce. I am but a fool, look you, and yet I have the wit to think, my master is a kind of a knave; but that's all one, if he be but one knave. He lives not now, that knows me to be in love: yet I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love; and yet 'tis a woman: but what woman, I will not tell myself; and yet 't is a milkmaid; yet 't is not a maid, for she hath had gossips: yet 't is a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages. She hath more qualities than a water-sparrow, which is much in a bare Christian. Here is the cat-log [pulling out a paper] of her conditions. Improvisi, “She can fetch and carry.” Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore, is she better than a jade. Item, “She can milk!” look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

SCENE II.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Speed. Come, fool, come: try me in thy paper.
Launce. There, and saint Nicholas be thy speed!
Speed. Imprimis, "She can milk."
Launce. Ay, that she can.
Speed. Item. "She brews good ale."
Launce. And thereof comes the proverb.—Blessing of your heart, you brew good ale.
Speed. Item. "She can wash and sew."
Launce. That's as much as to say, Can she so?
Speed. Item. "She can knit."
Launce. What need a man care for a stock with a wrench, when she can knit him a stock?
Speed. Item. "She can wash and scour."
Launce. A special virtue; for then she need not be washed, and scoured.
Speed. Item. "She can spin."
Launce. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.
Speed. Item. "She hath many nameless virtues."
Launce. That's as much as to say, bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.
Speed. Here follow her vices.
Launce. Close at the heels of her virtues.
Speed. Item. "She is not to be kissed fasting, in respect of her breath."
Launce. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast. Read on.
Speed. Item. "She hath a sweet mouth."
Launce. That makes amends for her sour breath.
Speed. Item. "She doth talk in her sleep."
Launce. It's no matter for that, so she slip not in her talk.
Speed. Item. "She is slow in words."
Launce. O villain! that set this down among her vices? To be slow in words is a woman's only virtue:
I pray thee, out with it, and place it for her chief virtue.
Speed. Item. "She is proud."
Launce. Out with that too: it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be ta'en from her.
Speed. Item. "She hath no teeth."
Launce. I care not for that neither, because I love crusts.
Speed. Item. "She is curt."
Launce. Well; the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.
Speed. Item. "She will often praise her liquor."
Launce. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.
Speed. Item. "She is too liberal."
Launce. Of her tongue she cannot, for that's writ down she is slow of: of her purse she shall not, for that I'll keep shut: now, of another thing she may, and that cannot I help. Well, proceed.
Speed. Item. "She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults."
Launce. Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article.
Rehearse that once more.
Speed. Item. "She hath more hair than wit."
Launce. More hair than wit,—it may be; I'll prove it: the cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt: the hair, that covers the wit, is more than the wit, for the greater hides the less.
What's next?
Speed. "And more faults than hairs."
Launce. That's monstrous: O, that that were out!
Speed. "And more wealth than faults."
Launce. Why, that word makes the faults gracious.

SCENE II.—The Same. An Apartment in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke and Thurio.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love you
Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.
Thu. Since his exile she hath despis'd me most:
Forsworn my company, and raill'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her.
Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form.
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.—

Enter Proteus.

How now, sir Proteus! Is your countryman,
According to our proclamation, gone?
Pro. Gone, my good lord.
Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously.
Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.
Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.
Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee,
(For thou hast shown sure sign of good desert)
Makes me the better to confer with thee.
Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace.
Let me not live to look upon your grace.
Duke. Thou know'st how willingly I would effect
The match between sir Thurio and my daughter.
Pro. I do, my lord.
Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant
How she opposes him against my will.
Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here
Duke. Ay, and perversely she persists so.
What might we do to make the girl forget
The love of Valentine, and love sir Thurio?
Pro. The best way is, to slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent;
Three things that women highly hold in hate.
Duke. Ay, but she'll think that it is spoke in hate.
Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it:
Therefore, it must, with circumstance, be spoken
By one whom she esteemeth as his friend.
Duke. Then, you must undertake to slander him.
Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loth to do:
'T is an ill office for a gentleman,
Especially, against his very friend.
Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage him
Your slander never can endanger him:
Therefore, the office is indifferent,
Being entrusted to it by your friend.
Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord. If I can do it.
By aught that I can speak in his displeasure,
She shall not long continue love to him. But say, this went her love from Valentine. It follows not that she will love sir Thurio.

This. Therefore, as you unwind her love from him, Lost it should ravel and be good to none. You must provide to bottom it on me; Which must be done, by praising me as much As you in worth dispraise sir Valentine. Duke. And, Proteus, we dare trust you in this kind, Because we know, on Valentine’s report, You are already love’s firm votary, And cannot soon revolt, and change your mind. Upon this warrant shall you have access Where you with Silvia may confer at large: For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholy. And for your friend’s sake will be glad of you, When you may temper her, by your persuasion, To hate young Valentine, and love my friend.

Pro. As much as I can do I will effect. But you, sir Thurio, are not sharp enough; You must lay time to tangle her desires By waryl sonnets, whose composed rhymes Should be full fraught with serviceable vows. Duke. Ay, much is the force of heaven-bred poesy.

Pro. Say, that upon the altar of her beauty You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart Write, till your ink be dry, and with your tears Moist it again; and frame some feeling line, That may discover strict integrity: For Orpheus’ lute was strung with poets’ sinews, Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones, Make tigers tame, and huge leviathans Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands. After your dire-lamenting elegies, Visit by night your lady’s chamber window With some sweet consort to their instruments Tune a depleting dump; the night in dead silence Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. This, or else nothing, will inherit her.

Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in love. Thu. And thy advice this night I’ll put in practice Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction giver, Let us into the city presently, To sort some gentlemen well-skill’d in music. I have a sonnet that will serve the turn To give the onset to thy good advice. Duke. About it, gentlemen.

Pro. We’ll wait upon your grace till after supper, And afterward determine our proceedings. Duke. Even now about it: I will pardon you. [Exeunt

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — A Forest, between Milan and Verona.

Enter certain Outlaws.

1 Out. Fellows, stand fast: I see a passenger.

2 Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with them.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

3 Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about you:

If not, we’ll make you sit, and rifle you.

Speed. Sir, we are undone. These are the villains That all the travellers do fear so much.

Vol. My friends,—

1 Out. That’s not so, sir: we are your enemies.

2 Out. Peace! we’ll hear him.

3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we; for he is a proper man.

Vol. Then know, that I have little wealth to lose.

A man I am cross’d with adversity: My riches are these poor habiliments. Of which if you should here disturb me, You take the sum and substance that I have.

2 Out. Whither travel you?

Vol. To Verona.

1 Out. Whence came you?

Vol. From Milan.

3 Out. Have you long sojourn’d there?

Vol. Some sixteen months; and longer might have stayed.

It crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

2 Out. What! were you banish’d thence?

Vol. I was.

2 Out. For what offence?

Vol. For that which now torments me to rehearse. I kill’d a man, whose death I much repent; But yet I slew him manfully, in fight.

Without false vantage, or base treachery.

1 Out. Why, ne’er repent it, if it were done so.

But were you banish’d for so small a fault?

Vol. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

1 Out. Have you the tongues?

Vol. My youthful travel therein made me happy.

Or else I had been often miserable.

3 Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood’s fat friar, This fellow were a king for our wild faction.

1 Out. We’ll have him.

Sirs, a word.

Speed. Master, be one of them: It is an honourable kind of thievery.

Vol. Peace, villain!

2 Out. Tell us this: have you any thing to take to?

Vol. Nothing, but my fortune.

3 Out. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen, Such as the fury of ungovern’d youth

Thrust from the company of awful men: Myself was from Verona banish’d, For practising to steal away a lady,

An heir, and near allied unto the duke.

2 Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman, Who, in my mood, I stabb’d unto the heart.

1 Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these. But to the purpose; for we cite our faults, That they may hold excus’d our lawless lives:

And, partly, seeing you are beautify’d With goodly shape; and by your own report A linguist, and a man of such perfection, As we do in our quality much want:—

3 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish’d man, Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you.

Are you content to be our general?

To make a virtue of necessity, And live, as we do, in this wilderness?

[consort.

3 Out. What say’st thou? wilt thou be of our Say, ay, and be the captain of us all.

We’ll do thee homage, and be rul’d by thee,

Love thee as our commander, and our king.

1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest:

2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer’d.
SCENE II.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Vol. I take your offer, and will live with you; Provided that you do no outrages
On silly women, or poor passengers.
3 Out. No; we desist such vile, base practices.
Come, go with us: we'll bring thee to our cave; And show thee all the treasure we have got,
Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose.

SCENE II.—Milan. The Court of the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine,
And now I must be as unjust to Thurio.
Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer;
But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend;
When to her beauty I commend my vows,
She bids me think how I have been foresworn,
In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd:
And, notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spianel-like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still.
But here comes Thurio. Now must we to her window,
And give some evening music to her ear.

Enter Thurio, and Musicians.

Thur. How now, sir Proteus! are you crept before us?

Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio; for, you know, that love
Will creep in service where it cannot go.

Thur. Ay: but I hope, sir, that you love not here.

Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be hence.

Thur. Whom? Silvia?

Pro. Ay, Silvia,—for your sake.

Thur. I thank you for your own. Now, gentlemen,
Let's tune, and to it lustily awhile.

Enter Host and Julia (in boy's clothes), behind.

Host. Now, my young guest; methinks you're allycholy: I pray you, why is it?

Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.

Host. Come, we'll have you merry. I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentlemen that you ask'd for.

Jul. But shall I hear him speak?

Host. Ay, that you shall.

Jul. That will be music.

[Music plays.

Host. Hark! Hark!

Jul. Is he among these?

Host. Ay; but peace! let's hear 'em.

SONG.

Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise as free;
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.

Is she kind, as she is fair,
For beauty lives with kindness
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness;
And, being help'd, inhabits there.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing,
Upon the dull earth dwelling:
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you sadder than you were-before? How do you, man? the music likes you not

Jul. You mistake: the musician likes me not.

Host. Why, my pretty youth?

Jul. He plays false, father.

Host. How? out of tune on the strings?

Jul. Not so; but yet so false, that he grieves my very heart-strings.

Host. You have a quick ear.

Jul. Ay; I would I were deaf! it makes me have a slow heart.

Host. I perceive, you delight not in music.

Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so.

Host. Hark! what fine change is in the music.

Jul. Ay, that change is the spite.

Host. You would not have them always play but one thing?

Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.

But, Host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on,
Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me, he lov'd her out of all nick.

Jul. Where is Launce?

Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Pro. Sir Thurio, fear you not: I will so please,
That you shall say my ensuing drift excels.

Thur. Where meet we?

Pro. At St. Gregory's well.

Thur. Farewell. [Exeunt Thurio and Musicians.

Enter Silvia above, at her window.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.

Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen.

Who is that, that spake?

Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth,
You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.

Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.

Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.

Sil. What is your will?

Pro. That I may compass yours.

Sil. You have your wish: my will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed.

Thou subtle, perjur'd, false, disloyal man!

Think'st thou, I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flatter,
That hast deceit'd so many with thy vows?
Return, return, and make thy love amends.

For me, by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit,
And by and by intend to chide myself,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady,
But she is dead.

Jul. [Aside.] 'T were false, if I should speak it;
For, I am sure, she is not buried.

Sil. Say, that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Survives, to whom thyself art witness
I am betroth'd; and art thou not asham'd
To wrong him with thy importunity?

Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.

Sil. And so, suppose, am I; for in his grave,
Assure thyself, my love is buried.

Pro. Sweet lady, let me take it from the earth.

Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her's thence
Or, at the least, in her sepulchre thine.

Jul. [Aside.] He heard not that.
Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate, Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love, The picture that is hanging in your chamber: To that I'll speak, and to that I'll sigh and weep; For, since the substance of your perfect self Is else devoted, I am but a shadow: And to your shadow will I make true love.

Jul. [Aside] If 't were a substance, you would, sure, deceive it, And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loth to be your idol, sir, But, since your falsehood, 't shall become you well To worship shadows, and adore false shapes, Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it. And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches have o'er night, That wait for execution in the morn. [Exeunt Proteus and Silvia.

Jul. Host, will you go? Host. By my halidom, I was fast asleep.

Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night That ever I watch'd, and the most heaviest. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that madam Silvia Entreated me to call, and know her mind. There's some great matter she'd employ me in.— Madam, madam!

Egl. Who calls?

Sil. Your servant, and your friend: One that attends your ladyship's command.

Egl. You are Eglamour, a thousand times good morrow. Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself. According to your ladyship's impose, I am thus early come, to know what service It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman, Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not. Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplish'd. Thou art not ignorant what dear good will I bear unto the banish'd Valentine; Nor how my father would enforce me marry Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhors. Thyself last lov'd; and I have heard thee say, No grief did ever come so near thy heart, As when thy lady and thy true love died, Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity. Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine, To Mauna, where, I hear, he makes abode; And, for the ways are dangerous to pass, I do desire thy worthy company, Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour, But think upon my grief, a lady's grief; And on the justice of my flying hence, To keep me from a most unholy match. Which heaven and fortune still reward with plagues. I do desire thee, even from a heart As full of sorrows as the sea of sands, To bear me company, and go with me: If not, to hide what I have said to thee, That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam. I pity much your grievances, And the most true affections that you bear;* Which since I know they virtually are plac'd, I give consent to go along with you; Recking as little what betideth me, As much I wish all good felicitation. When will you go?

Sil. This evening coming.

Egl. Where shall I meet you?

Sil. At friar Patrick's cell.

Where I intend holy confession. Egl. I will not fail your ladyship. Good morrow Gentle lady.

Sil. Good morrow, kind sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same.

Enter Laurence with his dog.

Laun. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it. I have taught him, even as one would say precisely, thus I would teach a dog. I was sent to deliver him as a present to mistress Silvia from my master, and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber, but he steps to me her trencher, and steals her capon's leg. O! 'tis a foul thing, when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies. I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily, he had been hang'd for 't; sure as I live, he had suffer'd for 't. You shall judge. He thrust me himself into the company of three or four gentlemen-like dogs under the duke's table; he had not been there (bless the mark) a pissing while, but all the chamber smelt him. "Out with the dog!" says one; "what cur is that?" says another; "whip him out," says the third; "hang him up," says the duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: "Friend," quoth I; "do you mean to whip the dog?" "Ay, marry, do I," quoth he. "You do him the more wrong," quoth I; "'t was I did the thing you wot of." He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for his servant? Nay, I'll be sworn I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed: I have stood on the pillory for geese he hath kill'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for 't: thou think'st not of this now. Nay, I remember the trick you served me, when I took my leave of madam Silvia. Did not I bid thee still mark me, and do as I do? When didst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale? Didst thou ever see me do such a trick? [Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well, And will employ thee in some service presently. Jul. In what you please: I will do what I can.

Pro. I hope thou wilt. —Now, now, you whore'son peasant! Where have you been these two days loitering? Laurence. Marry, sir, I carried mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.

Pro. And what says she to my little jewel? Laurence. Marry, she says, your dog was a cur; and tells you, currish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she receiv'd my dog? Laurence. No, indeed, did she not. Here have I brought him back again.

* From the Saxon haligdome, holy place or kingdom. * Injunction. * Compassionate. * This line is not in f. o.
Pro. What! didst thou offer her this eur1 from me?
Lau. Ay, sir: the other squirrel was stolen from me by a hangman boy2 in the market-place; and then I off'rd her my own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.
Pro. Go; get thee hence, and find my dog again.
Or never return again into my sight.
Away, I say! Stayest thou to vex me here?
A slave that still an end3 turns me to shame.
[Exit Launce.
Sebastian. I have entertained thee,
Partly, that I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business,
For't is no trusting to yond foolish lowt;
But, chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour,
Which (if my augury deceive me not)
Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:
Therefore, know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently, and take this ring with thee.
Deliver it to madam Silvia.
She lov'd me well deliver'd it to me.
Jul. It seems, you lov'd not her, to leave her token.
She's dead, belike?
Pro. Not so: I think, she lives.
Jul. Alas!
Pro. Why dost thou cry alas?
Jul. I cannot choose but pity her.
Pro. Wherefore should'st thou pity her?
Jul. Because, methinks, that she lov'd you as well
As you do love your lady Silvia.
She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;
You dote on her, that cares not for your love.
'Tis pity, love should be so contrary,
And thinking on it makes me cry alas!
Pro. Well, give to her that ring; and therewithal
This letter:—that's her chamber.—Tell my lady claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, hie home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary.
[Exit.
Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs.
Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him,
That with his very heart despiesth me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me,
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will,
And now an I (unhappy messenger!)4
To plead for that which I would not obtain:
To carry that which I would have refused;
To praise his faith which I would have disprais'd.
I am my master's true confirmed love,
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false traitor to myself.
Yet will I woo for him; but yet so coldly,
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.
[Enter Silvia, attended.
Gentlewoman, good day. I pray you, be my mean
To bring me where to speak with madam Silvia.
Sil. What would you with her, if that I be she?
Jul. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.
Sil. From whom?
Jul. From my master, sir Proteus, madam.
Sil. O! he sends you for a picture.
Jul. Ay, madam.
Sil. Ursula, bring my picture there. [A Picture brought.
Go, give your master this: tell him from me,

---

1 Not in f. o. 2 the hangman’s boys: in f. o. 3 Continually 4 Not in f. o. 5 In good earnest.
And yet the painter flatter'd her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow:
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig.
Her eyes are green as grass,^1 and so are mine:
Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high.
What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself,
If this fond love were not a blinded god?

Come, shadow come, and take this shadow up,
For 'tis thy rival. O thou senseless form!
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statue in thy stead.
I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake,
That ne'er'd me so; or else, by Jove I vow,
I should have scratch'd out your unsheen eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee.

[Exit]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. An Abbey.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky,
And now it is about the very hour,
That Silvia at friar Patrick's cell should meet me.
She will not fail; for lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time,
So much they spur their expedition.

Enter Silvia.

See, where she comes.—Lady, a happy evening.
Sil. Amen, amen. Go on, good Eglamour,
Out at the postern by the abbey-wall.
I fear, I am attended by some spies.

Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off;
If we recover that, we are sure enough.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Thuria, Proteus, and Julia.

Thu. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?
Pro. O, sir! I find her milder than she was;
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

Thu. What! that my leg is too long?
Pro. No, that it is too little.

Thu. I'll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder.
Jul. But love will not he spur'd so to what it loaths.

[Aside.

Thu. What says she to my face?
Pro. She says it is a fair one.

Thu. Nay, then the wanton lies: my face is black.
Pro. But pearls are fair, and the old saying is,
Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies' eyes.

Jul. 'Tis true, such pearls as put out ladies' eyes:
For I had rather wink than look on them.

[Aside.

Thu. How likes she my discourse?
Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.

Thu. But well, when I discourse of love and peace.
Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.

[Aside.

Thu. What says she to my valour?
Pro. O, sir! she makes no doubt of that.

Jul. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.

[Aside.

Thu. What says she to my birth?
Pro. That you are well deriv'd,
Jul. True; from a gentleman to a fool.

[Aside.

Thu. Considers she my large possessions?
Pro. O! ay, and pities them.

Thu. Wherefore?

Jul. That such an ass should owe them.

[Aside.

Pro. That they are out by lease
Jul. Here comes the duke.

Duke. How now, sir Proteus! how now, Thuria!

Which of you saw sir? Eglamour of late?

Thu. Not I.

Pro. Nor I.

Duke. Saw you my daughter?

Pro. Neither.

Duke. Why, then
She's fled unto that peasant Valentine.
And Eglamour is in her company.
'Tis true: for friar Lawrence met them both,
As he in penance wander'd through the forest.
He knew well; and guess'd that it was she,
But, being mask'd, she was not of her:
Besides, she did intend confusion.
At Patrick's cell this even, and there she was not.
These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence:
Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,
But mount you presently: and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain-foot,
That leads towards Mantua, whither they are fled.
Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me.

[Exit in haste.

Thu. Why, this it is to be a peevish girl,
That flies her fortune when it follows her.
I'll after, more to be reveng'd on Eglamour,
Than for the love of reckless Silvia.

[Exit.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love.
Than hate of Eglamour that goes with her.
[Exit.

Jul. And I will follow, more to cross that love,
Than hate for Silvia that is gone for love.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter Silvia, and Outlaws.

1 Out. Come, come; be patient, we must bring you to our captain.

[Drumming her in.

Sil. A thousand more mishances than this one
Have I learn'd me how to brook this patiently.

2 Out. Come, bring her away.

1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

3 Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun us;
But Moysey, and Valerius, follow him.
Go thou with her to the west end of the wood:
There is our captain. We'll follow him that's fled
The thicket is best; he cannot escape.

1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave
Fear not: he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine! this I endure for thee.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man!
These shadowy, desert,^4 unfrequented woods,
I better brook than nourishing peopled towns.
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O! thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion too long tenantless.
Least, growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was!
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia!
Thou gentle nymph, cherish th'forlorn swain! —
What halloing, and what stir, is this to-day? [Shouts?
These my rude mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.
They love me well; yet I have much to do,
To keep them from uncivil outrages.
Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's this comes here?
[Withdraws.

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service having done for you,
(Though you respect not as you serve to your pavilion)
To hazard life, and rescue you from him,
That would have forc'd your honour and your love;
Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look.
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val. How like a dream is this, I see and hear!
Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile.
[Aside.
Sil. O, miserable! unhappy that I am!
Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But by my coming I have made you happy.
Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.
Jul. And me, when he approacheth at my presence.
[Aside.

Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.
O, heaven! be judge, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul;
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I do detest false, perjur'd Proteus:
Therefore be gone: solace me no more.
Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look.
O! 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot love where they're belov'd.
Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's belov'd.
Read o'er Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury to love me,
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou dost two,
And that's far worse than one: better have none
Than plural faith, which is too much by one.
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend!
Pro. In love
ho respects friend?
Sil. All men but Proteus.
Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arm's end,
And love you 'gainst the nature of love: force you.
Sil. O heaven!
Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val. [Coming forward.] Ruflian, let go that rude ness mine evil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion!
Pro. Valentine!
Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or

(For such is a friend now) traitorous man!
Thou hast beguil'd my hopes; nought but mine eye
Could have persuaded me. Now dared I to say,
I have one friend alive, thou would'st disprove me
Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus,
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wound is deep.'tis mine accurs!
'Mongst all my foes, a friend should be the worst!
Pro. My shame and desperate guilt at once found me.
Forgive me, Valentine. If hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender 't here: I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.

Val. Then, I am paid:
And once again I do receive thee honest.
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pleased:
By penitence th' Eternal's wrath's appeas'd,
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee.
Jul. O me unhappy!
Pro. Look to the boy.
Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now! what's the matter! look up; speak.
Jul. O good sir! my master charg'd me to deliver a ring to madam Silvia, which, out of my neglect, was never done.
Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Jul. Here 'tis: this is it. [Gives a ring
Pro. How! let me see.
This is the ring I gave to Julia.
Jul. O! cry you mercy, sir; I have mistook:
This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [Shakes another ring
Pro. But, how cam'st thou by this ring?
At my depart I gave this unto Julia.
Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.
Pro. How? Julia!
Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart:
How oft hast thou with perjury eft or the root!
O Proteus! let this habit make thee blush:
Be thou ashamed, that I have took upon me
Such an indissoluble; if shame live
In a disguise of love.
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes, than men their minds.
Pro. Than men their minds: 'tis true. O heaven!
were man
But constant, he were perfect: that one error sins
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all the Inconstancy falls off, ere it begins.
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's, with a constant eye?
Val. Come, come, a hand from either.
Let me be blest to make this happy close:
'T were pity two such friends should be long foes.
Pro. Bear witness, heaven, I have my wish for eve
Jul. And I mine.
[Enter Outlaws, with Duke and Tazio.
Out. A prize! a prize! a prize!
Val. Forbear: I forbear, I say: it is my lord the duke. —
Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd, Banished Valentine.

1 ring. 2 Not in f.e. 3 are my mates: in f.e. 4 Steps aside: in f.e. 5 I have: in f.e. 6 f.e. have a period. 7 f.e. have a semi-colon. 8 proved. 9 Not in f.e. 10 that in f.e. 11 My shame and guilt confounded: in f.e
Duke. Sir Valentine!

Thu. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia’s mine.

Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death.

Come not within the measure of my wrath;
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milano shall not hold thee. Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch.
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I.

I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress’ love.
Know then, I here forget all former grieves,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unrival’d merit,
To which I thus subscribe.—Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well deriv’d:
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserv’d her.

Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy.

I now beseech you, for your daughter’s sake,
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

Duke. I grant it for thine own, what’er it be.

Val. These banish’d men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall’d from their exile.
They are reformed, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

Duke. Thou hast prevail’d; I pardon them, and these Dispose of them, as thou know’st their deserts.
Come; let us go: we will conclude all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Val. And as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile.
What think you of this stripling page, my lord?

Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him: he blushes.

Val. I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy.

Duke. What mean you by that saying, Valentine?

Val. Please you, I’ll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned.—
Come, Proteus; ’tis your penance, but to hear
The story of your love’s discoverer:
Our day of marriage shall be yours no less:
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

ACT I

Enter Justice Shallow, Slenor, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it: if he were twice Sir John Falstaff, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Slen. In the county of Glosfer, justice of peace, and coroner.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slenor, and cust-olorum.

Slen. Ay, and rotolorum too; and a gentleman born master parson; who writes himself armigero; in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigero.

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

Slen. All his successors, come before him, have done it, and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white laces in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Eva. The dozen white laces do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

Shal. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Slen. I may quarter, coz?

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Eva. It is marring, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Eva. Yes, per-lady: if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures. But that is all one: if Sir John Falstaff have committed disprageries unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.

Shal. The council shall hear it: it is a riot.

Eva. It is not meet the council hear a riot; there is no fear of Got in a riot. The council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; take your vizzaments in that.

1 A title by which the erry were ordinarily addressed. 3 The old name for a pike—an allusion to the coat of arms of the Page's three lases.
Enter Page,

Page. I am glad to see your worships well. I thank you for your venison, master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you; much good do it your good heart. I wished your venison better, it was ill kill'd.—How doth good mistress Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, ha; with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good master Slender.

Slen. How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was outrun on Cosolds. 2

Page. It could not be judged, sir.

Slen. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. That he will not.—'tis your fault, 'tis your fault.—'T is a good dog.

Page. A cur, sir.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog; can there be more said? he is good, and fair. Is sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. It is spoke as a Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confess'd, it is not redress'd: is not that so, master Page? He hath wrong'd me; indeed, he hath;—at a word, he hath;—believe me.—Robert Shallow, saith he is wrong'd.

Page. Here comes sir John.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, master Shallow; you'll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my acre, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kiss'd your keeper's daughter.

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answered.

Fal. I will answer it straight.—I have done all this.—That is now answered.

Shal. The counsell shall know this.

Fal. 'T were better for you, if it were known in counsel: you'll be laughed at.

Eva. Pauca verba, sir John: good worts.

Fal. Good worts? good cabbages.—Slender, I broke your head: what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your coney-eating rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drunk, and afterwards picked my pocket.

Bard. You Banbury cheese.*

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus?

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! pauca, pauca; slice! that's my humour.

Shen. Where's Simple, my man?—can you tell cousin?

Eva. Peace! I pray you. Now let us understand; there is three umpires in this matter, as I understand; that is—master Page, fidelicet, master Page; and there is myself, fidelicet, myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Carter.

Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Fery good: I will make a priet of it in my note-book: and we will afterwards 'bor with your cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol!

Pist. He hears with ears.

Eva. 'Tis the devil and his tam! what phrase is this? He hears with ear?  2 Why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he; (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else) of seven groats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovels, 6 that cost me two shilling and two pence a-piece of Yed Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Eva. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John and master mine, I combat challenge of this latter bilbo.  6

Word of denial in thy labras 2 here:

Word of denial; froth and scum. thou liest.

Slen. By these gloves, then 't was he.

Nym. Be advised, sir, and pass good humours. I will say,  1 marry trap,  2 with you, if you run the nuthook's  2 humour on me; that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then he in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you,Scarlet and John?  9

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Eva. It is his five senses: fie, what the ignorance is! Bard. And being top,  8 sir, was, as they say, cashier'd; and so conclusions pass'd the carriers.  11

Slen. Ay, you speak in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter. I'll ne'er be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk. I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Eva. So God judge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen: you hear it.

Enter Anne Page with wine; and Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Page. Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink within.

[Exit Anne Page.

Eva. Oh heaven! this is mistress Anne Page.

[Following and looking after her.

Page. How now, mistress Ford!

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress. [Kissing her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome.—Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

[Exeunt all but Shallow, Slender, and Evans.

Slen. I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of songs and sonnets here.—

Enter Simple.

How now, Simple! Where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the book of riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Book of riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shorteake upon Althallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?

Scene III.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Skal. Come, coz; come, coz; we stay for you. A word with you, coz; marry, this, coz: there is, as 't were, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by sir Hugh here: do you understand me?

Slen. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable: if it be so, I shall do that that is reason.

Skal. Nay, but understand me.

Slen. So I do, sir.

Ev. Give ear to his motions, master Slender. I will eschew the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says. I pray you, pardon me; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.

Ev. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.

Skal. Ay, there's the point, sir.

Ev. Marry, is it, the very point of it; to mistress Anne Page.

Slen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

Ev. But can you affection the 'oman? Let us demand to know that of your mouth, or of your lips: for divers philosophers hold, that the lips is purcel of the mouth: therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

Skal. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Slen. I hope, sir, I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason.

Ev. Nay, Caius's lords and his ladies, you must speak possible, if you can carry her your desires towards her.

Skal. That you must. Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?

Slen. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.

Skal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet coz: what I do, is to pleasure you, coz. Can you love the maid?

Slen. I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married, and have more occasion to know one another. I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt: but if you say, "marry her," I will marry her; that I am freely dissolved, and disolution.

Ev. It is a fery discrition answer: save, the fault is in the 'ort dissolute: the 'ort is, according to our meaning, resolutely.—His meaning is good.

Skal. Ay, I think my cousin meant well.

Slen. Ay, or else I might be hanged, la.

Re-enter Anne Page.

Skal. Here comes fair mistress Anne.—Would I were young, for your sake, mistress Anne!

Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company.

Skal. I will wait on him, fair mistress Anne.

Ev. Od's pleased will I will not be absent at the grace.

[Exeunt Shallow and Evans.]

Anne. Will you please your worship to come in, sir?

Slen. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well.

Anne. The dinner attends you, sir.

Slen. I am not a-hungry, I thank you, forsooth. Go, sirrah, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my cousin Shallow. [Exeunt Simple.] A justice of peace sometime may be beholding to his friend for a man.—I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead; but what though? yet I live like a poor gentleman born.

Anne. I may not go in without your worship: they will not sit, till you come.

Slen. I' faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did.

Anne. I pray you, sir, walk in.

Slen. I had rather walk here, I thank you. I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, (three venyes for a dish of stewed prunes) and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears i' the town?

Anne. I think, there are, sir: I heard them talked of.

Slen. I love the sport well: but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man in England. You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?

Anne. Ay, indeed, sir.

Slen. That's meat and drink to me, now: I have seen Sackerson's loose, twenty times, and have taken him by the chain: but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it pass'd: but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill-favoured rough things.

Re-enter Page.

Page. Come, gentle master Slender, come; we stay for you.

Slen. I' ll eat nothing, I thank you, sir.

Page. By cock and phe, you shall not choose, sir. Come, come.

Slen. Nay; pray you, lead the way.

Slen. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.

Anne. Not I, sir; pray you, keep on.

Slen. Truly, I will not go first: truly, la, I will not do you that wrong.

Anne. I pray you, sir.

Slen. I' ll rather be unmannerly, than troublesome.

You do yourself wrong, indeed, la. [Exeunt.]

Scene II.—The Same.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Ev. Go your ways, and ask of doctor Caius' house, which is the way; and there dwells one mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Sim. Well, sir.

Ev. Nay, it is better yet.—Give her this letter; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance with mistress Anne Page: and the letter is, to desire and request her to solicit your master's desires to mistress Anne Page: I pray you, be gone. I will make an end of my dinner: there's pippins and cheese to come. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter!

Host. What says my bully-rook⁴? Speak scholarly, and wisely.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Discard, bully Herencles; cashier: let them wag: trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pounds a-week.

Host. Thou'rt an emperor, Caesar, Keiser, and Pheazar. I will entertain Bardolph: he shall draw, he shall tap: said I well, bully Hector?

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host. I have spoke: let him follow.—Let me see thee froth, and mine! I am at a word: follow. [Exit Host.
Fal. Bardolph, follow him. A tapster is a good trade; an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered servingman, a fresh tapster. Go; adieu.

Bard. It is a life that I have desired. I will thrive.

Pist. O base Gongarian! what will thou the spigot wield?

Nym. He was gotten in drink; is not the humour deceit? His mind is not heroic, and there's the humour of it.

Fal. I am glad I am so aocrat of this tinder-box: his thefts were too open: his jilching was like an unskillful singer, he kept not time.

Nym. The good humour is to steal at aminimum's rest.

Pist. Convey the wise it call. Steal! fools! a lie for the phrase!

Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.

Pist. Why then, let kibes ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy: I must coney-eatch, I must shift.

Pist. Young ravens must have food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?

Pist. I ken the wight: he is of substance good.

Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards, and more.

Fal. No quips now, Pistol. Indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift. Briefly, do mean to make love to Ford's wife: I spy entertainment in her; she discourses. She craves,* she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be Englished rightly, is, "I am sir John Falstaff's."

Pist. He hath studied her will, and translated her well*; out of honesty into English.

Nym. The anchor is deep: will that humour pass?

Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; he hath a legion of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain, and "To her, boy," say I.

Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her; and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with most judicious oillucks: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.

Nym. I thank thee for that humour.

Fal. O! she did so course o'er my exterior with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to search me up like a burning glass. Here's another letter to her; she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana, all gold and beauty. I will be cheater* to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me: they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Ge, bear thou this letter to mistress Page; and thou this to mistress Ford. We will thrive, lads; we will thrive.

Pist. Shall I say Pandarus or Troy become,
And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all!

Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour-lurer. I will keep the 'haviour of reputation.

Fal. Hold, sirrah, [to Robin] bear you these letters tightly:

Sail like my pinnace* to these golden shores.—
Rogues, hence! av'nt! vanish like hallucines, go; Trudge, plod away o' the hook; seek shelter, paek! Falstaff will learn the humour* of the age,
French thrift, you rogues: myself, and skirted page.

[Exit Falstaff and Robin.

Pist. Let vultures gripe thy guts! for gourd, and fullam holds,
And high and low* beguile the rich and poor.
Tested? I'll have in pouch, when thou shalt lack.

Base Phrygian Turk,
[venge
Nym. I have operations, which be humours of re-

Pist. Will thou revenge?

Nym. By welkin, and her stars.13

Pist. With wit, or steel?

Nym. With both the humours, I.

I will discern the humour of this love to Page.14

Pist. And I to Ford!* shall eke unfold,
How Falstaff, varlet vile.

His dove will prove, his gold will hold,
And his soft couch defile.

Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incense Page to deal with poison: I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of mine is dangerous: that is my true humour.

Pist. Thou art the Mars of malcontents: I second thee; troop on.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Dr. Caius's House.

Enter Mrs. QUICKL, SIMPLE, and JOHN RUGBY.

Quick. What, John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master, master doctar Caius, coming: if he do, t' faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience, and the king's English.

Rug. I'll go watch. [Exit Rugby.

Quick. Go: and we'll have a posset for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire.—An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer: he is something peevish that way, but no body but has his fault: but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And master Slender's your master?

Sim. Ay, forsooth.

Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a grover's paring-knife?

Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard: a Cain-coloured beard.17

Quick. A softly-sprighted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, forsooth; but he is as tall* a man of his hands, as any is between this and his head: he hath fought with a varrecr.

Quick. How say you?—O! I should remember him: does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Re-enter Rugby, running.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.

SCENE IV.

Quick. We shall all be silent. Run in here, good young man; go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] He will not stay long. What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I say!—Go, John, go inquire for my master; [Exit Rugby.] I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not home:—"and down, down, adown-a," &c. [Sings.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. vat is you sing? I do not like dese toys. I pray you, go and vetch me in my closet un boitier verd; a box, a green-a box; do intend vat I speak? a green-a box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; I'll fetch it you. [Aside.] I am glad he went not in himself; if he had found the young man, he would have been horrid.

Caius. Fe fe fe! ma foi, il faut fond chand. Je m'en vais a la court,—la grande affaire.

Quick. Is it this, sir?

Caius. Out; mette le au mon pocket: dépêche, quickly.

—Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, sir. [Enter Rugby.]

Caius. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby: come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to de court.

Rug. 'T is ready, sir, here in the porch.

Caius. By my troat, I harry too long.—Od's me! Qu'ait j'oublié? dere is some simples in my closet, dat I will not for the world I shall leave behind. [Going to it.]

Quick. [Aside.] Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be mad.

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet?—Villainy! harrow! [Dragging Simple out.] Rugby, my rapier!

Quick. Good master, be content.

Caius. Vercore shall I be content-a?

Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. Vat shall the honest man do in my closet? dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quick. I beseech you, be not so phlegmatic. Hear the truth of it: he came of an errand to me from parson Hugh.

Caius. Vell.

Sim. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to—

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue! —Speak-a your tale.

Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to mistress Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la; but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you?—Rugby, baillez me some paper: tarry you a littel-a while. [Writes.]

Quick. I am glad he is so quiet; if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholy.—But notwithstanding, man, I'll do you your master what good I can: and the very yea and the no is, the French doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.—

Sim. 'T is a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

Quick. Are you avis'd o' that? you shall find it a great charge; and to be up early and down late:—but notwithstanding, to tell you in your ear, (I would have no words of it) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page: but notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind; that's neither here nor there.

Caius. You jack'nape, give-a a dis letter to Sir Hugh. By gar, it is a challenge: I will cut his trout in de park; and I will teach a seury jack-nape priest to meddle or make. —You may be gone; it is not good you tarry here:—by gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to trow at his dog.

[Exit Simple.]

Quick. Alas! he speaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter-a for dat:—do not you tell-a me, dat I shall have Anne Page for myself?—By gar, I will kill de Jack priest; and I have appointed mine Host of de Jarretière to measure our weapon.—By gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate: what, the good year!

Caius. Rugby, come to the court vit me.—By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door.—Follow my heels, Rugby.

[Exeunt Caius and Rugby.]

Quick. You shall have An fool's-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that:—never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do, nor can do more than I do with her. I thank heaven.

Fent. [Within.] Who's within there, ho?

Quick. Who's there, I trow? Come near the house, I pray you.

Enter Fenton.

Fent. How now, good woman! how dost thou?

Quick. The better, that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty mistress Anne?

Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend. I can tell you that by the way: I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, think'st thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above; but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book she loves you.—Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale.—Good faith, it is such another Nan;—but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread:—we had an hour's talk of that wart. —I shall never laugh but in that maid's company:—but, indeed, she is given too much to alcholly and musing. But for you—well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day. Hold, there's money for thee: let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will I! i' faith, that I will: and I will tell your worship more of the wart, the next time we have confidence, and of other woots.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haste now. [Exit Quick. Farewell to your worship.—Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not, for I know Anne's mind as well as another does.—Out upon 't! what have I forgot?

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page's House.

Enter Mistress Page, with a Letter.

Mrs. Page. What! have I 'scaped love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see. [Reads.] "Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his physician," he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I: go to then, there's sympathy. You are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then, there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, mistress Page, (at the least, if the love of soldier can suffice) that I love thee. I will not say, pity me, 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me. By me,

Thine own true knight,
By day or night,
Or any kind of light,
With all his might,
For thee to fight.
John Falstaff."

What a Herod of Jewry is this!—O wicked, wicked world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked (with the devil's name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been threes in my company.—What should I say to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth.—Heaven forgive me!—Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of fat men. How shall I be revenged on him? for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you.

You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that: I have to how to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well. I do then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary. O, mistress Page! give me some counsel.

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman! if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour.

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifles, woman; take the honour.

What is it?—dispense with trifles;—what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What?—thouliest—Sir Alice Ford!—These knights will hack*; and so, thou likest not alter the article of thy country.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light.—here, read, read; [giving a letter]—perceive how I might be knighted. [Mrs. Page reads]—I shall think the worse of fat men as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking; and yet he would not swear, praised women's modesty, and gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together, than the hundredth psalm to the tune of "Green Sleeves." What temper! I trow this will cause, with so many tuns of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think, the best way were to entertain him with hope. till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Ford. Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs.—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant, he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names, (sure more) and these are of the second edition. He will print them, out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two: I ha, rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is the very same; the very hand, the very words. What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not; it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some stain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I: if he come under my hatches, I'll never to sea again. Let's be revenged on him. let's appoint him a meeting: give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a fine-baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine Host of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not suffily the chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let's consult together against this greedy knight. Come hither. [They retire.]

Enter Ford, Pistol, Page, and Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not so.

Pistol. Hope is a curtail dog in some affairs;

Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young.

Pistol. He woos both high and low, both rich and poor, Both young and old, one with another. Ford, He loves the gally-mawry: Ford, perpet. Ford. Love my wife?

Pistol. With liver burning hot; prevent, or go there.

Like sir Acteon he, with Ring-wood at thy heels. O! odious is the name.

Ford. What name, sir?

Pistol. The horn, I say. Farewell:

SCENE II. — A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then the world’s mine oyster, Which I with sword will open.—

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir; you should lay my countenance to pawn: I have granted upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your accomplice, Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a gemini of baboons. I am damned in hell for swearing to gentlemen, my friends; you were good soldiers, and tall fellows: and when mistress Bridget lost the handle of her fan, I took’t upon mine honour thou hadst it not.

Pist. Didst thou not share? hadst thou not fifteen pence?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason: think’st thou, I’ll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you:—go.—A short knife and a thong:—to your manor of Pickthatch, go — You’ll not bear a letter for me, you rogue!—you stand upon your honour!—Why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do, to keep the terms of my honour precise. I, I, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to Enter Host.

Host. Tell him, cavaliro-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought between sir Hugh, the Welsh priest, and Caius, the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine Host o’ the Garter, a word with you.

Host. What say’st thou, my bully-rook?

[They go aside.

Fal. Will you [to Page] go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the managing of their weapons, and, I think, hath appointed them contrary places; for, believe me, I hear, the parson is no jester. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier?

Ford. None, I protest; but I’ll give you a bottle of burnt sack to give me resource to him, and tell him, my name is Brook: only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully: thou shalt have egress and regress; said I well? and thy name shall be Brook. It is a merry knight.—Will you go on here?

Shal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard, the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. Tut, sir! I could have told you more: in these times you stand on distance, your pessers, stoodeades, and I know not what: ’tis the heart, master Page: ’tis here, ’tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword, I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, boys, here, here shall we wag?

Page. Have with you.—I had rather hear them scold than see them fight.

[Exit Host, Shal., and Page.

Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife’s fidelity, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: she was in his company at Page’s house, and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into’t; and I have a dispose to sound Falstaff. If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, ’tis labour well bestowed.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Mrs. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her: she’ll fit it.

Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good mistress Anne?

Mrs. Ford. Go in with us, and see; we have an hour’s talk with you.

[Exit Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.

Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not?

Page. Yes, and you heard what the other told me.

Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang ’em, slaves; I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him, in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that,—Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loath to turn them together. A man may be too confident; I would have nothing lie on my head. I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Look, where my running Host of the Garter comes. There is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily.—How, now, mine host!

Enter Host.

Host. How now, bully-rook! thou’rt a gentleman, Cavaliro-justice, I say.

Enter Shallow.

Pist. I do relent: what wouldest thou more of me?

Enter Robin.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good woman.

Quick. Not so, an't please your worship.

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman; and I'll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one mistress Ford, sir:—I pray, come a little nearer this ways,—I myself dwell with master doctor Caus.

Fal. Well, on:—Mistress Ford, you say,—

Quick. Your worship says very true:—I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears:—mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? Heaven bless them, and make them his servants!

Fal. Well:—Mistress Ford:—what of her?

Quick. Why sir, she's a good creature. Lord, lord! your worship's in wanton: well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Mistress Ford:—come, mistress Ford,—

Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it. You have brought her into such a canary, as 'tis wonderful: the best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary; yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift: smelling so sweetly, all musk, and so rushing. I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such alligant terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart, and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her—I had myself twenty angels given me of a morning; but I defy all angels, (in such any sort, as they say,) but in the way of honesty:—and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all: and yet there has been earls, nay, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she Mercury.

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter, for the which she thanks you a thousand times: and she gives you to notify, that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, what you wot of: master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: he's a very jealous man; she leads a very frampold life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven,—Woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her.
Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Ford. Good master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good sir John. I sue for yours: not to charge you, for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are; the which hath something embolden'd me to this unseasoned intrusion, for, they say, it money go before, all ways do lie open.

Ford. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help to bear it sir John, take half, or all, for easing me of the carriage.

Ford. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

Ford. Speak, good master Brook: I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar.—I will be brief with you.—and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection; but, good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.

Ford. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

Ford. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doxology observance: encrossed opportunities to meet her; fed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her: not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given. Briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued me, which hath been on the wing of all occasions: but whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, need, I am sure, I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this:—

Love like a shadow flies, when substance beseaches pursues; Pursuing that flies, and flying what pursues.

Ford. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Ford. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Ford. Of what quality was your love then?

Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's ground: so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Ford. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that though she appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally blamed for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Ford. O, sir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it.—There is money, spend it; spend it: spend all; I have only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife: use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Ford. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks, you prescribe to yourself very preposterously. Ford. O! understand my drift. She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my suit darest not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desire and instance and argument to commend themselves: I could drive her, then, from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. What say you to, sir John?

Ford. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand: and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money, sir John; you shall want none.

Ford. Want no mistress Ford, master Brook: you shall want none. I shall be with her (I may tell you) by her own appointment: even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?

Ford. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not.—Yet I wrong him to call him poor: they say, the jealous wittol knave hath masses of money, for which his wife seems to me well-favoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's coffer, and there's my harvest-home.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might avoid him, if you saw him.

Ford. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits; I will awe him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns: master Brook, thou shalt know I will predominate over the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife.

Ford. Come to me soon at night.—Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style; thou, master Brook, shalt know him for a knave and cuckold.—Come to me soon at night.

Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this!—My heart is ready to crack with impatience.—Who says, this is im provident jealousy? my wife hath sent to him, the hour is fixed, the match is made. Would any man have thought this?—See the hell of having a false woman! my bed shall be abused, my coffer ransacked, my reputation gnawed at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! names!—Amainson sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbason, well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends: but cuckold! wittol cuckold! the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass; he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous. I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua vitae bottle, or a thief to walk

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Field near Froghmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, with a book, and Simple.

Ev. I pray you now, good master Slender's servant, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physic?

Sim. Marry, sir, the pit-way, the park-way, the Windsor way, and every way, but the town way.

Shal. Bodykins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Though we are justices, and doctors and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us: we are the sons of women, master Page.

Page. 'Tis true, master Shallow.

Shal. It will be found so, master Page.—Master doctor Caius. I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace: you have showed yourself a wise physician, and sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me, master doctor.

Host. Pardon, guest-justice.—A word, Monsieur Mock-water.

Caius. Mock-vater! vat is dat?

Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, then, I have as much mock-vater as de Englishman.—Scurry jack-dog priest! by gar, me vill cut his ears.

Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee amend.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw me: for, by gar, me vill have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully.—But first, master guest, and master Page, and eke cavaliero Slender, go you through the town to Froghmore.

[Aside to them. Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Host. He is there: see what humour he is in, and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

Page. Shal, and Slender. Aideu, good master doctor.

Caius. By gar, me will kill de priest, for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die. Sneath thy impatience; throw cold water on thy choler. Go about the fields with me through Froghmore; I will bring thee where mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a feasting, and thou shalt woo her. Curds and cream, said I well?

Caius. By gar, me tank you for dat: by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page: said I well?

Caius. By gar, 'tis good; vell said.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby.

Enter Caius and Rugby.

Caius. Jack Rugby!

Rug. Sir.

Caius. Vat is de clock, Jack?

Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come: he has pray his Pible vein, dat he is no come. By gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.

Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him, if he came.

Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead. so as I vill kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.

Rug. Forbear; here's company.

Host. Bless thee, bully doctor.

Skal. Save you, master doctor Caius.

Page. Now, good master doctor.

Slen. Give you good-moorow, sir.

Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?

Host. To see thee fight; to see thee join, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy pinto, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Francisco? ha, bully! What says my Æscaulapius? my Galen? my heart of elder? ha! is he dead, bully-stale? is he dead?

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of the world; he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castilian-king-Urinal: Hector of Greece, my boy.

Caius. I pray you, bear witness that me have stay six or seven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.

Skal. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Eva. He's welcome. [Sings.\footnote{Not in f. e.}] To shallow rivers, to whose falls—

Sim. No weapons, sir. There comes my master, master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Foggmore, over the stile, this way.

Eva. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

Shal. How now, master parson! Good-morrow, good sir Hugh. Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Slen. Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good sir Hugh.

Eva. Pray you from his mercy sake, all of you!\footnote{Not in f. e.}

Shal. What! the sword and the word? do you study them both, master parson?\footnote{Not in f. e.}

Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatic day?\footnote{Not in f. e.}

Eva. There is reasons and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you to do a good office, master parson.

Eva. Fery well: what is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverend gentleman, who, he like having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.

Shal. I have lived fourscore years, and upward. I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning; so wide of his own respect.

Eva. What is he?

Page. I think you know him: master doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.

Eva. Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.

Page. Why?

Eva. He has no more knowledge in Hiboeroates and Galen,—and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desires to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Slen. O, sweet Anne Page!

Shal. It appears so, by his weapons.—Keep them asunder;—here comes doctor Caius. [Enter Host, Caius, and Rugby.]

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Shal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disarm them, and let them question: let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let a me speak a word yet your ear: verefore will you not meet-me?

Eva. Pray you, use your patience: in good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jaak dog, John ape.

Eva. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends.—I will knock your urinals about your knave's cogswomb for missing you meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable!—Jack Ruby,—mine Host de Jarrett, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Eva. As I am a Christian soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed. I'll be judgment by mine Host of the Garter.

Caius. Ay, dat is very good: excellent.

Host. Peace, I say! I have mine Host of the Garter. Am I politic? am I subtle? am I Machiavel? Shal I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions and the motions. Shall I lose my parson? my priest? my sir Hugh? no; he gives me the proverbs and the no-verbs.—Give me thy hands, celestial and terrestrial; so—Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty. your skins are whole, and let burnt sack be the issue.

—Come, lay their swords to pawn.—Follow me, lad of peace; follow, follow, follow.

Shal. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentlemen. follow.

Slen. O, sweet Anne Page!

[Exeunt SHALLOW, SLENDER, PAGE, and HOST.]

Caius. Ha! do I perceive dat! have you make-a de set of us? ha, ha!

Eva. This is well, he has made us his vounting-stog.—I desire you, that we may be friends, and let us knog our prains together to be revenge on this same scall,\footnote{The follows have: madrigals way,} scurry, cogging companion, the Host of the Garter.

Caius. By gar, vit all my heart. He promise to bring me vere is Anne Page: by gar, he deceive me too.

Eva. Well, I will smite his noddes.—Pray you, follow. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—A Street in Windsor.

Enter MISTRESS PAGE and ROBIN.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant: you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader. Whether had you rather, lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?

Rob. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Mrs. Page. O! you are a flattering boy: now, I see, you'll be a courtier.

Enter FORD.

Ford. Well met, mistress Page. Whither go you?

Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife: is she at home?

Ford. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together, for want of your company. I think, if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

Mrs. Page. Be sure of that,—two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cock?\footnote{Not in f. e.}

Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of.—What do you call you knight's name, sirrah?\footnote{Not in f. e.}

Rob. Sir John Falstaff.

Ford. Sir John Falstaff!

Mrs. Page. He, he: I can never hit on's name—There is such a league between my good man and him! Is your wife at home indeed?

Ford. Indeed, she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir: I am sick, till I see her. [Exeunt Mrs. PAGE and ROBIN]
Ford. Hath Page any brains! hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He pierces out his wife's inclination; he gives her folly motion, and advantage: and now she's going to my wife, and Falstaff's boy with her. A man may hear this shower sing in the wind:— and Falstaff's boy with her.—Good plots!—they are laid: and our revolted wives share damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil to modesty from the so-seeming mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and willful Aetom: and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry aim. [Clock strikes ten.] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search; there! I shall find Falstaff. I shall be rather praised for this, than mocked; for it is as positive as the earth is firm, that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter Page, Shalow, Slender, Host, Sir Hugh Evans, Caius, and Rugby.

Page. Shal. &c. Well met, master Ford.
Ford. Trust me, a good knout. I have good cheer at home, and I pray you all go with me.
Shal. I must excuse myself, master Ford.
Slender. And so must I, sir: we are appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll speak of.
Shal. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.
Page. Shal. I hope, I have your good will, father Page.
Page. You have, master Slender; I stand wholly for you:—but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.
Caius. Ay, by gar; and de madam is love-a me: my nursh-a Quickly tell me so much.
Host. What say you to your young master Fenton? he raps, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holyday; he smells April and May; ne will carry 't, he will carry 't; 't is in his buttons; he will carry 't.
Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Pains; he is of too high a region; he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the fingers of new substance: if he take her, let him take her simply: the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.
Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster.—Master doctor, you shall go:—so shall you, master Page; and you, sir Hugh.
Shal. Well, fare you well.—We shall have the freer voicing at master Page's.

[Exeunt Shalow and Slender.

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come among you. [Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts. I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. [Erst Host. Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; you'll make him dance. Will you go, gentle?
All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert?

Mrs. Ford. Quickly, quickly. Is the buck-basket— Mrs. Ford. I warrant.—What, Robin, I say!

[Exit Servants with a large Basket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.
Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge: we must be brief.
Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house: and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggering) take this basket on your shoulders; that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whiskers in Datchet mead, and there embers it in the muddly ditch close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?
Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction. Be gone, and come when you are called.

[Exeunt Servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyes-muskeet? what news with you?
Rob. My master, sir John, is come in at your back door, mistress Ford, and requests your company.
Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent, have you been true to us?
Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn: my master knows not of your being here; and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it, for he swears he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Ford. Thou'rt a good boy; this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose.—I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so.—Go tell thy master, I am alone.
Mistress Page, remember you my cue. [Exit Robin.
Mrs. Page. I warrant thee: if I do not act it, hiss me.

Mrs. Ford. Go to, then: we'll use this unwelcome humidity, this gross watery pumison;—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough: this is the period of my ambition. O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O, sweet sir John!
Mrs. Ford. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead, I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I thy lady, sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the fire-valetan, or any tire of Venetian admittance.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, sir John: my brows become nothing else: nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a tyrant to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute courtier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thou wert, if fortune thy foe were not, nature thy friend: come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee, there's something extraordinary in thee. Come; I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a

SCENE III.

Mrs. Page. What! sir John Falstaff? Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee: help me away; let me creep in here; I'll never [He gets into the basket, and falls over; they cover him with foul linens.

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy. Call your men, mistress Ford.—You dissembling knight!

Mrs. Ford. What, John! Robert! John! [Exit Robin. Re-enter Servants.] Go, take up these clothes here, quickly; where's the cowl-staff? look, how you drumble: carry them to the laundress in Datchett mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near: if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest; I deserve it.—How now! whither bear you this? Serr. To the laundress, forsooth.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? you were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck? Ay, buck! I warrant you, buck, and of the season too, it shall appear. [Exeunt Servants with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have dreamed to-night: I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out: I'll warrant, we'll unknuckle the box.—Let me step thus way first:—so, now uncease.

Page. Good master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, master Page. — Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon: follow me, gentlemen. [Exit. Ev. This is very fantastical humour, and jealousies. Caius. By gar, 'tis no de fashion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentleman: see the issue of his search. [Exeunt Page, Evans, and Caius.

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this? Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband asked who was in the basket!

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so, throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think, my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here, for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that; and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff: his disolute disease will scarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carion, mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

Mrs. Page. We'll do it: let him be sent for to-morrow eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be, the knave bragg'd of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. You use me well, master Ford, do you?

Ford. Ay, I do so.

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

[Ford.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master.
Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Eva. If there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment.

Caius. By gar, nor I too: dere is no bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, master Ford! are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it.

Eva. You suffer for a sad conscience: your wife is as honest as you are, and I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caius. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well; I promised you a dinner.—Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife;—come, mistress Page: I pray you pardon me: pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a birding together: I have a fine hawk for the bush. Shall it be so?

Ford. Any thing.

Eva. If there be one, I shall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I shall make a de turd.

Ford. Pray you go, master Page.

Eva. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knife, mine Host.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, vit all my heart.

Eva. A lousy knife! to have his gibes, and his mockeries. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love; Therefore, no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas! how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself. He doth object, I am too great of birth, And that my state being gall'd with my expense, I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Beside these, other bars he lays before me,— My riots past, my wild societies; And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible I should love thee, but as a property.

Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come! Albeit, I will confess, thy father's wealth Was the first motive that I wo'd thee, Anne: Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags; And 'tis the very riches of thyself That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle master Fenton, Yet seek my father's love: still seek it, sir: If opportunity and humblist suit Cannot attain it, why then,—Hark ye hither. [They talk apart.

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly, my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Slender. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on't. 'Slid, 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Bo not dismayd.

Slender. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that,—but that I am afeard.

Quick. Hark ye; master Slender would speak a word with you.

Anne. I come to him.—This is my father's choice. O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year! Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy! thou hadst a father.

Slender. I had a father, mistress Anne: my uncle can tell you good jests of him.—Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Slender. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slender. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a 'spire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds joinure.

Anne. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it: I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you. [Stands back.

Anne. Now, master Slender.

Slender. Now, good mistress Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slender. My will? 'o d's heartlings! that's a pretty jest, indeed. I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

Anne. I mean, master Slender, what would you with me?

Shal. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you. Your father, and my uncle, have made motions: if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his done. They can tell you how things go, better than I can: you may ask your father; here he comes.

Enter Page and Mistress Page.

Page. Now, master Slender!—Love him, daughter Anne.— Why, how new! what does master Fenton here? You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house: I told you, sir, my daughter is disposed of.

Fent. Nay, master Page, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. Good master Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fent. Sir, will you hear me?

Page. No, good master Fenton.—Come, master Shallow;—come, son Slender; in.—Knewing my mind, you wrong me, master Fenton. [Exit Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Quick. Speak to mistress Page.

Fent. Good mistress Page, for that I love your daughter In such a righteous fashion as I do, Perforce, against all checks, rebukes, and manners, I must advance the colours of my love, And not retire: let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yond' fool.

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.

Quick. That's my master, master doctor.

Anne. Alas! I had rather be set quick i' the earth, And bow'd to death with turnips.

Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself. Good master Fenton, I will not be your friend, nor enemy:

1 Not in f. e.
My daughter will I question how she loves you,
And as I find her, so am I affected.
Till then, farewell, sir: she must needs go in;
Her father will be angry. [Exit Mrs. Page and Anne.
Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress.—Farewell, Nan.
Quick. This is my doing, now.—Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician?
look on, master Fenton.—This is my doing.
Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night
Give my sweet Nan this ring. There's for thy pains.
[Exit.
Quick. Now, heaven send thee good fortune! A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Slender had her, or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her. I will do what I can for them all three, for so I have promised, and I'll be as good as my word; but spes-ciously for master Fenton. Well, I must of another erand to sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses:
what a beast am I to slack it.
[Exit.
SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.
Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.
Fal. Bardolph, I say!
Bard. Here, sir.
Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in 't.
[Exit Bard.
Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a blind bitch's puppies, fifteen i' the litter; and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking: if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should own. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvry and shallow; a death that I abhor, for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swallowed! I should have been a mountain of mummy.
Re-enter Bardolph, with the wine.
Bard. Here's mistress Quickly; sir, to speak with you.
Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold, as if I had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.
Bard. Come in, woman.
Enter Mrs. Quickly.
Quick. By your leave.—I cry you mercy: give your worship good-norrow.
Fal. Take away these chalices. Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.
Bard. With eggs, sir?
Fal. Simple of itself; I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage.—Exit Bardolph.—How now?
Quick. Marry, sir, I come to your worship from mistress Ford.
Fal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the ford: I have my belly full of ford.
Quick. Als the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their exortion.
Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.
Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding: she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine. I must carry her word quickly: she'll make you amend, I warrant you.
Fal. Well, I will visit her: tell her so; and bid her think, what a man is! let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.
Quick. I will tell her.
Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st thou?
Quick. Eight and nine. sir.
Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miss her.
Quick. Peace be with you, sir.
[Exit.
Fal. I marvel, I hear not of master Brook. he sent me word to stay within. I like his money well. O!
here he comes.
Enter Ford.
Ford. Bless you, sir.
[Exit.
Fal. Now, master Brook: you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife?
Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business.
Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you. I was at his house the hour she appointed me.
Ford. And sped you, sir?
Fal. Very ill-favouredly, master Brook.
Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?
Fal. No, master Brook; but the peaking conron to his husband, master Brook, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's lovers.
Ford. What! while you were there?
Fal. While I was there.
Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?
Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and by her invention, and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.
Ford. A buck-basket!
Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket: rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, and greasy napkins; that, master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell, that ever offended nostril.
Ford. And how long lay you there?
Fal. Nay, you shall hear, master Brook, what I have suffered: to bring this woman to evil for your good.
Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistresse, to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchellane: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knife, their master, in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket. I quaked for fear, lest the lunatic knife would have searched it.
but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well: on went he for a search, and away went
I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, master Brook:
I suffered the pangs of several deaths: first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether: next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, head to head; and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distil-lution, with sinking clothes that froth in their own grease: think of that,—a man of my kidney,—think of that; that am as subject to heat, as butter: a man of continual dissolution and thaw: it was a miracle, to escape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse shoe; think of that,—hissing hot,—think of that, master Brook.
Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit, then, is deperate; you'll undertake her no more?
Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into Aetna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a birding: I have received from her another embassy of meeting; 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, master Brook.

Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then address me to my appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed, and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her: adieu. You shall have her, master Brook; master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit.]

Ford. Hum: ha! is this a vision? is this a dream? do I sleep? Master Ford, awake! awake, master Ford! there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford. This 'tis to be married: this 'tis to be linen, and buck-baskets.—Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the leech: he is at my house: he cannot scrape me; it is impossible he should: he cannot creep into a half-penny purse, nor into a pepper-box; but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet be what I would not, shall not make me tame: if I have horns to make me mad, let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

Quick. Sure he is, by this, or will be present; but truly, he is very courageous mad about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by: I'll but bring my young man here to school. Look, where his master comes; 'tis a playing day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh! no school to-day?

Eva. No; master Slenor is get' the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart!

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book: I pray you, ask him some questions in his audience.

Eva. Come hither, William: hold up your head; come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah: hold up your head: answer your master; be not afraid.

Eva. William, how many numbers is in nouns?

Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say, od 's nouns.

Eva. Peace your tattlings!—What is fair, William?

Will. Pulcher.

Quick. Pole-cats! there are fairer things than polecats, sure.

Eva. You are a very simplicity 'oman: I pray you, peace.—What is lapis, William?

Will. A stone.

Eva. And what is a stone, William?

Will. A pebble.

Eva. No, it is lapis: I pray you remember in your rain.

Will. Lapis.

Eva. That is good William. What is he, William, he does lend articles?

Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and be tinus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, hic, haec, hoc.

Eva. Nominativo, hiq, hag, hog;—pray you, mark: genitivo, haquis. Well, what is your accusative case?

Will. Accusativo, hinc.

Eva. I pray you, have your remembrance, child; accusativo, hing, hang, hog.

Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon. I warrant you.

Eva. Leave your prabbles, 'oman.—What is the locative case, William?

Will. O vocativo, O.

Eva. Remember, William: vocativo is, covet.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Eva. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace! Peace!

Eva. What is your genitive case plural, William?

Will. Genitive case?

Eva. Ay.

Will. Genitive,—horum, horum, horum.

Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case! lie on her!—

Never name her child, if she be a whore.

Eva. For shame, 'oman!

Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words,—

He teaches him to hick and to hack, which they'll do fast enough of themselves; and to call horum,—tie upon you!

Eva. 'Oman, art thou lunatics? hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers and the gend ers? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.

Mrs. Page. Pr'ythee hold thy peace.

Eva. Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.

Will. Forsook, I have forgot.

Eva. It is qui, quae, quod; if you forget your quis, your quae, and your quads, you must be prebees. Go your ways, and play; go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprag memory. Farewell, mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.]

Get you home, boy. Come, we stay too long. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my sufferance. I see, you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only, Mrs. Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He's a birding, sweet sir John.

Mrs. Page. [Within.] What ho! gossip Ford! what ho!

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, sir John. [Exit Falstaff.

Scene II.

Enter Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart! who’s at home besides yourself?

Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly.—[Aside.] Speak louder.

Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all Eve’s daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, “Peer-out, Peer-out!” that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility, and patience, to this distemper he is in now. I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and swears, he was carried out, the last time he searched for him, in a basket: protests to my husband he is now here, and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion. But I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own folly.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end: he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone! the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why, then you are utterly shamed, and he’s but a dead man. What a woman are you!—Away with him, away with him: better shame, than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Mrs. Page. Re-enter Falstaff in fright.

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note; there is no hiding you in the house.

Mrs. Ford. I’ll go out, then.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you mislead John. Unless you go out disguised.—Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day! I know not. There is no woman’s gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Mrs. Ford. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a maschew.

Mrs. Ford. My maid’s aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word it will serve him; she’s as big as he is: and there’s her thurn’d hat, and her muffler too.—Run up, sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John: mistress Page and I will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick; we’ll come dress you straight; put on the gown the while. [Exit Falstaff.

Mrs. Ford. I would my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford: he swears, she’s a witch; forbade her my house, and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband’s end, and the devil guide his endgel afterwards!

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and talks of the basket too; howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We’ll try that: for I’ll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he’ll be here presently: let’s go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I’ll first direct my men, what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I’ll bring linen for him straight.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough.

We’ll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act, that often jest and laugh; ’T is old but true, "Still swine cat all the draft!"

Mrs. Ford. Re-enter Mrs. Ford, with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders: your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him. Quickly; despatch. [Exit. 1 Serv. Come, come, take it up.

2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of knight again.

1 Serv. I hope not: I had as lief hear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Falstaff, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again?—Set down the basket, villains.—Somebody call my wife.—Youth in a basket!—O you panderer rascals! there’s a knot, a ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me: now shall the devil be shamed.—What, wife, I say? Come, come forth; behold what honest clothes you send forth to be bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to lose any longer; you must be pinioned.

Eva. Why, this is lunatics: this is mad as a mad dog.

Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed. Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, sir.—Come hither, mistress Ford; mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.—I suspect without cause. mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said, brazen-face: held it out.—Come forth, sirrah. [Pulls the Clothes out, and throws them all over the stage.

Page. This passes!

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes alone.

Ford. I shall find you anon.

Eva. ’T is unreasonable. Will you take up your wife’s clothes? Come away.

Ford. Empty the basket, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why,—

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket:—why may not he be there again? In my house I am
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

ACT IV.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a flea's death. [All Clothes thrown out.]

Page. Here's no man.

Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, master Ford; his wrongs you.

Eva. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealousy.

Ford. Well, he's not here I seek for.

Page. No, nor no where else, but in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, show me no colour for my extremity, let me for ever be your table-sport: let them say of me, "As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman." Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What hon! mistress Page! come you, and the old woman, down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! What old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a quack, an old cozening quack? Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery as this; beyond our element: we know nothing. — Come down, you witch, you hang you; come down I say.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband. — Good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Enter Falstaff in Women's Clothes, led by Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Come, mother Prat; come, give me your hand. I'll prat her. — Out of my door, you witch! [beats him] you rag, you baggage, you polleet, you ronyou! out! out! I'll conjure you, I'll fortune-tell you. [Exit Falstaff.

Mrs. Page. Are you not ashamed! I think, you have killed the poor woman.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it. — 'Tis a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch!

Eva. By yea and nay, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed; I like not when a 'oman has a great peard; I spy a great peard under her muffler.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow: see but the issue of my jealousy. If I cry out thus upon no trall, never trust me when I open again.

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the edgel hallowed, and hang over the altar; it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any farther revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness, is, sure, scared out of him: if the devil have him not in too simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; it if he be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts the poor unvirtuous fat knight, shall be any farther afflicted, we two will still be the nuns.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant, they'll have him publicly shamed, and, methinks, there would be no period to the jest. Should he not be publicly shamed?

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it, then shape it: I would not have things cool. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Bard. Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be, comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlemen; they speak English?

Bard. Ay, sir; I'll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses, but I'll make them pay; I'll saucem them: they have had my house a week at command; I have turned away my other guests: they must come off; I'll saucem them. Come. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Eva. 'Tis one of the pest discretions of a 'oman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour.

Ford. Pardon me, wife. Henceforth do what thou wilt;

I rather will suspect the sun with cold, Than thee with wantonness; now doth thy honour stand. In him that was of late a heretic, As firm as faith.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well; no more. Be not as extreme in submission, As in offences; But let our plot go forward: let our wives Yet once again, to make us public sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it. Ford. There is no better way than that they spoke of Page. How? to send him word they 'll meet him in the park at midnight? fie, fie! he'll never come. Eva. You see, he has been thrown into the rivers, and has been grievously peaten, as an old woman; methinks, there should be terrors in him, that he should not come; methinks, his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devise but how you'll use him when he comes,

And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter, Sometimes a keeper here in Windsor forest, Doth all the winter time, at still midnight, Walk round about an oak, with great rag'd horns; And there he blasts the trees, and takes the cattle; And makes milch-kine yield blood, and shakes a chain In a most hideous and dreadful manner. You have heard of such a spirit; and well you know The superstitious idle-headed eld Received, and did deliver to our age, This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many, that do fear in deep of night to walk by this Henrie's oak.

But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our devise; That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us, Disguis'd like Henrie, with huge horns on his head. Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come, And in this shape: when you have brought him thither, What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and thus.

Nan Page my daughter, and my little son, And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress Like urchins, uphils, and fairies, green and white, With roundels of waxen tapers on their heads, And rattles in their hands. Upon a sudden, As Falstaff, she, and I, are newly met, Let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once With some diffused song: upon their sight, We two in great amazement will fly:

Then, let them all encircle him about, And, fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight; And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel, In that so sacred paths he dares to tread, In shape profane.

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth, Let the supposed fairies pinch him soundly, And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known, We'll all present ourselves, dis-horn the spirit, And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must Be practised well to this, or they'll never do't.

Eva. I will teach the children their behaviours; and I will be like a jack-an-apes also, to burn the knight with my taber.

Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go buy them wizards.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies, Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That silk will I go buy; —[Aside.] and in that time Shall master Slender steal my Nan away, And marry her at Eton. [To them.] Go, send to Falstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again in name of Brook; He'll tell me all his purpose. Sure, he'll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that. Go, get us properties, And tricking for our fairies.

Eva. Let us about it: it is admirable pleasures, and very honest knavery.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Go, mistress Ford, Send quickly to sir John, to know his mind.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

I'll to the doctor: he hath my good will, And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot; And him my husband best of all affects: The doctor is well money'd, and his friends Potent at court: he, none but he, shall have her, Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thick skin? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snapp.

1 Elves. 2 Irregular. 3 To-pinch. 4 I: in f. o. 5 or: in f. o. 6 Not in f. o.
Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Eva. Where is mine host? Host. What is the matter, sir? Eva. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town tells me, there is three counters of Germans, that has cozened all the kosts of Readings, of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good will, look you: you are wise, and all of gibe and vlouting-stogs, and it is not convenient on should be cozened. Fare you well.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine Host de Jarretiere? Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful dilemma. Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat; but it is, tell a me; dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jar- many: by my trot, dere is no duke, dat de court is known to. I tell you for good will: adien.

Host. Hue and cry, villain! go.—Assist me, knight; I am undone.—Fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone! [Exit.]

Fal. I would all the world might be cozened, for I have been cozened and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and engelged, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me: I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as erst-fallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I swore myself at primero! Well, if my wind were but long enough, I would pray and repent.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now, whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and so they shall be both bestowed. I have suffered more for their sakes, more, than the villainous insouciance of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes. I warrant; particularly one of them: mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow: and I love to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, deliver'd me, the knave constable had set me i' the stocks, i' the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber; you shall hear how things go, and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts! what ado here is to bring you together. Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy; I will give you over all. Fent. Yet hear me speak. Assast me in my purpose, and, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold more than thy loss.

Host. I will hear you, master Fenton; and I will, at the least, keep your counsel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page: Who, mutually, hath answer'd my affection (So far forth as herself might be her choosuer) Even to my wish. I have a letter from her Of such contents as you will wonder at; That neither, singly, can be manifested, Without the show of both: wherein fat Falstaff Hath a great scene: the image of the jest [Showing the Letter].

Now, sir, I'll show you here at large. Hark, good mine Host: To-night at Hone's oak, just 'twixt twelve and one, Must my sweet Nan present the fairy queen. The purpose why, is here; in which disguise, While other jests are something rank on foot, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eton Immediately to marry: she hath consented. Now, sir, Her mother, even strong against that match, And firm for Dr. Caius, hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are tasking of their minds, And at the deanery, where a priest attends, Straight marry her: to this her mother's plot She, seeingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor.—Now, thus it rests: Her father means she shall be all in white; And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand, and bid her go, She shall go with him:—her mother hath intended, The better to denote her to the doctor, (For they must all be mask'd and vizarded) That quaint in green she shall be loose enrob'd, With ribands pendent, farring 'bout her head; And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe, To pinch her by the hand, and on that token The maid hath given consent to go with him. Host. Which means she to deceive? father or mother?

Fent. Both, my good host, to go along with me: And here it rests,—that you'll procure the vicar To stay for me at church 'twixt twelve and one, And in the lawful name of marrying, To give our hearts united ceremony. Host. Well, husband your device: I'll to the vicar. Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest.

Fent. So shall I evermore be bound to thee Besides, I'll make a present recom pense. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Fal. Pr’ythee, no more prattling;—go.—I’ll hold. Away.
Quick. I'll provide you a chain, and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I say; time wears; hold up your head, and minced. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.]

Enter Ford. How now, master Brook! Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, master Brook as y' see, like a poor old man; but I came from her. master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knavish Ford her husband, hath the quëst mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you.—He beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam, because I know also, life is a shuttle. I am in haste: go along with me; I'll tell you all, master Brook. Since I placèd geese, played truant, and whipped top, I knew not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver her with your hand. —Follow. Strange things in hand, master Brook: follow. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come: we'll conch i' the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.—Remember, son Shallow, my daughter, her.

Slen. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her, and we have a nay-word, how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry "mum," she cries, "budget," and by that we know one another.

Skal. That's good too; but what needs either your "mum," or her "budget?" the white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o'clock.

Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master Doctor, my daughter is in green; when you see her time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the park: we two must go together.

Caius. I know vat I have to do. Adieu.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius.] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter: but 'tis no matter: better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Evans? 23

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak; with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such loutswards, and their leechery,

Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on: to the oak, to the oak! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Eva. Trib, trib. fairies: come; and remember your parts. Be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit, and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you. Come, come; trib, trib. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff, disguised, with a Buck's Head on.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me!—remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europe; love set on thy horns.—O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man, in some other, a man a beast.—You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: O, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose!—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl: think on't, Jove; a foul fault. When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, 'tis the forest send me a cool rat-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Fal. My doe with the black sent?—let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of "Green Sleeves;" hail kissing-comfits, and snow eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here. [Embracing her.]

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-heart.

Fal. Divide me like a bribe-buck, each a haunch: I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman? ha! Speak I like Herne the hunter?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome. [Noise within.]

Mrs. Page. Alas! what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Fal. What should this be?

Mrs. Ford. Away, away! [They run off.]

Fal. I think, the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, like a Satyr; Mrs. Quickly, and Pistol; Anne Page, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with waxen tapers on their heads.

Queen. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white, you moonshine revellers, and shades of night, You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny, Attend your office, and your quality.

Crier Hobgoblin. Make the fairy o-yes.

Past. Elves, list your names: silence, you airy toys! Cricket, to Windsor chimneys when thouest leapt, 4 Where fires thou find' st unrak'd, and hearths unswept, There pitch the maidens as blue as bilberry: Our radiant queen hates sluts, and sluttiness.

Fal. They are fairies; he, that speaks to them, shall die: [To himself.]
I'11 wink and cough. No man their works must eye.

[Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, and Mrs. Ford. They lay hold of him.

Page. Nay, do not fly: I think, we have match'd you now.

Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn?

Mrs. Page. I pray you come; hold up the jest no higher.

Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives?

See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes
Become the forest better than the town?

Ford. Now, sir, who's a cuckold now!—Master Brook, Falstaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook: and, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to master Brook: his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill-luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive, that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not fairies! I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the folly into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, when it is upon ill employment!

Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve God, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pine you.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o'er-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welsh gout too? shall I have a coxcomb of frize? 'Tis time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. Scece is not good to give puffer: your jelly is all puffer.

Fal. Scece and puffer! have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust, and late-walking through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, Sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without set-up to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hog-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entrails.

Ford. And one that is as staidier as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and methelings, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pribles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme; you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel. Ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me. use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pansyer: over and above that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.¹

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee. Tell her, master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius' wife. [Aside, Enter Slender, crying.

Slen. Whoa, ho! ho! father Page! Page. Son, how now! how now, son! have you despatched?

Slen. Despatched!—I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know on't; would I were hanged. Ha! Ha! Page. Of what, what, son?

Slen. I came yonder at Eton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy: if it had not been i' the church, I would have swunged him, or he should have swinged me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and 'tis a post-master's boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: if I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you, how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white, and cried "mum," and she cried "budget," as Anne and I had appointed; yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened; I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un poisson, by gar, a boy: it is not Anne Page; by gar, I am cozened.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?

Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that go to make amends: Forgive that sum and so we'll all be friends.

Ford. Well, here's my hand: all's forgiven at last.

Paul. It hath cost me well: I have been well pumched and what a title: in f. e

Two other like Gentlemen.

Thomas, Two Friars.
Peter, A Justice.
Elbow, a simple Constable.

Lords, Gentlemen, Guards, Officers, and other Attendants.

SCENE, Vienna.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Esclus, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Esclus!

Escal. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me t' affect speech and discourse;
Since I am apt to know, that your own science
Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice
My strength can give you: then, no more remains,
But add to your sufficiency your worth,
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city’s institutions, and the terms
For common justice, y’ are as pregnant in
As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our commission,

[Giving it.*

From which we would not have you warp.—Call hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo.—[Exit an Attendant.

What figure of us think you he will hear?
For, you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply,
Lent him our terror, drest him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power. What think you of it?

Escal. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Look, where he comes.

Ang. Always obedient to your grace’s will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke.

There is a kind of character in thy life,
That, to th’ observer, doth thy history
Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.

Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do,
Not light them for ourselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, ’t were all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch’d,
But to fine issues; nor nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But, like a thirsty goddess, she determines
Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech
To one that can my part in him advertise:
Hold, therefore, Angelo: [Tendering his commission
In our remove be thou at full ourself;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart. Old Esclus,
Though first in question, is thy secondary:
Take thy commission. [Giving it.

Ang. Now, good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp’d upon it.

Duke. No more evasion:
We have with a heaven’d and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore, take your honours.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition,
That it prefers itself; and leaves unquestion’d
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you
As time and our concernments shall importune,
How it goes with us; and do look to know,
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To the hopeful excretion do I leave you
Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet, give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do
With any scruple: your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce, or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand

'll privity away: I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause, and cries vehement,
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion,
That gives affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!
Escal. Lead forth, and bring you back in happiness!

Duke. I thank you Fare you well. [Exit.

Escal. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature
I am yet not instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

Escal. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dukes, come not to composition with the king of Hungary, why then the dukes fall upon the king.

Clo. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the king of Hungary's!

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou conclu-dest like the sanguinary pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal?

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

1 Gent. Why? 'T was a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions:
they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that in the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. Does he think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy; as for example; thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

1 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet: thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet? thou art good velvet:
thou art a three-pie'd piece, I warrant thee. I had an affection to be a list of an English kersey, as he pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly crue?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think, I have done myself wrong, have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted, or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes!

1 Gent. I have purchased as many diseases under her roof, as come to—

2 Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge.

2 Gent. To three thousand dollars a-year.

1 Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

2 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me;
but thou art full of error: I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow;
impunity has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

1 Gent. How now? Which of your hips has the mee profound scintilliation?

Bawd. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

2 Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry, sir, that's Claudio; signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison! 'tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know, 'tis so: I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head is1 to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it; and it is for getting madam Juliet with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away: let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty.
I am custom-shrunk. How now? what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

Clo. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Bawd. Well: what has he done?

Clo. A woman.

Bawd. But what's his offence?

Clo. Groping for trade of a peculiar river.

Bawd. What is there a maid with child by him?

Clo. No: but there's a woman with maid by him.

Bawd. You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Clo. What proclamation, man?

Clo. All bawdy houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pull'd down.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the city?

Clo. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

Bawd. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?

Clo. To the ground, mistress.

Bawd. Why, here's a change, indeed, in the com-mew; what shall become of me?

Clo. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade: I'll be your tapster still. Courage!
there will be pity taken on you; you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service; you will be considered.

Bawd. What's to do here, Thomas Tapster? Let's withdraw.

Clo. Here comes signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's madam Juliet.

[Exeunt

SEOUL III.—The Same.

Enter Provost, Claudio, and Officers.1

Claud. Fellow Provost, Claudio, and Officers.2

Claud. Fellow, why doest thou show me this thy world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition,

But from lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demi-god, authority,

Make up our due for our offences by weight—

The words of heaven;3—on whom it will, it will;

On whom it will not, so: yet still 'tis just.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.4

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio? whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty: As sufficeth is the father of much fast,

So every scope by the imperative use

Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,

Like rats that ravin^ down their proper bane,

A thirsty evil, and when we drink, we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors. And yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the freedom of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment.—What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What but to speak of would offend again.

Lucio. What is it? murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Lechery?

Claud. Call it so.

Prov. Away, sir! you must go.

Lucio. One word, good friend.—Lucio, a word with you.

[Takes him aside.

Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good—Is lechery so look'd after?

Claud. Thus stands it with me:—Upon a true contract,

I got possession of Julietta's bed:

You know the lady; she is fast my wife,

Save that we do the pronunciation lack

Of outward order: this came we not to,

Only for procurations of a dowry

Remaining in the coffer of her friends,

From whom we thought it meet to hide our love,

Till time had made them for us. But it chance,

The stealth of our most mutual entertainment

With character too gross is writ on Juliet.

Lucio. With child, perhaps?

Claud. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke,—

Whether it be the fault and glimps of newness,

Or whether that the body public be

A horse wherein the governor doth ride,

Who, newly in the seat, that it may know

He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;

Whether the tyranny be in his place,

Or in his eminence that fills it up,

I stagger in:—but this new governor

Awakes me all the enrolled penalties,

Which have, like unsecur'd armour, hung by the wall

So long, that nineteen zodiacs have gone round,

And none of them been worn; and, for a name,

Now puts the drowsy and neglected act

Freshly on me:—tis surely, for a na ne.

Lucio. I warrant it is; and thy head stands so

P. 64, MEASURE FOR MEASURE. ACT I.
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not due punishment. Therefore, indeed, my father,
I have on Angelo impos'd the office,
Who may, in th' ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never in the sight,¹
To draw on slander. And to behold his sway,
I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pr'ythee,
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear me
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action,
At our more leisure shall I render you:
Only this one — Lord Angelo is precie!;
Stands at a guard with envy; scarse confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to blend than stone: hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seemers be. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Nunnery.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no farther privileges?

Franc. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more,
But rather wishing a more strict restraint.
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of saint Clare.
Lucio. [Within.] Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls?

Franc. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him:
You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn.
When you have vowed, you must not speak with men,
But in the presence of the prioresse:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.

[Lucio calls.

He calls again: I pray you, answer him.

[Exit Francisca.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who's that which calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hall, virgin, if you be, as those cheek-roses
Proclaim you are no less, can you so steady me,
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place, and the fair sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio?

Isab. Why her unhappy brother? let me ask,
The rather, for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you.

Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

Isab. Woe me! for what?

Lucio. For that, which, if my self might be his judge,
He should receive his punishment in thanks.
He hath got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your scorn,⁴

Lucio. 'Tis true. I would not, though 'tis my familiar sin
With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest,
Tongue far from heart, play with all virgins so;
I hold you as a thing ensky'd, and sainted
By your renunciation, an immortal spirit,
And to be talked with in sincerity,
As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewness and truth, 'tis thus:
Your brother and his lover have embrac'd:
As those that feed grow full; as blossoming time,
That from the seedling the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison, even so her plentiful womb
Expresseth his full tith and husbandry.

Isab. Some one with child by him?—My cousin

Juliet?

Lucio. Is she your cousin?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their name

By vain though apt, affection.

Lucio. She it is.

Isab. O! let him marry her.

Lucio. This is the point.

The duke, who's very strangely gone from hence,
Bore many gentlemen, myself being one.
In hand and hope of action; but we do learn
By those that know the very nerves of state
His givings out were of an infinite distance
From his true-meant design. Upon his place,
And with full line of his authority,
Governs lord Angelo; a man whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
But doth debate and blurt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast.
He (to give fear to use and liberity,
Which have for long run by the hideous law,
As mice by lions) hath picked out an act,
Under whose heavy sense your brother's life
Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it,
And follows close the rigor of the statute,
To make him an example. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo; and that's my path
Of business twixt you and your poor brother.

Isab. Doth he so seek his life?

Lucio. Hath censur'd him.

Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! what poor ability's in me
To do him good?

Lucio. Essay the power you have.

Isab. My power, alas! I doubt.

Lucio. Our doubts are tradors.

And make us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt. Go to lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.

Isab. I'll see what I can do.

Lucio. But speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight,
No longer staying but to give the mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:
Commend me to my brother: soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu! [Exeunt.]
SCENE I.—A Hall in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ang. We must not make a scare-crow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey,
And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
Heir peren, and not their terror.

Escal. Ay, but yet
Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall; and bruise to death. Alas! this gentleman,
Whom I would save, had a most noble father.

Ang. But your honour know,
(Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue.)
That, in the working of your own affections,
Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose.
Whether you had not, sometime in your life,
Err'd in this point, which now you censure him,
And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
Another thing to fall. I do not deny,
The jury, passing on a prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try: what's open made to justice.
That justice seizes: what know the laws,
That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant,
The jewel that we find, we stoop and take it.
Because we see it: but what we do not see
We tread upon, and never think of it.
You may not so extenuate his offence.
For I have had such faults: but rather tell me,
When I, that censure him, do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death.
And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Enter Provost.

Prov. Here, if it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio
Be executed by nine to-morrow morning.
Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar'd.
For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.

Escal. Well, heaven forgive him, and forgive us all!

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall:
Some run from breaks of ice, and answer none,
And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clown, Officers, &c.

Elb. Come, bring them away. If these be good people in a common-wealth, that do nothing but use their buses in common houses, I know no law: bring them way.

Ang. How now, sir? What's your name, and what's he matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow: I do not lean upon justice, sir; and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors! Well; what benefactors are they? re they not malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are; but precise villains they are, that I am sure of, and void of all profession in the world that good Christians ought to have Escol. This comes off well: here's a wise offici.

Ang. Go to: what quality are they of? Elbow is your name: why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Clo. He cannot, sir, he's out at elbow.

Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir? a tapster, sir; parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman, whose house, sir, was, as they say, pluck'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that?

Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour,— Escal. How! thy wife?

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman.—

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Many, sir, by my wife: who, if she had been a woman candidly given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by mistress Over-done's means: but as she spits in his face, so she defiled him.

Clo. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before there varieties here, thou honourable man; prove it.

Escal. [To Angelo.] Do you hear how he misplaces

Clo. Sir, she came in great with child, and longing (saying your honour's reverence) for stew'd prunes: sir we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence: your honours have seen such dishes: they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Escol. Go to. Go to: no matter for the dish, sir.

Clo. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right; but to the point. As I say, this mistress Elbow, being as I say, with child, and being great belly'd, and longing, as I said, for prunes, and having but two in the dish, as I said, master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly;—for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again

Froth. No, indeed.

Clo. Very well: you being then, if you be remember'd cracking the stones of the forsayd prunes.

Froth. Ay, so I did, indeed.

Clo. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be remember'd, that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you.

Froth. All this is true.

Clo. Why, very well then.

Escal. Come; you are a tedious fool; to the purpose.

—What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Clo. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Clo. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And I beseech you, look unto master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year, whose father died at Hallowmas—Was not at Hallowmas, master Froth?
Froth. All-hallowed eve.
Clo. Why, very well: I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir—t was in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for windows.

Clo. Why, very well, then: I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there. I'll take my leave, And leave you to the hearing of the cause, Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.
Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Clo. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Clo. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir, what did this gentleman to her?

Clo. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face.

—Good master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose. Doth your honour mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Clo. Doth your honour see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Clo. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Clo. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou liest: thou liest, wicked varlet. The time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Clo. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice, or Iniquity—Is this true?

Elb. O thou caviff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her before she was married to her—if ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor dube's officer.——Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' th' ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is 't your worship's pleasure I shall* do with this wicked caviff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses till thou knowest what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it.—Thou seest, thou wicked varlet now, what's come upon thee; thou art to continue; now, thou varlet, thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, an 't please you, sir.

Escal. So.—What trade are you of, sir?

Clo. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress' name?

Clo. Mistress Over-done.

Escal. Hath she any more than one husband?

Clo. Nine, sir; Over-done by the last.

Escal. Nine!—Come hither to me, master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters; they will draw you, master Froth, and yo' will hang them: get you gone, and let me hear more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I a drawn in.

Escal. Well; no more of it, master Froth; farewell.

[Exit Froth.]—Come you hither to me, master tapster. What's your name, master tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Escal. What else?

Clo. Rum, sir.

Escal. 'Troth, and your rum is the greatest thing about you; so that, in the beastliest sense, you are Pompey the great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd. Pompey, howsoever you color it in being a tapster. Are you not come, tell me true: it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

Clo. If the law would allow it, sir.

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Clo. Does your worship mean to geld and spay all the youth of the city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to 't then. If your lordship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not fear the bawds.

Escal. There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: it is but heading and hanging.

Clo. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after three pence a day. If you live to see this come to pass, say Pompey told you so.

Escal. Thank you, good Pompey; and in requital of your prophecy, bawk you:—I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; no, not for dwelling where you do: if I do Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and prove shrewd Caesar to you. In plain dealing, Pompey, shall have you whipt. So, for this time, Pompey, in you well.

Clo. I thank your worship for your good counsel, but I shall follow it, as the flesh and fortune shall better determine.

Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade; The valiant heart's not whipt out of his trade. [Exit Escal. Come hither to me, master Elbow; come hither, master constable. How long have you been in this place of constable?

Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.

Escal. I thought by your* readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say, seven years together?

1 winter: in f. e 2 Altered by Malone to "should." 3 bay: in f. e 4 the: in f. e
Elb. And a half, sir.

Escal. Alas! he hath been great pains to you. They do you wrong to put you so oft upon 't. Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith, sir; few of any wit in such matters. As they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

Escal. Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house. Fare you well. [Exit Elbow.

What's o'clock, think you?

Just. Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you, home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio; but there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful: Mcery is not itself, that oft looks so; Pardon is still the nurse of second woe. But yet, poor Claudio!—There is no remedy.

Come, sir. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Another room in the Same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause: he will come straight. I'll tell him of you.

Prov. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know his pleasure; may be, he will relent. Alas! He hath but as offended in a dream; All sects, all ages smack of this vice; and he To die for it! [Exit Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter, provost?

Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?

Ang. Did I not tell thee yea? hast thou not order? Why dost thou ask again?

Prov. Last I might be too rash. Under your good correction, I have seen, When, after execution, judgment hath Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine: Do you your office, or give up your place, And you shall well be spair'd.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon. What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet? She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid And to be shortly of a sisterhood, If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant. See you the forniciress be remov'd: Let her have needful, but not lavish, means; There shall be order for it.

Enter Lucio and Isabella.

Prov. Save your honour! [Offering to go.

Ang. Stay a little while. [To Isab.] You are welcome: what's your will?

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour, Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. Well; what's your suit

Isab. There is a vice that most I do abhor, And most desire should meet the blow of just ce, For which I would not plead, but that I must; For which I must not plead, but that I am At war 'twixt will, and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die: I do beseech you, let it be his fault, And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside.] Heaven give thee moving graces

Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it? Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done. Mine were the very cipher of a function, To fine the faults, whose fine stands in record, And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just, but severe law! I had a brother then,—Heaven keep your honour! [Going Lucio. [To Isab.] Give 't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold: if you should need a pin, You could not with more tame a tongue desire it. To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs die?

Ang. Maidon, no remedy.

Isab. Yes: I do think that you might pardon him, And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy.

Ang. I will not do 't.

Isab. But can you, if you would?

Ang. Look; what I will not, that I cannot do, Isab. But might you do 't, and do the world no wrong?

If so your heart were touched with that remorse As mine is to him?

Ang. He's sentence'd: 't is too late.

Lucio. [To Isab.] Thou art! too cold.

Isab. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word, May call it back again: Well believe this, No ceremony that to great ones 'longs, Not the king's crown, nor the deputied sword, The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe, Become them with one half so good a grace As mercy does. If he had been as you, and you as he, You would have slipt like him; but he, like you, Would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, begone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency, And you were Isabel! should it then be thus? No; I would tell what 't were to be a judge And what a prisoner.

Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, touch him; there's the vein

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law, And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas! alas! Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once; And he that might the vantage best have took, Found out the remedy. How would you be, If he, which is the God of judgment, should But judge you as you are? O, think on that And mercy then will breathe within your lips Like man new made!

Ang. Be you content, sir, and I
It is the law, not I, condemns your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him: he must die to-morrow.

Isab. To-morrow? O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!
He's not prepar'd for death. Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season: shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink you?
Who is it that hath died for this offence?
There's many have committed it.

Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, well said.

Aug. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:
Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first one' that did th' edict infringe,
Had answered for his deed: now, 'tis awake;
Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils
Either new, or by remissness now-conv'rd,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But ere' they live to end.

Isab. Yet show some pity.

Aug. I show it most of all, when I show justice;
For then I pity those I do not know,
Which a dismissed offence would after gait,
And do him right, that answering one foul wrong,
Lives not to act another, be satisfied:
Your brother dies to-morrow; be content.

Isab. So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he that suffers. 'O! it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Lucio. [Aside.] That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder,
To jove himself does, Jove would never be quiet,
For every petting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder. Merciful heaven!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Splits the unvendgeable and grannared oak,
Than the soft invincible; but man, proud man!
Best in a brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
This glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep; who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

Lucio. [To Isab.] O, to him, to him, wench! He will relent:
He's coming; I perceive it.

Prov. [Aside.] Pray heaven, she win him!

Isab. You cannot weigh our brother with yourself:
Great men may jest with saints: 'tis with them,
But in the less soul profanation.

Lucio. [To Isab.] Thou 'rt in the right, girl: more o' that.

Isab. That in the captain's but a choleric word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

Lucio. [Aside.] Art advised o' that? more on it.

Aug. Why do you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,
Hath, yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice o' the top. Go to your bosom;
Knock there, and ask your heart, what doth know
That's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guiltiness, as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

Aug. [Aside.] She speaks, and 'tis such sense, that my sense breeds with it. [To her.] Fare you well.

Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back.

Aug. I will bethink me.—Come again to-morrow.

Isab. Hark, how I'll briebe you. Good my lord, turn back.

Isab. Ay, with such gifts, that heaven shall share

Lucio. [Aside.] You had marr'd all else.

Isab. Not with fond circles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rates are either rich or poor
As fancy values them; but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven; and enter there
Ere sun-rise: prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maidens, whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

Aug. Well; come to me to-morrow.

Lucio. [To Isab.] Go to; 'tis well: away!

For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.

Isab. At what hour to-morrow?

Aug. Shall I attend your lordship?

Isab. Save your honour!

[Exeunt Lucio, Isabella, and Provost.

Aug. From thee; even from thy virtue!—What's this? what's this? Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter, or the tempted, who sins most? Ha! Not she, nor doth she tempt; but it is I,
That lying by the violet in the sun,
Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough
Shall we desire to raise the sanctuary,
And pitch our offals there? O, fie, fie, fie!
What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her folly for those things
That make her good? O, let her brother live!
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. What! do I love her
That I desire to hear her speak again,
And feast upon her eyes? What is 't! I dream
Of cunning enemy, that to catch a sain:
With saints dest bait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth good us on
To sin in loving virtue. Never could the trumpet,
With all her double vigour, art and nature,
Oner stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdus me quite.—Even from youth till now
When men were fond, I smil'd, and wonder'd how.

SCENE III.—A Room in a Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost; so I think you are.

Prov. I am the provost. What's your will, good friar?

Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: do me the common right
To let me see them, and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.
Proe. I would do more than that, if more were needful.

Enter Juliet

Look; here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine, Who, falling in the flames of her own youth, Hath blister'd her report. She is with child, And he that got it, sentence—a young man More fit to do another such offence, Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?

Proe. As I do think, to-morrow.—

'To Juliet.] I have provided for you: stay a while, And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?

Juliet. I do, and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arrange your conscience, And try your penitence, if it be sound, Or hollowly put on.

Juliet. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offenceful act Was mutually committed?

Juliet. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Juliet. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but least you do repent, As that the sin hath brought you to this shame; Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven, Show'ring, we would not serve heaven, as we love it, But as we stand in fear.

Juliet. I do repent me, as it is an evil, And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest. Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow, And I am going with instruction to him.

Grace go with you! Beneficent!

[Exit.

Juliet. Must die to morrow! O, injurious love, That respires me a life, whose very comfort Is still a dying horror!

Proe. 'Tis pity of him. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words, Whilst my intention, hearing not my tongue, Anchors on Isabel: heaven in my mouth, As if I did but only chew his name, And in my heart the strong and swelling evil Of my conception. The state, whereon I studied, Is like a good thing, being often read, Grown scar and tedious; yea, my gravity, Wherein (let no man hear me) I take pride, Cont'd, with boot, change for an idle plum, Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form! How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit, Wrench away from fools, and tie the wiser souls To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood: Let's take good angel on the devil's horn, 'T is not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now! who's there?

Serv. One Isabel, a sister, Desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.

O heavens!

Why does my blood thus muster to my heart, Making it both unable for itself, And dispossessing all my other part Of necessary fitness?

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons; Come all to help him, and so stop the air By which he should revive: and even so The general, subject to a well-wish'd king, Quit their own path, and in obscure dress Crow'd to his presence, where their untold love Must needs appear offence.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid?

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.

Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me,

Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live

Isab. Even so.—Heaven keep your honour!

Ang. Yet may he live a while; and, it may be, As long as you, or I: yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?

Ang. Yea.

Isab. When I beseech you? that in his reprieve, Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted, That his soul sicken not.

Ang. Ha! Fie, these filthy vices! It were as good To pardon him, that hath from nature stolen A man already made, as to remit Their saucy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy Falsely to take away a life true made, As to put metal in restrained means,

To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

Ang. Say you so? then, I shall Jose you quickly.

Which had you rather, that the most just law Now take your brother's life, or to redeem him Give up your body to such sweet uncleaness As she that he hath stain'd?

Isab. Sir, believe this, I had rather give my body than my soul.

Ang. I talk not of your soul. Our compell'd sins Stand more for number than for attempt.

Isab. How say you?

Ang. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this:— I, now the voice of the recorded law, Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life: Might there not be a charity in sin, To save this brother's life?

Isab. Please you to do t,

I'll take it as a peril to my soul:

It is no sin at all, but charity.

Ang. Pleas'd you to do t, at peril of your soul, Were equal poise of sin and charity.

Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sin, Heaven, let me bear it! you granting of my suit, If that be sin, I'll make it my morn-prayer To have it added to the faults of mine, And nothing of your answer.

Ang. Nay, but hear me. Your sense pursues not mine: either you are ignorant Or seem to crafty; and that is no good.

Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good, But graciously to know I am no better.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So then, you hope of pardon from lord Angelo?

Claud. The miserable have

No other medicine, but only hope.

I have hope to live, and am prepar'd to die.

Duke. Be absolute for death; either death, or life,

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Claro! The miserable have

No other medicine, but only hope.

I have hope to live, and am prepar'd to die.

Duke. Be absolute for death; either death, or life,
Claud. Perpetual durance?

Isab. Ay, just; perpetual durance: a restraint,

Though all the world’s vastidity you had,

To a determin’d scope.

Claud. But in what nature?

Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to it,

Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear,

And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point.

Isab. O! I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,

Lest thou a feverous life wouldst entertain,

And six or seven winters more respect,

Than a perpetual honour. Darst thou die?

The sense of death is most in apprehension,

And the poor beetle, that we tread upon.

In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great

As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me thus shame?

Think you I can a resolution fetch

From flowery tenderness? If I must die,

I will encounter darkness as a bride,

And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There speaks my brother: there my father’s grave

Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die:

Thou art too noble to conserve a life

In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,

Whose settled visage and deliberate word

Nips youth i’ the head, and fellsies doth ennew

As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;

His监视 within being cast, he would appear

A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The priestly Angelo?

Isab. O, ’tis the cunning livery of hell,

The damned’st body to invest and cover

In priestly garb. Dost thou think, Claudio,

If I would yield him my virginity,

Thou might’st be freed?

Claud. O, heavens! it cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give’t thee from this rank offence,

So to offend him still. This night’s the time

That I should do what I abhor to name,

Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do’t.

Isab. O! were it but my life,

I’d throw it down for your deliverance

As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him,

That thus can make him bite the law by the nose,

When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin,

Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he being so wise,

Why would be for the momentary trick

Be perdurable find’?—O Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where,

To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;

This sensible warm motion to become

A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit

To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside

In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice:

To be imprison’d in the viewless winds,

And blown with restless violence round about

—III.

Shalt thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing

That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art,

Servile to all the skyey influences,

That do this habitation, where thou keepest,

Hourly afflict. Merely, thou art death’s fool;

For him thou labour’st by thy flight to shun,

And yet run’st toward him still: thou art not noble;

For all th’ accommodations that thou bear’st,

Are nurs’d by baseness: thou art by no means valiant;

For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork

Of a poor worm: thy best of rest is sleep,

And that thou oft provok’st, yet grossly fear’st

Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;

For thou exist’st on many a thousand grains

That issue out of dust: happy thou art not;

For what thou hast not, still thou strivest to get,

And what thou hast forgotten. Thou art not certain;

For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,

After the moon: if thou art rich, thou art poor;

For, like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,

Thou hast’st thy heavy riches but a journey;

And death unloads thee: friend hast thou none;

For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,

The mere reflection of thy tender loins,

Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,

For ending thee no sooner: thou hast not youth, nor age,

But, as it were, an after-dinner’s sleep,

Dreaming on both; for all thy boasted youth

Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms

Of pained eld: and when thou art old and rich,

Thou hast neither heat, afflication, limb, nor beauty,

To make thy riches pleasant. What’s yet in this,

That bears the name of life? Yet in this life

Lie hid more thousand deaths, yet death we fear,

That makes these odds all even.

Claud. I humbly thank you.

To sue to live. I find, I seek to die,

And, seeking death, find life: let it come on.

Isab. [Without.] What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company! [welcome.

Prov. Who’s there? come in: the wish deserves a

Enter ISABELLA.

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I’ll visit you again.

Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. Look, signior; here’s your sister.

Duke. Provost, a word with you.

Prov. As many as you please.

Duke. Bring me to hear them speak. Where I may be concealed. [Exit DUKE and PROVOST.

Claud. Now, sister, what’s the comfort?

Isab. Why, as all

Comforts are: most good, most good, indeed.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,

Intends you for his swift ambassador,

Where you shall be an everlasting liege;

Therefore, your best appointment make with speed:

To-morrow you set on.

Claud. Is there no remedy?

Isab. None, but such remedy as to save a head

To cleave a heart in twain.

Claud. But is there any?

Isab. Yes, brother, you may live;

There is a devilish mercy in the judge,

If you’ll implore it, that will free your life,

But better till death.

The weariest and most loathed worldly life,
That age, achen, penury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas! alas!

Claud. Sweet sister, let me live.

What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far,
That it becomes a virtue.

Isab. O, you beast!
O, faithless coward! O, dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?
Heaven shield, my mother play'd my father fair,
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Never issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance:
Die; perish! might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed.
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fie, fie, fie!

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd:
'T is best that thou diest quickly.

[Going.

Claud. O hear me, Isabella!]

Re-enter Duke.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister; but one word.

Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs, but I will attend you a while.

Duke. [To Claudio] Son, I have overheard what hath passed between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an essay of her virtue, to practise his judgment with the disposition of nature. She, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive: I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true: therefore, prepare yourself to death. Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible; to-morrow you must die. Go; to your knees, and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there; farewell. [Exit Claudio.

Re-enter Provost.

Provost, a word with you.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone.

Leave me awhile with the maid: my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good; the goodness that is chief in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexon, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault, that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. I am now going to resolve him. I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. But O, how much is the good Duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss; yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation: he made trial of you only.—Therefore, fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit, redeem your brother from the anger law, do no stain to your own gracious person, an much please the absent duke, if, peradventure, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak farther. I have spirit to do anything that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick, the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. Her should this Angelo have married; he was affianced to her by oath, and the mutual appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that peril'd vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befall the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her combative husband, this well-seeing Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour; in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake, and he, as marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—But how out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo: answer his requiring with a plausible obedience: agree with his demands to the point; only refer vourself to the advantage;—first, that your stay with him may not be long, that the time may have all shadow and silence in it, and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course, and now follows all: we shall advise this wronged maid to stand up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense; and here by this is your brother saved, your honour untainted the poor Mariana advantaged, and the contract duly sealed. The maid will I frame an i make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this, as

1 Wildness uncorrected. chesp in f. e 2 Contracted you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already, and, I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the meated grange, resides this deceased Mariana: at that place call upon me, and despatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, o' father. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The Street before the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar; to him Elbow, Clown and Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O, heavens! what stuff is here?

Clo. I was never merry world, since of two usances, the merriest was put down, and the worse allow'd; by order of law a fur'd gown to keep him warm; and fur'd with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir.—Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law; and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah: a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou causest to be done, that is thy means to live. Do thou but think what 'tis to cram a mad, or clothe a back, from such a filthy vice: say to thyself from their abominable and beastly touches I drink, I eat, array myself, and live. Canst thou believe thy living is a life, so stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Clo. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove—

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin, thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer: Correction and instruction must both work, ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning. The deputy cannot abide a whoreson— he be a whoreson, and comes before him, he were as good a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, from our faults, as faults from seeming, free!

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His neck will come to your waist, a cord, sir.

Clo. I say comfort: I cry, bail. Here's a gentleman and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pyramus's images, newly made woman, to be had now; for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutched? What reply? Ha! What say'st thou to this tune, mattock, and method? Is 't not drown'd? the last rain? Ha! What say'st thou, troth? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words, or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus and thus: still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Procures she still? Ha!

Clo. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her best, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, it is good; it is the right of it; it must be so: ever your fresh whore, and your powder'd bawd, an unmatch'd consequence; it must be so. Art going to prison, Pompey?

Clo. Yes, faith, sir.

Lucio. Why, 'tis not amiss, Pompey. Farewell. Go; say, I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey, or how?

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then imprison him. If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right: bawd is he, doubtless, and of antiquity too; bawd-born. Farewell, good Pompey: commend me to the prison, Pompey. You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Clo. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed. Will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more. Adieu, trusty Pompey.—Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha!

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Clo. You will not bail me, then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey, nor now.—What news abroad, friar? What news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

Lucio. Go; to kennel, Pompey, go.

Exeunt Elbow; Clown and Officers.

What news, friar, of the duke?

Duke. I know none. Can you tell me of any?

Lucio. Some say, he is with the emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: but where's he, think you?

Duke. I know not where; but wheresover I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him, to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never-born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence: he puts transgression to 't.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too crabbed that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of great kindred: it is well allied; but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say, this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation: is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Lucio. Some report, a sea-maid spawned him; some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes; but it is certain, that when he makes water, his duke is coagul'd ice; that I know to be true; and he is a motion ingenerative, that's inoffiable.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir, and speak apace.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cod-piece to take away the life of a man? Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport: he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women: he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O, sir! you are deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who? not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty: and his use was, to put a ducat in her crack-dish. The duke had crochets in him: he would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his. A shy fellow was the duke; and, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What? I pr'ythee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No,—pardon:—'tis a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips; but this I can let you understand,—the greater life of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise? why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweaging fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: the very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore, you speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, (as our prayers are here,) let me desire you to make your answer before him: if it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it. I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name.

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O! you hope the duke will return no more, or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm; you 'll forswear this again.

Lucio. I 'll be hanged first: thou art deceived in me, friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell, if Claudio die to-morrow, or no?

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Lucio. Why? for filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I would, the duke, we talk of, were return'd again: this ungeniuit'd agent will unpeople the province with consti- nuency; sparrows must not build in his house-caves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answer'd; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Merry, this Claudio is condemn'd for untrussing. Farewell, good friar; I pr'ythee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic: say, that I said so. Farewell.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality Can eunoure'scope: back-wounding calumny The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong, Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here?

Enter Escalus, Provost, Bawd, and Officers.

Escal. Go away with her to prison!

Bawd. Good, my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man: good my lord.

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind? This would make mercy swear and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour.

Bawd. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keep-down was with child by him in the duke's time: he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob. I have kept it myself, and see how he goes about to abuse me!

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much licence:—let him be called before us.—Away with her to prison! Go to; no more words. [Exeunt Bawd and Officers; Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd; Claudi must die to-morrow. Let him be furnished with divines and have all charitable preparation: if my brother brought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Prov. So please you, this sinner hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father.

Duke. Bliss and goodness on you.

Escal. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now To use it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious order, late come from the See, In special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad? is the world?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking, there is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure, but security enough to make fellowships assured. Much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to?

Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which professed to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous, and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice; yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life, which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die.

Escal. You have paid the heavens the due of your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman to the extremest shore of my modesty; but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him, he is indeed—justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the strictness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself. Well. Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you

SCENE I.—A Room in the moated Grange.

MARIANA discovered sitting: a Boy singing.

SONG.

Take, O! take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morrow:
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal’d in vain.

MARI. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away:
Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still’d my brawling discontent.—

[Exeunt Boy.

Enter DUKE.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
My mirth it much displeas’d, but pleas’d my woe.

DUKE. ‘Tis good; though music oft hath such a charm,
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

MARI. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Enter ISABELLA.

DUKE. I do constantly believe you.—The time is come, even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

MARI. I am always bound to you.—

[Exit.

DUKE. Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy?

ISAB. He hath a garden circummur’d with brick, whose western side is with a vineyard back’d; and to that vineyard is a planched gate, that makes his opening with this bigger key: this other doth command a little door, which from the vineyard to the garden leads; there have I made my promise upon the heavy middle of the night to call upon him.

DUKE. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

ISAB. O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
How may likeness, made in crimes,
Masking practice on the times,
Draw with idle spiders’ strings
Most pond’rous and substantial things;
Craft against vice I must apply
With Angelo to-night shall lie
His old betrothed, but despised:
So disguise shall, by the disguised,
Pay with falsehood false exacting,
And perform an old contracting.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

ISAB. I have ta’en a due and wary note upon’t;
With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o’er.

DUKE. Are there no other tokens
Between you ’greed, concerning her observance?

ISAB. No, none, but only a repair to the dark;
And that I have possess’d him my most stay.
Can be but brief: for I have made him know,
I have a servant comes with me along;
That stays upon me; whose persuasion is,
I come about my brother.

DUKE. ’Tis well borne up.
I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this.—What, ho! within! come forth

Re-Enter MARIANA.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid:
She comes to do you good.

ISAB. I do desire the like.

DUKE. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?

MARI. Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.

DUKE. Take then this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ear.
I shall attend your leisure: but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.

MARI. Will ’t please you walk aside?

[Exeunt MARIANA and ISABELLA.

DUKE. O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee. Volumes of report
Run with base, false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies!

Re-Enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Welcome! How agreed!

ISAB. She ’ll take the enterprise upon her, father.
If you advise it.

DUKE. It is not my consent,
But my entreaty too.

ISAB. Little have you to say,
When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
“Remember now my brother.”

MARI. Fear me not.

DUKE. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all
He is your husband on a pre-contract
To bring you thus together, ’tis no sin

1 and virtue go; in L. e. 2 Making: in L. e. 3 This song is found in Beaumont and Fletcher’s Bloody Brother, Act V., Sc. II. with a second stanza, as follows. It is attributed to Shakespeare in the spurious Ed. of his Poems, printed in 1649.

Hide, oh, hide these hills of snow,
Which thy free-born bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears;
But first set up my heart free,
Bound in thy chains by thee.

SCENE II.  MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go:
Our corn's to reap, yet our field's, to sow \[Exeunt.\]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Provost and Clown.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

Clo. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir; leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your grives; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unplied whipping, for you have been a notorious bawd.

Clo. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What ho, Abhor! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you: he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? Fie upon him! he will discredit our mystery.

Prov. Go to; sir; you weigh equally: a feather will turn the scale. \[Exit.\]

Clo. Pray, sir, by your good favour, (for, surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,) do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery. Clo. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery; but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Clo. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Clo. If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so, every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Are you agreed?

Clo. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd: he doth offer ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah. provide your block and your ax to-morrow, four o'clock.

Abhor. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade: follow.

Clo. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare; for, truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio: [Exeunt Clown and Abhorson.]

Th' one has my pity; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine? Claudio. As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labour,
When it lies starkly\[in the traveller's bones: He will not awake.

Prov. Who can do good on him?

Well, go; prepare yourself. But hark! what noise \[Knocking within.\]

Heaven give your spirits comfort! —By and by:— \[Exit Claudio.\]

I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve.

For the most gentle Claudio—Welcome, father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night Envelop you, good provost! Who call'd here of late? Prov. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. There will then, ere 't be long.

Prov. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so: his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice.
He doth with holy abstinencc subdue
That in himself, which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he mead'd with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous:

[Knocking within. But this being so, he's just. —Now are they come.— \[Exit Provost.\]

This is a gentle provost: seldom, when
The steelcd gaoler is the friend of men. \[Knocking How now? What noise? That spirit's possessed with haste,
That wounds the resisting postern with these strokes. \[Re-enter Provost.\]

Prov. [Speaking to one at the door.] There he must stay, until the officer Arose to let him in: he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?

Prov. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.

Prov. Happily, You something know; yet, I believe, there comes
No countermand: no such example have we.

Besides, upon the very siege of justice,
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.

Duke. This is his lordship's man.\[Prov. And here comes Claudio's pardon\]

Mes. My lord hath sent you this note; [giving paper] and by me this further charge, that you swerv not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morning, for, as I take it, it is almost day.

Prov. I shall obey him. \[Exit Messenger.\]

Duke. This is his pardon; purchase'd by such an,
A' rude
For which the pardoners himself is in :
Hence hath offended his quick celerity,
When it is born in high authority.

Knight gives this speech to the Provost, and the next to the Duke.
When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended, That for the fault's love is th' offender friend'd,—
Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you; Lord Angelo, like thinking me,
Remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwont'd
Putting on; methinks strangely, for he hath not used
It before.

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Prov. [Reads.] "Whatsoever you may hear to the Contra, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock:
And, in the afternoon, Barnardine. For my better satis-Faction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five.
Let this be duly perform'd; with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril."—
What say you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born; but here nursed up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it, that the absent Duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him? I have heard, it was ever his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrought reprieves for him:
and, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtful proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison?
How seems he to be touch'd?

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come: insensible of mortality, and de-perately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none. He hath evermore had the liberty of the prison: give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awaked him, as it to carry him to execution, and show'd him a seeming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beggars me; but in the boldness of my cunning I will lay myself in hazard.
Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law, than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite, for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you: if my instructions may be your guide, let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

Duke. O! death's a great disguise, and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say, it was the desire of the penitent to be so bare'd before his death; you know, the course is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father: it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the Duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the Duke avouch the justice of your doing.

Prov. But what likelihood is in that? Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my countenance, or my persuasion, can with ease attempt you, I will go farther than I meant to pluck all fears out of you.
Look you, sir; here is the hand and seal of the Duke:
you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the Duke: you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure, where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not, for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor; perchance, of the Duke's death; perchance, entering into some monastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd.
Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shroud, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed, but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter Clown.

Clo. I am as well acquainted here, as I was in our house of profession: one would think, it were mistress Over-done's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Mr. Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger,¹ ninescore and seventeen pence, of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then, ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Mr. Caper, at the suit of master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-colour'd satin, which now penches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dey, and young Mr. Deep-vow, and Mr.
Copper-spur, and Mr. Starve-lackey, the rapier and dagger-man, and young Drop-her that kill'd Lusty Pudding, and Mr. Forthright the tilter, and brave Mr.
Shoetie the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stabb'd Potts, and I, think forty more, all great doors in our trade, and are now in² for the Lord's sake.³

Enter Adhorson.

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Mr. Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd,¹
Mr. Barnardine.

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine!

Barnar. [Within.] A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

Clo. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be a good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Barnar. [Within.] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

Abhor. Tell him, he must awake, and that quickly too.

Clo. Pray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

¹ It was a custom of usurers to compel borrowers to take part of the sum advanced to them in goods, often of little real value. ² Not in f. ³ Imprisoned debtors used to beg from the jail windows, "for the Lord's sake."
Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.
Clo. He is coming, sir, he is coming: I hear his straw rustle.

Enter Barnardine.

Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?
Clo. Very ready, sir. [you?]
Barnar. How now, Abhorson? what's the news with Abhor?
Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into our prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

Barnar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night: I am not fitted for it.
Clo. O! the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abhor. Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father. Do we jest now, think you?
Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you. comfort you, and pray with you.
Barnar. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets. I will not consent to die this day; that's certain.

Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech you, Look forward on the journey you shall go.

Barnar. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Duke. But hear you.--
Barnar. Not a word: if you have anything to say to me, come to my ward; for then I will not to-day.

[Exit.]

Enter Provost.

Duke. Unfit to live, or die. O, grovelling beast!—
After him, fellows: bring him to the block.

[Exit Abhorson and Clown.]

Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?
Duke. A creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;
And, to transport him in the mind he is,
Were damnable.

Prov. Here in the prison, father,
There died this morning of a cruel fever
One Ragonize, a most notorious pirate,
A man of Claudio's years: his beard and head,
Just of his colour. What if we do omit
This reproach, till he were well includ'd,
And satisfy the deputy with the visage
Of Ragonize, more like to Claudio?

Duke. O, is an accident that heaven provides!
Despatch it presently: the hour draws on Prefixed by Angelo. See, this he done,
And sent according to command, whilsts I
Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done good father, presently.

But Barnardine must die this afternoon;
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To save me from the danger that might come,
If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done.—Put them in secret holds Both Barnardine and Claudio;
Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting
To yonder generation, you shall find
Your safety manifest.

[Exit Provost.]

Prov. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, despatch, and send the head to Angelo.

[Exit Provost.]

Now will I write letters to Angelo,
(The provost, he shall bear them) whose contents
Shall witness to him, I am near at home,
And that by great injunctions I am bound
To enter publicly: him I'll desire
To meet me at the consecrated font,
A league below the city; and from thence,
By cold gradation and well balance'd form,*
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-Enter Provost.

Prov. Here is the head: I'll carry it myself.

Duke. Convenient is it. Make a swift return,
For I would commune with you of such things,
That want no ear but yours.

Prov. [Exit.

Isab. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here!

Duke. The tongue of Isabel.—She come to know,
If yet her brother's pardon be come hither,
But I will keep her ignorant of her good.
To make her heavenly comforts of despair,
When it is least expected.

[Enter Isabel].

Isab. Ho! by your leave.

Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

Isab. The better given me by so holy a man.

Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabel, from the world
His head is off and sent to Angelo.

Isab. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other. [Catch me not.]

Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.

Isab. O! I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.

Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel!

Perjurious world! Most damned Angelo!

Duke. This not hurts him, nor profits you a jot:

Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.

Mark what I say to you,* which you shall find
By every syllable a faithful verity.

The duke comes home to-morrow; nay, dry your eyes
One of our conven't, and his confessors,
Gives me this instance. Already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo,
Who do to prepare to meet him at the gates,
There to give up their power. If you can, pace you Wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go
And you shall have your bosom on this this wretch
Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,
And general honour.

Isab. I am directed by you.

Duke. This letter, then, to friar Peter give:
'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return:
Say, by this token, I desire his company
At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause, and you,
I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you
Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home. And home. For my poor self,
I am confined by a sacred vow,
And shall be absent. Wed you with this letter.

Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart; trust not my holy order,
If I pervert your course.—Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even.

Friar, where is the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.
Lucio. O, pretty Isabella! I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red; thou must be patient. I am faint to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly: one fruitful meal would set me to't. But, they say, the duke will be here to morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother; if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him or.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well. [Going.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee. I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes; marry, did I; but I was faint to forswear it: they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well. [Going.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end. If bawdy talk offend you, we shall have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr; I shall stick. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouch'd other.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven His wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and re-deliver Our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we Proclaim it an hour before his entering, That if any crave redress of injustice, They should exhibit their petitions In the street?

Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a despatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, Which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed: Betimes 'tis the morn, I'll call you at your house. Give notice of such men of sort and suit, As are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir: fare you well. [Exit.

Ang. Good night. —

his deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant, And dull to all proceedings. A deflowered maid, And by an eminent body, that enforc'd The law against it — But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares her no;

For my authority bears such a credent bulk
That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have tal'en revenge,
For so receiving a dishonour'd life
With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had liv'd
Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right: we would, and we would not. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Fields without the Town.

Enter Duke, in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me. [Giving them.
The provost knows our purpose, and our plot. The matter being afoot, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to our special drift.

Though sometimes you do bleach1 from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius' house, And tell him where I stay: give the like notice Unto Valens, Rowland, and to Grassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate; But send me Flavius first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well. [Exit Peter

Enter Varris.

Duke. I thank thee, Varris; thou hast made good haste.

Come, we will walk: there's ether of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varris. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Street near the City Gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am loth: I would say the truth; but to accuse him so, That is your part; yet I'm advis'd to do it, He says, to 'vaiful2 purpose.

Mari. Be rul'd by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me, that if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side, I should not think it strange; for it's a physic, That 's bitter to sweet end.

Mari. I would, friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace! the friar is come

Enter Friar Peter.

F. Peter. Come; I have found you out a stand most fit, Where you may have such vantage on the duke, He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded: The generous and gravest citizens Have hent the gates, and very near upon The duke is ent'ren: therefore hence, away. [Exit

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A public place near the City Gate.

Mariana, (well'd.) Isabella and Peter, at a distance. Enter at several doors, Duke, Varris, Lords; Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost, Officers and Citizens.

Duke. My very worthy counsin, fairly met. —

Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. and Escal. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both. We have made inquiry of you; and we hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul

CANNOT but yield you forth to public thanks,
For running more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.
Duke. O! your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it,
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom.
When it deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence 'gainst the tooth of time,
And rancor of oblivion. Give me your hand,
And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward courtesies would fain proclaim
Favours that keep within.—Come. Escalus;
You must walk by us on our other hand,
And good supporters are you.

Friar Peter and Isabella come forward.
F Peter. Now is your time. Speak loud, and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard
Upon a wrong'd. I would fain have said, a maid!
O worthy prince! dishonour not your eye,
By throwing it on any other object,
Till you have heard me in my true complaint,
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice:
Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O, worthy duke! [Rising.]
You bid me seek redemption of the devil.
Hear me yourself: for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O, hear, me, here!

Ang. My lord, her wigs, I fear me, are not firm:
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
Cut off by course of justice.

Isab. By course of justice! [Rising.]
Ang. And she will speak most bitterly, and strangely.
Isab. Most strangely, yet most truly, will I speak.
That Angelo's forsworn, is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterer thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator,
Is it not strange, and strange?

Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.
Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo,
Than this is all as true as it is strange:
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To th' end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her.—Poor soul!
She speaks this th' infirmity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st
There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that observation
That I am touch'd with madness; make not impossible
That which but seems unlike. 'Tis not impossible,
But one, the wicked'st curst on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo: even so may Angelo,
In all his dressing, characts, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince.
If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty,
If she be mad, as I believe no other,
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense.
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O, gracious duke!
Harp not on that: nor do not banish reason
For incredulity: but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear, where it seems hid,
And hide the false seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad
Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would you say?

Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemn'd upon the act of fornication
To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo.
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio.
As then the messenger.—

Lucio. That's I, and like your grace
I came to her from Claudio, and desir'd her
To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo,
For her poor brother's pardon.

Duke. That's he, indeed.

Isab. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord.
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then,
Pray you, take note of it; and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to it.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.

Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right: but you are in the wrong
To speak before your time.—Proceed.

Isab. I went
To this pernicious, cutif'd deputy.

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it:
The phrase is to the matter.

Isab. In brief,—to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he resolv'd me, and how I reply'd,
(For this was of much length) the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter.
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his unconscionable intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and, after much debate,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. But the next morn betimes,
His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely.

Isab. O, that it were as like, as it is true!

Duke. By heaven, fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour,
In hateful practice. First, his integrity
Stands without blemish: next, it imports no reason.
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended,
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself.
And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you on;
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou cam'st here to complain.

Isab. And is this all?

Then, O! you blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience; and, with ripen'd time,
Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up
In countenance!—Heaven shield your grace from woe.
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbeliev'd go!

Duke. I know, you'd fain be gone.—An officer!
To prison with her.—Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent, and coming hither?
Isab. One that I would were here, friar Lodowick.
Duke. A ghostly father, belike.—Who knows that Lodowick?
Lucio. My lord, I know him: 'tis a meddling friar:
I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace,
In your retirement, I had swung him soundly.
Duke. Words against me? This a good friar, belike.
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute!—Let this friar be freed.
Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar Saw them at the prison. A saucy friar,
A very scurvy fellow.

F. Peter. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abus'd. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her,
As she from one ungot.

Duke. We did believe no less.
Know you that friar Lodowick, that she speaks of?
F. Peter. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my truth, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misrepresent your grace.
Lucio. My lord, most villainously: believe it.
F. Peter. Well; he in time may come to clear himself,
But at this instant he is sick, my lord,
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended against lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true, and false; and what he with his oath,
And all probation, will make up full clear.
Whosoever he's convert'd. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accus'd,
Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.

Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.

[Isabella is carried off guarded; and Mariana comes forward.

Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo?
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!—
Give us some seats.—Come, cousin Angelo,
In this I'll be impartial: be ye judge
Of your own cause.—Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face, and after speak.

M. Pardon, my lord, I will not show my face,
Until my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?

M. No, my lord.

Duke. Are you a maid?

M. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow, then?

M. Neither, my lord.

Duke. Why, you are nothing then: neither, maid, widow, nor wife?

Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow: I would, he had some cause To prattle for himself.

* trust: in e 2 Im, that is, very partial; a common use of the prefix 3 Summer-house. 4 Not in f o 5 Senseless.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Wert testimonies against his worth and credit,
That's sealed in a probation? — You, lord Escalus,
Sit with my cousin: lend him your kind pains
To find out this abuse, whence 't is deriv'd.

There is another friar that set them on;
Let him be sent for.

F. Peter. Would he were here, my lord; for he,
Indeed,
Hath set the women on to this complaint.
Your provost knows the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best,
In any chastisement: I for a while
Will leave you; but stir not you, till you have well
Determined upon those slanderers. — [Exit Duke.

Escal. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly. — Signior
Lucio, did not you say, you knew that friar Lodowick
To be a dishonest person?

Lucio. Tis called, facit monachum: honest in nothing, but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.

Escal. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against you. We shall find this friar a notable fellow.

Lucio. As any in Vienna, on my word.
Escal. Call that same Isabel here once again: [To Attendant.] I would speak with her. Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question: you shall see how I'll handle her.

Lucio. Not better than he, by her own report.

Escal. Say you?

Lucio. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly she'll be ashamed.

Re-enter Officers, with Isabella: the Duke, in a Friar's habit, and Provost.

Lucio. I will go darkly to work with her.

Escal. That's the way; for women are light at midnight.

Lucio. Come on, mistress. [To Isabella.] Here's a g gentlemadam denies all that you have said.

Lucio. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of;
here, with the provost.

Lucio. In very good time: speak not you to him, till we call upon you.

Lucio. Mum.

Escal. Come, sir. Did you set these women on to slander lord Angelo? they have confess'd you did.

Duke. 'Tis false.

Escal. How! know you where you are?

Duke. Respect to your great place! then let the devil be sometime honour'd for his burning throne. —

Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me speak.

Escal. The duke's in us, and we will hear you speak:
Look, you speak justly.

Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox?
Good night to your redress. Is the duke gone?
Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust,
Thus to reject your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
Which here you come to accuse.

Lucio. This is the rascal: this is he I spoke of.

Escal. Why, thou unrevenged and unhallowed friar!
Is't not enough, thou hast suborn'd these women to accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain? And then to glance from him
To the duke himself, to tax him with injustice? —
Take him hence; to the rack with him. — Will you take Joint by joint, but we will know your purpose —

What! unjust?

Duke. Be not so hot: the duke dare
No more stretch this finger of mine, than he Dare rack his own; his subject am I not,
Nor here provincial. My business in this state
Made me a looker-on here in Vienna.
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew: laws for all faults,
But faults so countenanced, that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.

Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison.

Ang. What can you vouch against him, signior Lucio?

Is this the man that you did tell us of?

Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord. — Come hither, goodman baldapate: do you know me?

Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison in the absence of the duke.

Lucio. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

Duke. Most notably, sir.

Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him: and much more, much worse.

Lucio. O, then damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest, I love the duke as I love myself.

Ang. Hark how the villain would groze now, after his treasonable abuses.

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd with: —
Away with him to prison. — Where is the provost? — Away with him to prison. Lay bolts enough upon him, let him speak no more. — Away with those giglats too, and with the other confederate companion.

Duke. Stay, sir; stay a while.

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; foh! sir Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hand'd an hour. Will't not off?

[Duke. Thou art the first knave, that e'er made a duke. — [All start and stand.

First, provost, let me hail these gentle three.
Sneak not away, sir; [To Lucio.] for the friar and you Must have a word anon. — Lay hold on him.

Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.

Duke. What you have spoke, I pardon: sit you down.

[To Escalus.

We'll borrow place of him: — Sir, by your leave.

[To Angelo.

Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence,
That yet can do thee office? If thou hast,
Rely upon it till my tale be heard,
And hold no longer out.

Ang. O, my dread lord! I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be undiscernible, When I perceive your grace, like power divine. Hath look’d upon my passes. Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana. Say, was’t thou e’er contracted to this woman? Ang. I was, my lord. Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly. Do you the office, friar; which consume, Return him here again. — Go with him, provost. [Exit Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost. Escal. My lord, I am more amaz’d at his dishonour, Than at the strangeness of it.

Duke. Come hither, Isabel. Your friar is now your prince: as I was then Advertising and holy to your business, Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney’d at your service.

Isab. O, give me pardon, That I, your vassal, have employ’d and pain’d Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke. You are pardon’d, Isabel: And now, dear maid, be you as free to us. Your brother’s death, I know, sits at your heart; And you may marvel, why I overlook’d myself. Labouring to save his life, and would not rather Make rash demonstration of my hidden power, Than let him so be lost. O, most kind maid! It was the swift celerity of his death, Which I did think with slower foot came on, That brain’d my purpose: but all peace be with him! That life is better life, past fearing death, Than that which lives to fear. Make it your comfort, So happy is your brother.

Re-enter Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost. Isab. I do, my lord. Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here, Whose slate imagination yet hath wrought, Your well-defended honour, you must pardon For Mariana’s sake. But, as he adjudg’d your brother, (Being criminal, in double violation Of sacred chastity, and of promise-break, Thereon dependent, for your brother’s life,) The very mercy of the law cries out

Most audible, even from his proper tongue. “An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!” Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure, Like doth quail like, and Measure still for Measure. Then, Angelo, thy fault’s thus manifested, Which, though thou would’st deny, denies thee vantage. We do condemn thee to the very block Where Claudio stoop’d to death, and with like haste — Away with him.

Mari. O, my most gracious lord! I hope you will not mock me with a husband.

Duke. It is your husband mock’d you with a husband, Consenting to the safeguard of your honour, I thought your marriage fit; else imputation. For that he knew you, might reproach your life, And chuse your good to come. For his possessions Although by confiscation they are ours, We do instate and widow you withal, To buy you a better husband.

Mari. O, my dear lord, I crave no other, nor no better man. Duke. Never crave him: we are definitive.

Mari. Gentle my liege,— [Kneeling

Duke. You do but lose your labour. Away with him to death. — Now, sir, [To Lucio.] to you. Mari. O, my good lord! — Sweet Isabel, take my part; Lend me your knees, and all my life to come, I’ll lend you all my life to do you service.

Duke. Against all sense you do importune her: Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact, Her brother’s ghost his paved bed would break. And take her hence in horror.

Mari. Isabel, Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me: Hold up your hands, say nothing, I’ll speak all. They say, best men are mou’d out of faults. And, for the most, become much more the better For being a little bad: so may my husband. O, Isabel! will you not lend a knee? Duke. He dies for Claudio’s death. Isab. Most bounteous sir, [Kneeling Look, if it please you, on this man condemn’d, As if my brother liv’d. I partly think, A due sincerity govern’d his deeds, Till he did look on me: since it is so, Let him not die. My brother had but justice, In that he did the thing for which he died: For Angelo, His act did not o’ertake his bad intent; And must be buri’d but as an intent That perish’d by the way. Thoughts are no subjects, Intents but merely thoughts.

Mari. Merely, my lord.

Duke. Your suit’s unprofitable: stand up, I say.— [They rise.

I have bethought me of another fault.— Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded At an unusual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed? Prov. No, my good lord: it was by private message. Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office: Give up your keys.

Prov. Pardon me, noble lord: I thought it was a fault, but knew it not, Yet did repent me, after more advice: For testimony whereof, one in the prison, That should by private order else have died, I have reserv’d alive.

Duke. What’s he? Prov. His name is Barnardine. Duke. I would thou hadst done so by Claudio.— Go, fetch him hither: let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost. Escal. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise As you, lord Angelo, have still appear’d, Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood, And lack of temper’d judgment afterward. Ang. I am sorry that such sorrow I procure; And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart, That I crave death more willingly than mercy: 'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provost, Barnardine, Claudio (muffled), and Juliet.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Prov. This, my lord

Duke. There was a friar told me of this man.— Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprel ends no farther than this world,
And squarst thy life according. Thou rt condemned;
But, for these earthly faults, I quit them all,
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide
For better times to come.—Friar, advise him:
I leave him to your hand.—What muffled fellow's that?
Prov. This is another prisoner that I sav'd,
That should have died when Claudio lost his head,
As like almost to Claudio as himself. [Unmuffles him.
Duke. If he be like your brother, [To Isabella,
for his sake,
Claudio and Isabella embrace.]'
Is he pardon'd; and for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine.
He is my brother too. But fitter time for that.
By this lord Angelo perceives he's safe:
Methinks, I see a quick'ning in his eye.—
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well
Look that you love your wife; her worth, worth yours.—
I find an apt remission in myself,
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.—
You, sirrah, [To Lucio.] that knew me for a fool, a coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman:
Wherein have I so well deserv'd of you,
That you extol me thus?
Lucio. 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipp'd.
Duke. Whipp'd first, sir, and hang'd after.—
Proclaim it, provost, round about the city,
If any woman is wrong'd by this lewd fellow,

(As I have heard him swear himself there's one Whom he begot with child.) let her appear,
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipp'd and hang'd.
Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore! Your highness said even now I made you a duke: good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold.
Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits.—Take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.
Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.
Duke. Standing a prince deserves it.—
She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore —
Joy to you, Mariana!—love her, Angelo:
I have confess'd her, and I know her virtue.—
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness:
There's more behind that is more gratulate.
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place.—
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's;
Th' offence pardons itself.—Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good;
Whereeto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.—
So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

SCENE: Ephesus.

ACT I.

Enter Solinus, Duke of Ephesus, Ægeon, a Merchant of Syracuse, Jailor, Officers, and other Attendants.

Duke. Proceed, Solinus, to procure my fall,
And by the doom of death end woes and all.
Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more.
I am not partial, to infringe our laws.
The enmity and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—
Who, wanting gilders to redeem their lives,
Have seal'd his rigorous statutes with their bloods,—
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
Twixt thy sedition countrypeoples and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusians and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more, if any, born at Ephesus,
Be seen at Syracusan marts and fairs;
Again, if any Syracusan born
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies;
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.
The substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore, by law thou art condemn'd to die.

Ægeon. Yet this my comfort; when your words are done,
My woes end likewise with the evening sun.

Duke. Well, Syracusan; say, in brief, the cause
Why thou departest thy native home,
And for what cause thou canst not to Ephesus.

Ægeon. A heavier task could not have been impos'd,
Than I to speak my griefs unspeakable;
Yet, that the world may witness, that my end
Was wrought by fortune, not by vile offence,
I'lt utter what my sorrow gives me leave.

1 nature: in f. e. 2 Malone makes a separate line of the last three words. 3 gladly.
And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us.
My wife, more careful for the latter-born,
Had fasten’d him unto a small spare mast,
Such as sea-faring men provide for storms:
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.
The children thus disposed, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix’d,
Fasten’d ourselves at either end the mast;
And floating straight, obedient to the stream,
Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought.

At length the sun, gazing upon the earth,
Dispers’d those vapoours that offended us,
And by the benefit of his wish’d light
The seas wax’d calm, and we discovered
Two ships from far making amain to us;
Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this:
But ere they came,—O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.

_Duke._ Nay, forward, old man; do not break off so.
For we may pity, though not pardon thee.

Æge. O, had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthy term’d them merciless to us!
For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter’d by a mighty rock,
Which being violently borne upon,
Our helpful ship was splitted in the midst;
So that in this unjust divorce of us
Fortune had left to both of us alike
What to delight in, what to sorrow for.
Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind,
And in our sight they three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length another ship had seized on us;
And knowing whom it was their hap to save,
Gave healthful welcome to their shipwreck’d guests;
And would have rest the fishers of their prey,
Had not their bark been very slow of sail,
And therefore homeward did they bend their course.—
Thus have you heard me sever’d from my bliss,
And by misfortune was my life prolong’d,
To tell sad stories of my own mishaps.

_Duke._ And, for the sake of them thou sorrowest for,
Do me the favour to dilate at full
What hath befall’n of them, and thee, till now.

Æge. My youngest boy, and yet my eldest care.
At eighteen years became inquisitive
After his brother; and importun’d me,
That his attendant (so his case was like,
Rest of his brother, but retain’d his name,) Might bear him company in the quest of him; Whom whilst he laboured of all love to see, I hazarded the loss of whom I lov’d.
Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia; And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus,
Hopeless to find, yet loth to leave unsought
Or that, or any place that harbours men. But here must end the story of my life; And happy were I in my timely death, Could all my travels warrant me they live.

_Duke._ Helpless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark’d.
To bear the extremity of dire mishap!
Now, trust me, were it not against our laws,
Against my crown, my oath, my dignity, Which princes would they, may not transgress,
My soul should sue as advocate for thee.

But though thou art adjudged to the death,
And passed sentence may not be recall’d,
But to our honour’s great disparagement,
Yet will I favour thee in what I can:
Therefore, merchant, I’ll limit thee this day,
To seek thy hope5 by beneficial help.
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus;
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum,
And live; if no, then thou art doom’d to die.—
Jailor, now take him to thy custody.
_Jail._ I will, my lord.
Æge. Hopeless, and helpless, doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end.

_SCENE II._—A public Place.

_Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse, and a Merchant._

_Mer._ Therefore, give out you are of Epidamnum,
Lest that your goods too soon be confiscate.
This very day, a Syracusan merchant
Is apprehended for arrival here;
And, not being able to buy out his life
According to the statute of the town,
Dies ere the weary sun set in the west.
There is your money that I had to keep.

_Ant. S._ Go, bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
And stay there; Dromio, will I come to thee.
Within this hour it will be dinner-time;
Till then, I’ll view the manners of the town,
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then return and sleep within mine inn,
For with long travel I am still and weary.
Get thee away.

_Dro. S._ Many a man would take you at your word,
And go indeed, having so good a mean.

_[Exit, shaking money-bag._

_Ant. S._ A trusty villain, sir; that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
What, will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn, and dine with me?

_Mer._ I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. Soon® at five o’clock.
Please you, I’ll meet with you upon the mart,
And afterwards consort you till bed-time:
My present business calls me from you now.

_Ant. S._ Farewell till then. I will go lose myself.
And wander up and down to view the city.

_Mer._ Sir, I commend you to your own content.

_[Exit._

_Ant. S._ He that commends me to mine own content, Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
I to the world am like a drop of water.
That in the ocean seeks another drop;
Who, falling there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself:
So I, to find a mother, and a brother,
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

_Enter Dromio of Ephesus._

_Here comes the almanack of my true date._
What now? How chance thou art return’d so soon?
_Dro. E._ Return’d so soon! rather approach’d too late.
The caupon burns, the pig falls from the spit,
The clock hath strucken twelve upon the bell;
My mistress made it one upon my cheek.
She is so hot, because the meat is cold:
The meat is cold, because you come not home;

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter Adriana, wife to Antipholus of Ephesus, and Luciana, her sister.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master?
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner.
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret.
A man is master of his liberty;
Time is his master; and, when they see time,
They'll go, or come: if so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o' door.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O! know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lavish'd with woe.

There's nothing situate under heaven's eye.
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects, and at their controls.
Men, more divine, the masters of all these,
Lords of the wide world, and wild wat'ry seas,
Indued with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then, let your will attend on their accords.

You come not home, because you have no stomach;
You have no stomach, having broke your fast;
But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent1 for your default to-day.

Antipholus Doubtfully.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwed.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage-bed.

Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey.

Adr. How if your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. Patience unmoved, no marvel though she pause;
They can be meek, that have no other cause.
A wretched soul, bruised with adversity,
We bid be quiet, when we hear it cry;
But were we burden'd with like weight of pain,
As much, or more, we should ourselves complain:
So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve thee,
With urgent helpess patience wouldst relieve me:
But if thou live to see like right bereft,
This fool-begg'd patience2 in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try.—
Here comes your man: now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand?

Dro. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? Know'st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay; he told his mind upon mine ear.
Beshear'd his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubly? thou couldst not feel his meaning?
SCENE II. —The Same.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Syracuse

Ant. S. The gold, I gave to Dromio, is laid up Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out. By computation, and mine host's report, I could not speak with Dromio, since at first I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes. [Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir! is your merry humour alter'd? As you love strokes, so jest with me again. Why, Sconce, make my heart and tongue As barren of speech, as any storehouse, When you have wore out your play; My house was at the Phoenix. Wast thou mad, That thus so madly thou didst answer me? Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word? Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since. Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence, Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me. Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt, And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner; For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displeas'd. Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein. What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me. Ant. S. You, dost thou jest, and flout me in the teeth? Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that. [Beating him.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake! now your jest is earnest; Upon what bargain do you give it me? Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes Do use you for my fool, and jest with you, Your sauciness will jest upon my love, And make a common of my serious hours. When the sun shines let foolish grats make sport, But creep in craiments when he hides his beams. If you will jest with me, know my aspect, And fashion your demeanour to my looks, Or I will beat this method in your sconce.

Dro. S. Sconce, call you it? so you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head: an you use these blows long, I must get a sconce for my head, and insconce4 it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray, sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Do you know, I know not? Dro. S. Nothing, sir; but that I am beaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why? Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore, and then, wherefore, for urging it the second time to me. Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season, When, in the why, and the wherefore, is neither rhyme nor reason? —

Well, sir, I thank you. Ant. S. Thank me, sir? for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something, that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, and give you nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinner time?

Dro. S. No, sir: I think, the meat wants that I have. Ant. S. In good time, sir; what's that?

1. Uncomeliness. 2. Fairness. 3. His pretended wife — the strolling-horse, behind which sportmen formerly shot, was so called. 4. This and the two following lines are struck out by the M.S. emendator of the folio of 1632 — where the two succeeding lines of the text, in the first folio of 1623, are also omitted.
Dro. S. Basting
Ant. S. Well, sir, then 't will be dry.
Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.
Ant. S. Your reason?
Dro. S. Lost it make it choleric, and purchase me another do basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time: there's a time for all things.
Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so choleric.
Ant. S. By what rule, sir?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain-bald pate of father Time himself.
Ant. S. Let's hear it.
Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair that grows bald by nature.
Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?
Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig, and recover the lost hair of another man.
Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?
Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts; and what he hath scented men in hair, he hath given them in wit.
Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.
Dro. S. Not a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.
Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers, without wit.
Dro. S. The planter dealer, the sooner lost; yet he doth it in a kind of jollity.
Ant. S. For what reason?
Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.
Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.
Dro. S. Sure ones then.
Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing failing.
Dro. S. Certain ones then.
Ant. S. Name them.
Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in trimming; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.
Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.
Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, e'en no time to recover hair lost by nature.
Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.
Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald, and therefore, to the world's end, will have bald followers.
Ant. S. I know, 't would be a bald conclusion.
But soft! who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay. Antipholus, look strange, and frown:
Some other mistres hath thy sweet aspects,
I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.

The time was once, when thou ungr'd wouldst vow
That never words were music to thine ear,
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand,
That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake, or look'd, or touch'd, or carv'd.
How comes it now, my husband, o' how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me,
That, undividable, incorporate,
Am better than thy dear self's better part.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me;
We talk with goblins, owls, and elves and sprites.¹ if we obey them not, this will energe.

They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue.

Luc. Why prast'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?

Dromio thou Dromio, thou smail, thou slug, thou sat!

Dro. S I am transformed, master, am I not?

Ant. S. I think thou art, in mind, and so am I.

Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape.

Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.

Dro. S. No, I am an ape.

Luc. If thou art chang'd to aught, 'tis to an ass.

Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me, and I long for grass.

'Tis so I am an ass; else it could never be, But I should know her, as well as she knows me.

Adr. Come, come; no longer will I be a fool,
To put the finger in my eye and weep,

Whilst man and master laugh my woes to scorn.

Come, sir, to dinner.—Dromio, keep the gate.—

Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day,
And shrieve you of a thousand idle pranks.—

Sirrah, if any ask you for your master,
Say, he dines forth, and let no creature enter.—

Come, Sister.—Dromio, play the porter well.

Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?

Sleeping or waking? mad, or well advis'd?

Known unto these, and to myself disguis'd?

I'll say as they say, and persever so.

And in this mist, at all adventures, go.

Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?

Adr. Ay, and let none enter, lest I break your pate.

Luc. Come, come, Antipholus; we dine too late.

[Exeunt.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS OF EPHESUS, DROMIO OF EPHESUS, ANT. AND BALTHAZAR.

Ant. E. Good signor Angelo, you must excuse us; My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours,
Say, that I linger'd with you at your shop To see the making of herarkanet²;
And that to-morrow you will bring it home;
But here's a villain, that would face me down He met me on the mart, and that I beat him, And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold; And that I did deny my wife and house.—
Thou drunkard, thou, what did'st thou mean by this?

Dro. E. Say what you will, sir; but I know what I know.

That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show;
If my² skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink.

Your own hand-writing would tell you for certain³ what I think.

Ant. E. I think, thou art an ass.

Dro. E. Marry, so doth appear, By the wrongs I suffer, and the blows I bear. I should kick, being kick'd; and being at that pass, You would keep from my heels, and beware of an ass.

Ant. E. You are sad, signor Balthazar; pray God, our dear
May answer my good-will, and your good welcome here.

Bal. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear.

Ant. E. O signor Balthazar! either at flesh or fish,
A table-full of welcome makes scarce one dainty dish.

Bal. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords.

Ant. E. And welcome more common, for that's nothing but words.

Bal. Small cheer and great welcome makes a merry feast.

Ant. E. Ay, to a niggardly host, and more sparing guest:
But though my cates be mean, take them in good part; Better cheer may you have, but not with better heart.
But soft! my door is lock'd. Go bid them let us in.

ACT III.

Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Gillian, Gin! [Calling

Dro. S. [Within.] Mome,⁴ malt-horse, capon, cor-comb, idiot, patch!⁵

Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch.

Dost thou conjure for wenches, that thou call'st for such store,

When one is one too many? Go, get thee from the door.

Dro. E. What patch is made our porter?—My master stays in the street.

Dro. S. Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on his feet.

Ant. E. Who talks within there? he! open the door.

Dro. S. Right, sir: I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me wherefore.

Ant. E. Wherefore? for my dinner: I have not din'd to-day.

Dro. S. Nor to-day here you must not, come again when you may.

Ant. E. What art thou that keep'st me out from the house I owe?

Dro. S. The porter for this time, sir; and my name is Dromio.

Dro. E. O villain! thou hast stolen both mine office and my name: The one ne'er got me credit, the other merciless blame.

If thou hadst been Dromio to-day in my place, Thou wouldst have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for a face.

Luce. [Within.] What a coil is there, Dromio: who are those at the gate?

Dro. E. Let my master in, Luce.

Luce. Faith no; he comes too late; And so tell your master.

Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh:—

Have at you with a proverb.—Shall I set in my staff?

Luce. Have at you with another: that's,—when? can you tell?

Dro. S. If thy name be called Luce, Luce, thou hast answer'd him well.

Ant. E. Do you hear, you minion? you'll let us in. I trow?²

Luce. I thought to have ask'd you.

Dro. S. And you said no

And about evening come yourself alone
To know the reason of this strange restraint.
If by strong hand you offer to break in,
Now in the stirring passage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;
And that supposed by the common route,
Against your yet unalled estimation,
That may with foul intrusion enter in,
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead:
For slander lives upon succession,
For ever housed, where it gets possession.

Ant. E. You have prevail'd: I will depart in quiet.
And, in despite of mirth, mean to be merry.
I know a wench of excellent discourse,
Pretty and witty; wild and yet too, gentle;
There will we dine. This woman that I mean,
My wife (but I protest, without desert),
Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal:
To her will we to dinner.—Get you home,
And fetch the chain: by this, I know, 'tis made.
Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine;4
For there's the house. That chain will I bestow
(Bo it for nothing but to spite my wife)
Upon mine hostess there. Good sir, make haste.
Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,
I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll dissemble.

Ang. I'll meet you at that place, some hour hence.

Ant. E. Do so. This jest shall cost me some expense.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Luciana, and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot,
A husband's office? Shallankind debate?
Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?
Shall love, in building, grow so ruinate?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth,
Then, for her wealth's sake use her with more kindness:
Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth:
Muffle your false love with some show of blindness;
Let not my sister read it in your eye;
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator,
Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;
Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger;
Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted,
Teach 'r nigh the carriage of a lady saint:
Be secret-false; what need she be acquainted?
What simple thief brags of his own attain?
'T is double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board;
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;
ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.
Alas, poor women! make us but believe,
Being compact of credit, that you love us,
Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve,
We in your motion turn, and you may move us.
Then, gentle brother, get you in again:
Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife.
'T is holy sport to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else, I know not,
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine,)
Less in your knowledge, and your grace you show not,
Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak:

1 Depart. 2 In the same sense as our slang phrase, sold. 3 Once for all let me tell you this. 4 All the old eds. have Porcupine, which Dyce would retain, as a distinct form of the word used by many old writers. 5 I o. have Antipholus, in place of the last two words. 6 Full of credibility.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen-wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light.
I warrant, her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Polar winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

Ant. S. What complexion is she of?

Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why? she sweats; a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir; 'tis in grain: Noah's flood could not do it.

Ant. S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Nell, sir: but her name is three quarters, that is, an ell; and three quarters will not measure
her from hip to lip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breath?

Dro. S. No longer from head to foot, than from hip to lip: she is spherical, like a globe, I could find out countries in her.

Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks: I found it out by the bogs.

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness, hard, in the palm of the hand.

Ant. S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead; arm'd and reverted, making war against her hair. 7

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I look'd for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them: but I guess, it stood in her chin, by the salt rhum that ran between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breath.

Ant. S. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. S. O! sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, decreeing their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain, who sent whole armadoes of carracks to be ballast at her nose.

Ant. S. Where stood Belgia, the Netherlands?

Dro. S. O! sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me: call'd me Dromio; swore, I was assured to her: told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and,
I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transform'd me to a curial-dog, and made me turn i' the wheel.

Ant. S. Go, his thee presently post to the reader.

And if the wind blow any way from shore,
I will not harbour in this town to-night.

If any bark put forth, come to the mart,
Where I will walk till thou return to me.

If every one knows us, and we know none,
'T is time, I think, to frudge, pack, and begone.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life.

So fly I from her that would be my wife. 8 [Exit]

Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here.
And therefore 't is high time that I were hence.

She that doth call me husband, even my soul

Doth for a wife abhor; but her fair sister,
Possess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace,
Of such enchanting presence and discourse,
Hath almost made me traitor to myself:
But, lest myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Master Antipholus?

Ant. S. Ay, that's my name.

Ang. I know it well, sir. Lo! here is the chain.
I thought to have taken you at the Porcupine;
The chain unfinish'd made me stay thus long.

Ant. S. What is your will that I shall do with this?

Ang. What please yourself, sir: I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir? I bespeak it not.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due,
And since I have not much importun'd you:
Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
ToPersia, and want gilders for my voyage:
Therefore, make present satisfaction,
Or I'll attack you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you.
Is growing! to me by Antipholus;
And, in the instant that I met with you,
He had of me a chain: at five o'clock,
I shall receive the money for the same.
Pleaseth you walk with me down to his house,
I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus, from the Courtesan's.

Off. That labour may you save: see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou
And buy a rope's end, that will I bestow
Among my wife and these confederates.
For looking me out of my doors by day,—
But soft. I see the goldsmith.—Get thee gone;
Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a-year? I buy a rope?

Ang. A man is well holp up that trusts to you:
I promised me your presence, and the chain,
But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me.
Belike, you thought our love would last too long.
If it were chain'd together, and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the note,
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carats,
The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion,
Which doth amount to three odd ducats more
Than I stand debted to this gentleman:
I pray you, see him presently discharged.
For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present money:
Besides, I have some business in the town.
Good signior, take the stranger to my house,
And with you take the chain, and bid my wife
Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof:
Perchance, I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then, you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you have Go home with it, and please your wife withal;
And soon at supper-time I'll visit you,
And then receive my money for the chain.

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now,
For fear you not see chain, nor money, more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir. Fare you well.

Ant. S. What should I think of this, I cannot tell:
But this I think, there's no man is so vain,
That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain.
I see, a man here needs not live by shifts,
When in the streets he meets such golden gifts.
I'll to the mart, and there for Dromio stay:
If any ship put out, then straight away.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. Well, sir, I will. Have you the chain about you?

Ant. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you have,
Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain:
Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman,
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.

Ant. E. Good lord! you use this dalliance, to excuse
Your breach of promise to the Porcupine,
I should have chid you for not bringing it.

But, like a shrew, you first begin to bawl:

Mer. The hour steals on: I pray you, sir, dispatch

Ang. You hear, how he importunes me: the chain—

Ant. E. Why, give it to my wife, and fetch you money.

Ang. Come, come; you know, I gave it you even now Either send the chain, or send by me some token.

Ant. E. Fie! now you run this humour out of breath.
Come, where's the chain? I pray you, let me see it.

Mer. My business cannot break this dalliance.
Good sir, say, who 'e'll answer me, or no?

If not, I'll leave him to the officer.

Ant. E. I answer you! what should I answer you?

Ang. The money that you owe me for the chain.

Ant. E. I owe you none, till I receive the chain.

Ang. You know, I gave it you half an hour since.

Ant. E. You gave me none: you wrong me much to say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:
Consider how it stands upon my credit.

Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.

Off. I do, and charge you in the duke's name to obey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation.

Either consent to pay this sum for me,
Or I attack you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay for that I never had?

Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.

Ang. Here is thy fee: arrest him, officer.
I would not spare my brother in this ease,
If he should scorn me so apparently.

Off. I do arrest you, sir. You hear the suit.

Ant. E. I do obey thee, till I give thee ball.
But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear,
As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidamnum.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE III.

That stays but till her owner comes aboard,
And then, sir, she bears away. Our draughtsman, sir,
I have convey’d abroad, and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum, and aqua-vite.
The ship is in her trim: the merry wind
Blows fair from land: they stay for nought at all,
But for their owner, master, and yourself.

What ship of Epidamnum stays for me?

Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.

Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope:
And told thee to what purpose, and what end.

Dro. S. You sent me for a rope’s end as soon.
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.

Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure,
And teach your ears to list me with more heed.
To Adriana, villain, lie thee straight;
Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk
That’s cover’d o’er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of duetats: let her send it.
Tell her, I am arrested in the street,
And that shall bate me. Hie thee, slave, be gone.
On, officer, to prison till it come.

[Execut Merchant, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E.]

Dro. S. To Adriana? that is where we dined.
Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband:
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will,
For servants must their masters’ minds fulfil. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Mightst thou perceive austerely in his eye
That he did plead in earnest? yea or no?
Look’d he or red, or pale? or sad, or merry?
What observation madst thou in this case,
Of his heart’s meteors tilting in his face?

Luc. First he denied you had in him no right.

Adr. He meant, he did me none: the more my spite.

Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here.

Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.

Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Adr. And what said he?

Luc. That love I begg’d for you, he begg’d of me.

Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?

Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move.
First, he did prize my beauty; then, my speech.

Adr. Didst speak him fair?

Luc. Have patience, I beseech.

Adr. I cannot: nor I will not hold me still:
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere,
Ill-fae’d, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere;
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind.

Stigmatized in making, worse in mind.

Luc. Who would be jealous, then, of such a one?
No evil lost is wail’d when it is gone.

Adr. Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others’ eyes were worse.
Far from her nest the lapwing cries away:
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, running.

Dro. S. Here, go: the desk! the purse! swift, now make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

Dro. S. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?

Dro. S. No, he’s in Tartar limbo, worse than hell.

Dromio, his hard heart is button’d up with steel;
Who knows no touch of mercy, cannot feel,

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough;

A wolf, nay, worse, a fellow all in buff;

A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one at counter

mends

The passages and alleyes, creeks and narrow lands:
A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry-foot well.

One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls to hell?

Adr. Why, man, what is the matter?

Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is rested on the case.

Adr. What, is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit.

Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested well,
But he’s in a suit of buff which ’rested him, that can I tell.

Will you send him, mistress, redemption? the money
In his desk?

Adr. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at:

[Exit Luciana.]

That he, unknown to me, should be in debt:

Tell me, was he arrested on a band?

Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing:

A chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring!

Adr. What, the chain?

Dro. S. No, no, the bell. ’Tis time that I were gone:

It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.

Adr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.

Dro. S. O yes; if any hour meet a serjeant, ’a turns back for very fear.

Adr. As if time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason?

Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he’s worth, to season.

Nay, he’s a thief too: have you not heard men say,

That time comes stealing on by night and day?
If he be in debt and theft, and a serjeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back any hour in a day?

Re-enter Luciana.

Adr. Go, Dromio: there’s the money, bear it straight,
And bring thy master home immediately.—

Come, sister; I am press’d down with conceit,
Conceit, my comfort, and my injury. [Exit]

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, wearing the chain.

Ant. S. There’s not a man I meet but doth salute me
As if they were their well acquainted friend;
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me, some invite me:
Some other give me thanks for kindness:
Some offer me commodities to buy:
Even now a tailor call’d me in his shop,
And should me silks that he had bought for me,
And, therewithal, took measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for. What have you got? the picture of old Adam new apparel'd? 2

Ant. S. What gold is this? What Adam dest thou mean?

Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's-skin that was kill'd for the prodigal: he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand the not.

Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went, like a base-viol, in a case of leather: the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a job, and rests them: he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance: he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a morris-pike. 3

Ant. S. What, thou mean'st an officer?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, the serjeant of the band: he that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band; one that thinks a man always going to bed, and says, 'God give you good rest.'

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your folly. Is there any ship puts forth to-night? may we be gone?

Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night; and then were you hindered by the serjeant to tarry for the holy Delay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is distract, and so am I, And here we wander in illusions. Some blessed power deliver us hence! 4

Enter a Courtezan.

Cour. Well met, well met, master Antipholus. I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now: Is that the chain, you promised me to-day?

Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me not!

Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Satan?

Ant. S. It is the devil.

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam; and here she comes in the habit of a light wench: and thereof comes that the wenches say, 'God damn me, that's as much as to say, 'God make me a light wench.' It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn. Come not near her.

Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir. Will you go with me? we'll mend our dinner here.

Dro. S. Master, if you do expect spoon-meat, bespeak a long spoon.

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil.

Ant. S. Avoid, thou fiend! what tell'st thou me of supping? Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress; I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone.

Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner, Or for my diamond the chain you promised, And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parings of one's A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin, a nut, a cherry-stone; But she, more covetous, would have a chain. Master, be wise: an if you give it her, The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain. I hope you do not mean to cheat me so.

Ant. S. Avant! thou witch! Come. Dromio, let us go.

Dro. S. Fly pride, says the peacock: mistress, that you know.

[Exeunt Ant. and Dro.

Cour. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad, Else would he never so demean himself. A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats, And for the same he promised me a chain: Both one and other he denies me now. The reason that I gather he is mad.

Besides this present instance of his rage, Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner Of his own doors being shut against his entrance. Belike, his wife, acquainted with his fits, On purpose shut the doors against his way My way is now, to his home to his house, And tell his wife, that, being lunatic, He rush'd into my house, and took perforce My ring away. This course I fittest choose; For forty ducats is too much to lose.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and a Jailor.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not break away.' I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money, To warrant thee, as I am restor'd for.

My wife is in, a wayward mood to-day, And will not lightly trust the messenger: That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus with a rope's-end.

Here comes my man: I think he brings the money.— How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope. Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope? Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee tie thee home?

Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you.

[Beating him.

Jail. Good sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Jail. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands. Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir; that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed: you may prove it by my long ears. I have serv'd him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service, but blows. When I am cold, he heats me with beating; when I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am wak'd with it, when I sleep; rais'd with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home; releas'd home with it, when I return: nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar went her brat; and, I think, when he nath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Ant. E. Come, go along: my wife is coming yonder.

What have you done with 2 A reference to the serjeant's suit of buff. 3 A Moorish pike 4 then - in f. 6.
Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezen, and a Schoolmaster called Pinch.

Dro. E. Mistresse, respect fienem, respect your end: or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, "beware the rope's end?"

Ant. E. Will thou still talk? [Bears him. Cour. How sayyou now? is not your husband mad? Adr. His lunatry confirms no less.—Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer;—Establish him in his true sense again.

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks! Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy!

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, loose'ld within this man.

To yield possession to my holy prayers,

And to thy state of darkness lib thee straight:

I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, dotting wizard, peace! I am not mad.

Ant. O, that thou wert not, poor distressed soul!

Ant. E. You minyon, you; are these your customers?

Did this companion with the saffron face

Revel and feast it at my house to-day;

Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut,

And I denied to enter in my house?

Pinch. O husband, God, the fellow finds you dind at home; Where 'twould you had remain'd until this time.

Free from these slanders, and this open shame!

Ant. E. Din'd at home? Thou, villain, what say'st thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd up, and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdy, your doors were lock'd, and you shut out.

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sain's fable, she herself revil'd you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me?

Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scorn'd you.

Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. E. In verity, you did:—my bones bear witness,

That since have felt the rigour of his rage.

Adr. Is't good to soothe him in these contraries?

Pinch. O husband, God, the fellow finds his vein,

And, yielding to him, humours well his frenzy.

Ant. E. Thou hast from some[i.e.,].

Adr. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you;

By Dromio here, who came in haste for it.

Dro. E. Money by me! heart and good-will you might;

But, surely, master, not a rag of money.

Ant. E. Went'st thou not to her for a purse of ducats?

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witness with her that she did.

Dro. E. God and the rope-maker now[sic] bear me witness,

That I was sent for nothing but a rope!

Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possessed:

I know it by their pale and deadly looks.

They must be bound, and laid in some dark room.

Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth to-day?

And why dost thou deny the bag of gold?

Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I received no gold:

But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling villain! thou speak'st false in both

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot! thou art false in all,

And art confederate with a dammed pack

To make a lazzarone, abject scorn of me;

But with these nails I'll pluck out those false eyes,

That would behold in me this shameful sport.

Enter three or four, and bind Antipholus and Dromio.

Adr. O bind him, bind him! let him not come near me.

Pinch. More company!—the fiend is strong within him.

Luc. Ah me! poor man, how pale and wan he looks.

Ant. E. What will you murder me? Thou jailor, thou

I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them

To make a rescue?

Jail. Masters, let him go.

He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer?

Hast thou delight to see a wretched man

Do outrage and displeasure to himself?

Jail. He is my prisoner: if I let him go,

The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee, ere I go from thee.

Bear me forthwith unto his creditor,

And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.

Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd

Home to my house.—O, most unhappy day!

Ant. E. O, most unhappy strumpet!

Dro. E. Master, I am here enter'd in bond for you.

Ant. E. Out on thee, villain! wherewith dost thou mad me?

Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad good master;

Cry, the devil.—

Luc. God help, poor souls! how idly do they talk.

Adr. Go bear him hence,—Sister, go you with me.—[Exeunt Pinch and assistants with Ant. and Dro.]

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at?

Jail. One Angelo, a goldsmith; do you know him?

Adr. I know the man. What is the sum he owes?

Jail. Two hundred ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due?

Jail. Due for a chain your husband bad of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day

Came to my house, and took away my ring,

(The ring I saw upon his finger now)

Straight after did I meet him with a chain.

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it.—

Come, jailor, bring me where the goldsmith is.

I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords. Let's call more help.

To have them bound again.

Jail. Away! they'll kills us.

[Exeunt Adriana, Luciana, and Jailor.

Ant. S. I see, these witches are afraid of swords.

Dro. S. She, that would be your wife, now ran from you.
Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from thence:
I long that we were safe and sound aboard.

Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night, they will surely do us no harm; you saw they spake us fair, gave us gold. Methinks they are such a gentle nation, that but for the mountain of mad flesh that lains marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still, and turn witch.

Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town;
Therefore away, to get out stuff aboard. [Exeunt]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before an Abbey.

Enter Merchant and Angello.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you;
But, I protest, he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?

Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir;
Of credit infinite, highly belov'd,
Second to none that lives here in the city:
His word might bear my wealth at any time.

Mer. Speak softly; yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck,
Which he forewore most monstrously to have.

Good sir, draw near with me, I'll speak to him.—
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much
That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And not without some scandal to yourself,
With circumstance and oaths so to deny
This chain, which now you wear so openly:
Besides the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend;
Who, but for staying on our controversy,
Had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day.

This chain, you had of me; can you deny it?

Ant. S. I think, I had: I never did deny it.

Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and forswore it too.

Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it?

Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear thee.

'Ce on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou liv'st
To walk where any honest men resort.

Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus,
'il prove mine honour and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou dost'art.

Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain. [They draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courteza, and Others.

Adr. Hold! hurt him not, for God's sake! he is mad.

Some set within him: take his sword away.
Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house.

Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake take a house!

This is some priory—'in, or we are spoil'd.

[Exeunt Antipholus and Dromio to the Abbey.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng you hither?

Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.

Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.

Ang. I knew, he was not in his perfect wits.

Mer. I am sorry now, that I did draw on him.

Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?

Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad;
And much different from the man he was;
But, till this afternoon, his passion
Ne'er brake into extremity of rage.

Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of sea?

[Baggage 2 Cite with him. 3 Not in s. o

Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
A sin prevailing much in youthful men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Adr. To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love, that drew him out from home.

Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.

Adr. Why, so I did.

Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.

Adr. As roughly as my modesty would let me.

Abb. Happily, in private.

Adr. And in assemblies too.

Abb. Ay, but not enough.

Adr. It was the copy of our conference.

In bed, he slept not for my urging it;
At board, he fed not for my urging it;
Alone, it was the subject of my theme;
In company, I often glance'd at it:

Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

Abb. And thereof came it that the man was mad:
The venom clamours of a jealous woman
Poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.

It seems, his sleepes were behind by thy railing.

And thereof comes it, that his head is light.

Thou say'st, his meat was sauc'd with thy upbraidings:
Unquiet meals make ill digestions;

Thereof the raging fire of fever bred:
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?

Thou say'st, his sports were hinder'd by thy brawls:
Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue,
But moody and dull melancholy,
Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair,
And at her heels a huge infectious troop
Of pale distemperatures, and foes to life?

In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest
To be disturb'd, would mad or man or beast.

The consequence is, then, thy jealous fits
Have seal'd thy husband from the use of wits.

Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly,
When he demean'd himself rough, rude, and wildly.

Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?

Adr. She did betray me to my own reproof.—

Good people, enter, and lay hold on him.

Abb. No: not a creature enters in my house.

Adr. Then, let your servants bring my husband forth.

Abb. Neither: he took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands,
Till I have brought him to his wife again,
Or lose my labour in essaying it.

Adr. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office,
And will have no attorney but myself,
And therefore let me have him home with me.

Abb. Be patient; for I will not let him stir,
Till I have us'd the approved means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again.
Scene I.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,
A charitable duty of my order;
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Astr. I will not hence, and leave my husband here:
And ill it doth beseeem your holiness
To separate the husband and the wife.

Abb. Be quiet, and depart: thou shalt not have him. [Exit Abbess.

Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Astr. Come, go: I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise, until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither,
And take performe my husband from the abbess.

Mer. By this, I think, the dial points at five:
Anon, I'm sure, the duke himself in person
Comes this way to the melancholy vale,
The place of death and solemn execution,
Behind the ditches of the abbey here.

Ang. Upon what cause?

Mer. To see a reverend Syracuse merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Beheaded publicly for his offense.

Ang. Sec. where they come: we will behold his death.

Luc. Kneel to the duke before he pass the abbey.

Enter Duke attended; aisle was bare-headed; with the Headsmen and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly,
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.

Astr. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady:
It cannot be, that she hath done thee wrong.

Astr. May it please your grace. Antipholus, my husband,
Whom I made lord of me, and all I had,
At your important letters, this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him,
That desperately he hurried through the street,
(With him his bondman. all as mad as he)
Doing displeasure to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Rings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound, and sent him home,
Whilst to take order for the wrongs I went,
That here and there his fury had committed.

Anon, I wot not by what strange escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him,
And with his mad attendant and himself;
Each one with irrefragible, with drawn swords,
Met us again, and, madly bent on us,
Chas'd us away: till, raising of more aid,
We came again to bind them. Then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them:
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth, that we may bear him hence.

Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command,
et him be brought forth, and borne hence for help.

Duke. Long since thy husband serv'd me in my wars,
And to thee engag'd a prince's word,
When thou didst make him master of thy bed,
To do him all the grace and good I could.—
Go, some of you, knock at the abbey gate,
And bid the lady abbess come to me.
I will determine this, before I stir.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O mistress, mistress! shift and save yourself.

My master and his man are both broke loose,
Beaten the maids a-row,* and bound the doctor,
Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire
And ever as it blazed they throw on him
Great palls of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with scissors nicks him like a fool:*
And, sure, unless you send some present help,
Between them they will kill the conjurer.

Astr. Peace, fool! thy master and his man are here
And that is false, thou dost report to us.

Serv. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true;
I have not breath'd almost, since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you,
To search your face, and to disfigure you. [Cry within

Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress: fly, be gone.

Duke. Come, stand by me; fear nothing. Guard
With halberds!

Astr. Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you,
That he is borne about invisible:
Even now we hous'd him in the abbey here,
And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke! O! grant me justice,
Even for the service that long since I did thee,
When I bestrid thee in the wars and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood
That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Eg. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote,
I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio!

Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there!
She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife,
That hath abused and dishonour'd me,
Even in the strength and height of injury,
Beyond imagination is the wrong,
That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me,
While she with harlots feasted in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault. Say, woman, didst thou see?

Astr. No, my good lord: myself, he, and my sister,
To-day did dine together. So befat my soul,
As this is false he burdens me withal.

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night.
But she tells to your highness simple truth.

Ang. O perjur'd woman! They are both forewarned
In this the madman justly chargeth them.

Ant. E. My liege, I am advised what I say;
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor heady-rash provok'd with raging ire,
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.
This woman lout'd me out this day from dinner:
That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could witness it, for he was with me then;
Who parted with me to go fetch a chain,
Promising to bring it to the Peregrine,
Where Balthazar and I did dine together.
Our dinner done, and he not coming thither,
I went to seek him: in the street I met him,
And in his company, that gentleman.
There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me down:
That I this day of him receiv'd the chain,
Which, God he knows, I saw not; for which the
He did arrest me with an officer
I did obey, and sent my peasant home

1 depth and sorry: in f. e. 2 Improper. 3 strong: in f. e. 4 One after the other. 5 It was the custom to cut the hair of fools in a peculiar fashion. 6 This word originally meant circling, and was applied to either sex.
For certain dues: he with none return’d.
Then fairly I bespake the officer,
To go in person with me to my house.
By the way we met
My wife, her sister, and a rabble more
Of vile confederates: along with them
They brought one Pinch, a hungry, lean-fae’d villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy, hollow-ey’d, sharp-looking wretch,
A living dead man. This pernicious slave,
Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer,
And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse.
And with no fear, as ’twere, out-facing me,
Cries out, I was possess’d. Then, altogether
They tell upon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
They’l left me and my man, both bound together;
Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,
I gain’d my freedom, and immediately
Ran hither to your grace, whom I beseech
To give me ample satisfaction.

For these deep shame[s, and great indignities.

Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him.
That he dined not at home, but was lock’d out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or no?

Ang. He had, my lord; and when he ran in here,
These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mer. Besides, I will be sworn, these ears of mine
Heard you confes[s you had the chain of him,
After you first foresaw it on the morn,
And, thereupon, I drew my sword on you;
And then you fled into this abbey here.
From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls,
Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me.
I never saw the chain, so help me heaven!
And this is false you burden me withal.

Duke. Why, what an intricate impanel is this!
I think, you all have drunk of Circe’s cup.
If here you found him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly:
You say, he dined at home; the goldsmith here
Denies that saying.—Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her, there, at the Porcupine.

Cour. He did, and from my finger snatch’d that ring.

Ant. E. ’Tis true, my liege; this ring I had of her.

Duke. Saw’st thou him enter at the abbey here?

Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange.—Go call the abbess hither.

I think you are all mated, or stark mad.

[Exit an Attendant.

Æge. Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me speak a word.
Halpily, I see a friend will save my life.
And pay the sum that may deliver me.

Æge. Is not your name, sir, call’d Antipholus,
And is not that your bondman Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman, sir;
But he, I thank him, gnaw’d in two my cords:

Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.

Æge. I am sure you both of you remember me.

Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you;
For lately we were bound, as you are now.
You are not Pinch’s patient, are you, sir?

Æge. Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.

Æge. O! grief hath chang’d me, since you saw me last.
And careful hours, with time’s deformed hand,
Have written strange defeatures in my face:
But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

Ant. E. Neither.

Æge. Dromio, nor thou?

Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.

Æge. I am sure thou dost.

Dro. E. Ay, sir; but I am sure I do not; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him.

Æge. Not know my voice? O, time’s extremity!
Hast thou so crack’d my voice, split my poor tongue
In seven short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untun’d cares?
Though now this grintin face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter’s drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory,
My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left,
My dull, deaf ears a little use to hear:
All these old witnesses (I cannot err)
Tell me thou art my son Antipholus.

Ant. E. I never saw my father in my life.

Æge. But seven years since, in Syracuse, boy,
Thou know’st we parted. But, perhaps, my son,
Thou shan’t to acknowledge me in misery.

Ant. E. The duke, and all that know me in the city,
Can witness with me, that it is not so,
I ne’er saw Syracuse in my life.

Duke. I tell thee, Syracusan, twenty years
Have I been patron to Antipholus,
During which time he ne’er saw Syracuse.
I see, thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter Abbess, with Antipholus of Syracuse and Dromio of Syracuse.

Abb. Most mighty duke, behold a man much wrong’d.

[All gather to see them.

Adr. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is Genius to the other;
And so of these: which is the natural man,
And which the spirit? Who deciphers them?

Dro. S. I, sir, am Dromio: command him away.

Dro. E. I, sir, am Dromio: pray let me stay.

Ant. S. Ægeon, art thou not? or else his ghost?

Dro. S. O, my old master! who hath bound him here?

Abb. Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds,
And gain a husband by his liberty.—

Speak, old Ægeon, if thou best the man
That had a wife once call’d Æmilia,
That bore thee at a burden two fair sons.
O! if thou best the same Ægeon, speak,
And speak unto the same Æmilia!

Æge. If I dream not, thou art Æmilia.
If thou art she, tell me, where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft?

Abb. By men of Epidamnum, he, and I,
And the twin Dromio, all were taken up;
But, and by and by, rude fishermen of Corinth
By force took Dromio and my son from them,
And me they left with those of Epidamnum.
What then became of them, I cannot tell;
I, to this fortune that you see me in.

Duke. Why, here begins his morning story right.

These two Antipholus’s, these two so like,
And these two Dromios, one in semblence,— Besides his urging of his wreck at sea;—

These are the parents to these children,
Duke. Stay, stand apart; I know not which is which.

Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord.

Dro. E. And with him.

Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,

Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

Ant. S. No, sir, not I; I came from Syracuse.

Duke. I'll gossip at this feast.

[Exeunt Duke, Abbess, Egeon, Courtesan Merchant, Angelo, and Attendants.

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from ship-board?

Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embarked?

Dro. S. Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

Ant. S. He speaks to me—I am your master, Dromio:

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house,

That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner:

She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. S. Methinks, you are my glass, and not my brother:

I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.

Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We'll draw cuts for the senior: till then lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then thus:

We came into the world, like brother and brother;

And now, let's go hand in hand: not one before another.

[Exeunt]
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

DON PEDRO, Prince of Arragon.
JOHN, his bastard Brother.
CLAUDIO, a young Lord of Florence.
BENEDICK, a young Lord of Padua.
LEONATO, Governor of Messina.
ANTONIO, his Brother.
BALTHAZAR, Servant to Don Pedro.
Borachio, followers of John.
Dogberry, two Officers.

Friar Francis.
A Gentleman.
A Sexton.
A Boy.

HERO, Daughter to Leonato.
Beatrice, Niece to Leonato.
Margaret, Gentlewomen attending on Hero.
Ursula, Watchmen, and attendants, &c.

SCENE. Messina.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Gentleman.¹

Leon. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Gent. He is very near by this: he was not three leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Gent. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine, called Claudio.

Gent. Much deserved on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro; he hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle, here in Messina, will be very much glad of it.

Gent. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him: even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Gent. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness. There are no faces truer than those that are so washed; how much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanato returned from the wars, or no?

Gent. I know none of that name, lady: there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?

Hero. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.

Gent. O! he is returned, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina, and challenged Cupid at the flight; and my uncle’s foot, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the bird-bolt⁴—I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he’ll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Gent. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man; he hath an excellent stomach.

Gent. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady; but what is he to a lord?

Gent. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed⁵ with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed: he is no less than a stuffed man; but for the stuffing.—Well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece. There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there’s a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict four of his five wits went hatting off, and now is the whole man governed with one; so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference⁶ between himself and his horse; for it’s all the wealth that he hath left to be known a reasonable creature.—Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

¹ Messenger: in f. e. ² Throughout the Scene: Mess.: in f. e. ³ A term of the fencing-school. ⁴ A short and thick arrow, for near aim. ⁵ Stuffed: Chaucer uses the five wits for the five senses & similar enumeration, referred to in the text, was made of the intellectual powers. ⁶ In heraldry, a distinction.

102
Don. Good signior Leonato, are you 2 come to meet your trouble? the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain, but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

Don. You embrace your charge too willingly. I think, this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

Leon. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

Don. You have it full, Signior Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man.—Truly, the lady fathers here. Be happy, lady, for you are like an honourable father.

Bene. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Beat. I wonder that you will still be talking, signior Benedick: no body marks you.

Bene. What, my dear lady Disdain! are you yet living?

Beat. Is it possible disdain should die, while she hath such meet food to feed it, as signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

Bene. Then is courtesy a turncoat. But it is certain, I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted; and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for, truly, I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women: they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I thank God, and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

Bene. God keep your ladyship still in that mind: so some gentleman or other shall escape a predestinate scratched face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an't were such a face as yours.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would, my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuator. But keep your way 3 of God's name; I have done.

1 This phrase is derived, says Knight, from books of credit 2 Quarellor 3 The old copies read: you are 4 Old cop.: This.
'twas not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be so.

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.

Ben. And by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Ben. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.

Ben. That a woman conceived me, I thank her: that she brought me up, I likewise give her more humble thanks; but that I will have a reckoning3 wound in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldric,4 all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for the which I may go the finer) I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fail from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Ben. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that first4 hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.5

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:

"In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke."6

Ben. The savage bull may, but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull's horns, and set them in my forehead; and let me be vilely painted, and in such great letters as they write, "Here is good horse to hire," let them signify under my sign.—"Here you may see Benedick the married man."7

Claud. If this should ever happen, thou wouldst be horn-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Ben. I look for an earthquake too, then.

D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the hours. In the mean time, good signor Benedick, repair to Leonato's: commend me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.

Ben. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and so I commit you—

Claud. To the tuition of God: from my house, if I had it.—

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: your loving friend, Benedick.

Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not. The body or your discourse is sometimes guarded6 with fragments, and the guards are but slightly based on neither: ere you flout old ends7 any farther, examine your conscience, and so I leave you. [Exit Benedick]

Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach: teach it but how,

And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn

Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. Pedro. No child but Hero, she's his only heir.

Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

Claud. O! my lord,

When you went onward on this ended action,

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;

That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand,

Than to drive liking to the name of love;

But now I am return'd, and that war-thoughts

Have left their places vacant, in their rooms

Come thronging soft and delicate desires,

All prompting me how fair young Hero is,

Saying, I lik'd her ere I went to wars—8

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently,

And tire the hearer with a book of words.

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,

And I will break with her, and with her father,

And thou shalt have her.14 Was't not to this end,

That thou began'st to twist so fine a story?

Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love,

That know love's grief by his complexion!

But lest my liking might too sudden seem,

I would have sav'd it with a longer taster.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

The fairest ground9 is the necessity,

Look, what will serve is fit: 'tis once, thou lovest,

And I will fit thee with the remedy.

I know we shall have revelling to-night,

I will assume thy part in some disguise,

And tell fair Hero I am Claudio;

And in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart,

And take her hearing prisoner with the force,

And strong encounter of my amorous tale;

Then, after her father will I break;

And, the conclusion is, she shall be thine.

In practice let us put it presently.

[Exeunt]

Scene II. A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Leon. How now, brother? Where is my cousin your son? Hath he provided this music?

Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange15 news that you yet dream not of.

Leon. Are they good?

Ant. As the event doth them; but they have a good cover; they show well outward. The prince and count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in my orchard, were thus16 much overheard by a man of mine: the prince discovered to Claudio that he loved my niece, your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take this present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.

Leon. Hath the fellow any wit, that told you this?

1 An old tale, resembling in its horrors and incidents that of Blue Beard, and containing a frequent repetition of the passage in the text, is given in Bowdew's ed. of Malone, and in Knight. 2 A recall. 3 A bottle was an old popular sport; Adam, probably, alludes to Adam from Act II. of Kyd's Spanish Tragedy; the play is in Dodsley's Col.

4 Trimmed. 5 The formal conclusions of old letters often ending in the words used by Don Pedro. 6 The dark, implying the interruption of a narrative, is an addition by Collier. 7 This passage, from with her, is from the quarto ed. 1600. 8 Grant: in f. e. 9 Only in the quarto, 1600.
Ant. A good sharp fellow: I will send for him, and question him yourself.
Leon. No, no: we will hold it as a dream, till it appear itself; but I will acquaint my daughter with that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peradventure this be true. Go you, and tell her of it.
[Several persons cross the stage.] Cousins, you know what you have to do.—O! I cry you mercy, friend; go you with me, and I will use your skill.—Good cousin, have a care this busy time. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Another Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter John and Conrad.

Con. What the good year, my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

John. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds it. Therefore the sadness is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

John. And when I have heard it, what blessing brings it?

Con. If not a present remedy, at least a patient sufferance.

John. I wonder, that thou being (as thou say’st thou art) born under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause, and smile at no man’s jests; eat when I have stomach, and wait for no man’s leisure: sleep when I am drowsy, and tend on no man’s business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yes; but you must not make the full show of this, till you may do it without controlment. You have, till of late, stood out against your brother, and he hath ta’en you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root, but by the fair weather that you make yourself: it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace; and it better fits my blood to be disdained of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any: in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied but I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle, and enfranchised with a clog; therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage. If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking; in the mean time, let me be that I am, and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

John. I make all use of it, for I use it only. Who comes here? What news, Borachio?

Enter Borachio.

Bora. I came yonder from a great supper: the prince, your brother, is royally entertained by Leo-nato, and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

John. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he, for a fool, that betroths himself to unquietness?

Bora. Marry, it is your brother’s right hand.

John. Who? the most exquisite Claudio?

Bora. Even he.

John. A proper squire! And who, and who? which way looks he?

Bora. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

John. A very forward March-chick! How came you to this?

Bora. Being entertained for a performer, as I was smoking a musty-room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whipt me behind the arras, and there heard it agreed upon, that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to count Claudio.

John. Come, come; let us thither: this may prove food to my displeasure. That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow: if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

John. Let us to the great supper: their cheer is the greater, that I am subdued. Would the cook were of my mind!—Shall we go prove what’s to be done?

Bora. We’ll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

Leon. Was not count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tardily that gentleman looks: I never can see him, but I am heart-burned an hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He was an excellent man, that were made just in the mid-way between him and Benedick: the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady’s eldest son, evermore tattling.

Leon. Then, half signior Benedick’s tongue in count John’s mouth, and half count John’s melancholy in signior Benedick’s face.

Beat. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world,—if a’ could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrived of thy tongue.

1 Not in f. e. 2 This word not in f. e. 3 Only in quarto.
Leon. Well then, go you into hell?

Beat. No; but to the gate: and there will the devil meet me, like an old curkoid, with horns on his head, and say, "Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maid!'" so deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens: he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece, I trust, you will be ruled by your father.

[To Hero]

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, "Father, as it please you?" but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, "Father, as it please me."

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-mastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a clad of wayward mar? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not woe'd in good time: if the prince be too important,¹ tell him, there is measure in everything, and so dance out the answer: for, hear me, Hero; wooling, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-place: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly, modest, as a measure, full of state and ancientity; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque-place faster and faster, till he sink a-place² into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beat. I have a good eye, uncle: I can see a church by day-light.

Leon. The revellers are entering, brother. Make good room!

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthasar; John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and maskers.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend, the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove.³

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatched.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

[Takes her aside]

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Marg. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better; the hearers may cry Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Bene. Amen.

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done!—Answer, clerk.

Bene. No more words: the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough: you are signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the wagging of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill well, unless you were the very man. Here's his dry hand up and down: you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come: do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, man, you are he: grace will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the "Hundred merry Tunes."—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the prince's jestor: a very dull fool, only his gift is in devising impossible slanders: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy, for he both pleases men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him. I am sure, he is in the fleet; I would he had boarded me!

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure, not marked, or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supher that night. [Music within.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Dance. Then, extant all but John, Borachio, and Claudio.]

John. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. The ladies follow her, and but one visor remains.

Bora. And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing.

John. Are not you signior Benedick?

Claud. You know me well: I am he.

John. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero. I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud. How know you he loves her?

John. I heard him swear his affection.

Bora. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

John. Come, let us to the banquet.

[Exeunt John and Borachio.]

Claud. Thus answer I in name of Benedick. But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio. There is certain so.—the prince was for himself.

¹ Importunate. ² This word not in f.e. ³ An allusion to the story of Baucis and Philemon, in Ovid. ⁴ A popular text-book, of which one fragment is extant. It was reprinted in 1833, after its discovery.
SCENE I. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Friendship is constant in all other things, save in the office and affairs of love; therefore, all hearts in love use their own tongues; let every eye negotiate for itself, and trust no agent, for beauty is a witch. Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. This is an accident of hourly proof, which I mistrusted not. Farewell, then! Hero!

Re-enter Benedick.

Bene. Count Claudio?
Claud. Yea, the same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?
Claud. Whither?

Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own businesses, county. What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain, or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

Claud. I pray you, leave me. [Angrily?]

Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man; 'twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

Claud. If it will not be. I'll leave you. [Exit.]

Bene. Alas, poor hurt foul! Now will he creep into edges. — But, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool! — Ha! it may be, I go under that title, because I am merry. — Yea; but so I am apt to do myself wrong: I am not so reputed: it is the base, though bitter disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. Now, signior, where's the count? Did you see him?

Bene. Truth, my lord, I have played the part of lady fame. I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren; I told him, and, I think, I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a walk, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. Pedro. To be whipped! What's his fault?

Bene. The flat transgression of a school-boy; who, being overjoy'd with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. Pedro. Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.

Bene. Yet it had not been amiss. The rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland, he might have worn himself, and the rod he might have bestow'd on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his bird's nest.

D. Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. Pedro. The lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you; the gentleman, that danced with her, told her she is much wrong'd by you.

Bene. O! she misused me past the endurance of a block: an oak, but with one green leaf on it, would have answered her: my very visor began to assume life, and seeld with her. She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince's jester; that I was duller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest, with such importable conveyance, upon me, taast I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me. She speaks poignards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her though she were endowed with all that Adam had lent him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned, spit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her; you shall find her the infernal Áfe in good apparel. I would to God, some scholar would conjure her; for, certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither. So, indeed, all disquiet, horror, and perturbation follow her.

Enter Claudio, Beatrice, Hero, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. Look; here she comes.

Beatrice. Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes, that you can devise to send me on; I will fetch you a toothpick now from the farthest inch of Asia: bring you the length of Preser John's foot; fetch you a hair of the great Chaim's beard; do you any embassage to the Pignaries, rather than hold three words' conference with this harpy? Have you no employment for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here's a dish I love not: I cannot endure my lady Tongue. [Exit.]

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signior Benedick.

Beatrice. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me awhile; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before he won it of me with false dice, therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady; you have put him down.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, count? wherefore are you sad?

Claud. Not sad, my lord.

D. Pedro. How then? Sick?

Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil, count, civil as an orange, and something of a jealous complexion.

D. Pedro. I faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have wooded in thy name, and fair Hero is won: I have broke with her father, and, his good will obtained, name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy! Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it!

Beat. Speak, count, 'tis your cue.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much.—Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give awa myself for you, and dote upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let him not speak neither.

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beatrice. Yea, my lord, I think it; for poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care.—My cousin tells him in his ear, that he is in her heart.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT II.

SCENE II.—Another Room in LEONATO’S HOUSE.

Enter John and Borachio.

John. It is so: the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yea, my lord; but I can cross it.

John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicinal to me: I am sick in displeasure to him, and whatsoever comes afield his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Bora. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

John. Show me briefly how.

Bora. I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favor of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.

John. I remember.

Bora. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady’s chamber-window.

John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bora. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince, your brother: spare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightily hold up) to a contaminated state, such a one as Hero.

John. What proof shall I make of that?

Bora. Proof enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?

John. Only to despite them I will endeavour any thing.

Bora. Go then; find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone; tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio, (as in love of your brother’s honour, who hath made this match, and his friend’s reputation, who is thus like to be cozened with the semblance of a maid,) that you have discovered thus. They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances, which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber-window; hear me call Margaret Hero; hear Margaret term me Borachio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended welding: for in the mean time I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent, and there shall appear such seeming proofs of Hero’s disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance, and all the preparation overthrown.

John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.

Bora. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—LEONATO’S GARDEN.

Enter Benedick, a Boy following.

Bene. Boy !

Boy. Signior.

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it thither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that: [Exit Boy] but I would have thee hence, and here again. I do much wonder, that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the 1 i.e., false married. 2 In my; some eds. read “answer mind.” 3 Liege. 4 Claudio: in f. e. 5 truth: in f. e. 6 with a Boy: in f.

argument of his own scorn by falling in love: and such a man is Claudio. I have known, when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife; and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe: I have known, when he would have walked ten mile afoot to see a good armour; and now will he lie ten nights awake, carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain, and to the purpose, like an honest man, and a soldier; and now is he turn'd orthographe; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted, and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not: I will not be sworn, but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair, yet I am well: another is wise, yet I am well: another virtuous, yet I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain: wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the prince and musicking Love! I will hide me in the arbour. [Retires behind the trees:]

Enter Don Pedro, Leonato, and Claudio.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music?

Claud. Yea, my good lord. How still the evening is,
As hush'd on purpose to grace harmony!

D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself?

Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended,
We'll fit the hide-fox with a penny-worth.

Enter Balthazar, with Musicians.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthazar, we'll hear that song again.

Balth. O! good my lord, tax not so bad a voice
To slander music any more than once.

D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency,
To put a strange face on his own perfection.—
I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.

Balth. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing;
Since many a wooer doth commence his suit
To her he thinks not worthy; yet he woos,
Yet will he swear, he loves.

D. Pedro. Nay, pray thee, come:

Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument, Do it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes;
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

D. Pedro. Why these are very crotchets that he speaks;
Note notes, forsooth, and nothing! [Music.]

Bene. [Behind.] Now, divine air! now is his soul ravish'd!—is it not strange, that shepherds' guts should Kale souls out of men's bodies?—Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

THE SONG.

Balth. Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
Men were devisers ever;

One foot in sea, and one on shore;
To one thing constant never.

Then sigh not so,
But let them go,
And be you blest and bonny,
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into, Hey nonny, nonny.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo,
Or__ dumps do sill and heavy;

The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was heavy.

Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a good song.

Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.

D. Pedro. Ha? no, no; faith, thou singest well enough for a shift.

Bene. [Behind:] An he had been a dog that should have howled thus, they would have hang'd him: and, I pray God, his bad voice bode no mischief! I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry; dost thou hear, Balthazar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music, for to-morrow night we would have it at the lady Hero's chamber window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exeunt Balthazar and Musicians.] Come hither, Leonato: what was it you told me of to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?

Claud. [Aside to Pedro.] O! say;—stalk on, stalk on; the fowl sits. [Aloud.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither: but most wonderful, that she should so dote on signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.

Bene. [Behind.] Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it, but that she loves him with an enraged affection: it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be, she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. 'Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God! counterfeit? There was never counterfeit passion come so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

Claud. [Aside.] Bait the hook well; this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit you,— you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you! You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Bene. [Behind.] I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

Claud. [Aside.] He hath ta'en the infection: hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No, and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says:

"Shall I," says she, "that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?"

Leon. This says she, now, when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times a night, and there will she sit in her smock, till she have write a sheet of paper full. [Sheets of paper.]—My daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper; I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O!—when she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheets?

Claud. That.
Leon. O! she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her:—"I'll measure him," says she, "by my own spirit: for I should flout him, if he write to me; yea, though I love him. I should."—

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sohs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, cries:—

"O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!"

Leon. She doth indeed: my daughter says so; and the ecstasy hath so much overcome her, that my daughter is sometimes afraid she will do a desperate ustrage to herself. It is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good, that Benedick knew of it: some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would but make a sport of it, and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an alms-deed to hang him. She's an excellent sweet lady, and out of all suspicion she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In every thing, but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O! my lord, wisdom and blood combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one, that blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would, she had bestowed this dotage on me; I would have daff'd all other respects, and made her half myself. I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what a' will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?

Claud. Hero thinks surely, she will die: for she says, she will die if he love her not, and she will die ere she make her love known, and she will die if he woo her, rather than she will 'bate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll seem it: for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible spirit.

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath indeed, a good outward happiness.

Claud. Before God, and in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth, indeed, show some sparks that are like wit.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you; and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise: for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most Christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, he must necessarily keep peace: if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro. And so will he do; for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jests e will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece. Shall we go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never tell him, my lord: let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible: she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we will hear further of it by your daughter: let it cool the while. I love Benedick well, and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

Claud. [Aside.] If he do not dote upon her upon this, I will never trust my expectation.

D. Pedro. [Aside.] Let there be the same net spread for her: and that must your daughter and her gentlewomen carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter: that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.]

Bene. [Advancing from the Arbour.] This can be no trick: the conference was sadly borne.—They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady: it seems, her affections have their full bent. Love me! why, it must be requited. I hear how I am censured: they say I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her; they say, too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection—I did never think to marry.—I must not seem proud. Happy are they that hear their detractors, and can put them to meaning. They say, the lady is fair; 'tis a truth, I can bear them witness: and virtuous; 'tis so, I cannot reprove it: and wise, but for loving me; by my troth, it is no addition to her wit, nor great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. I may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have railed so long against marriage; but doth not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his age, that he cannot endure in his youth. Shall quips, and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? No; the world must be peopled. When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I was married.—Here comes Beatrice. By this day, she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Bene. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me: if it had been painful, I would not have come.

Bene. You take pleasure, then, in the message!

Beat. Yea, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point, and not a' choke a daw withal.—you have no stomach, signor: fare you well. [Exit.

Bene. Ha! "Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner"—there's a double meaning in that.

"I took no more pains for those thanks, than you took pains to thank me"—that's as much as to say, any pains that I take for you is as easy as thanks.—If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain: if I do not love her, I am a Jew. I will go get her picture. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thee to the parlour;

[There shall thou find my cousin Beatrice]

Proposing with the prince and Claudio:

[Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula]

Walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse

Scene II.

Enter Beatrice, behind: in f. e. *Not in f. o. 3 Wild hawks. 4 every day: in f. e 5 behind the back. in f. e

MUCH warrant; day; and know, behin such a part, to praise him more than ever man did merit. My talk to thee must be how Benedick is sick in love with Beatrice; of this matter is little Cupid's crafty arrow made, That only wounds by hearsay. Now begin:

Enter Beatrice, stealing in behind. 1

For look where Beatrice, like a lapsing, runs Close by the ground, to hear our conference.

Urs. The pleasantest angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden ears the silver stream, And greedily devour the treacherous bait:
So angle we for Beatrice; who even now Is couched in the woodbine coverture. Fear you not part of the dialogue.

Hero. Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it.—
No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful; I know, her spirits are as coy and wild As haggards of the rock.

Urs. But are you sure That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely? Hero. So says the prince, and my new-trothed lord. Urs. And did they bid you tell her of it, madam? Hero. They did; I must treat me to acquaint her of it; But I persuaded them if they lov'd Benedick, To wish him wrestle with affection, And never to let Beatrice know of it.

Urs. Why did you so? Dost not the gentleman deserve as full, as fortunate a bed, As ever Beatrice shall couched upon? Hero. O God of love! I know, he doth deserve As much as may be yielded to a man: But nature never fram'd a woman's heart Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice; Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes, Misprising what they look on; and her wit Values itself so highly, that to her All matter else seems weak. She cannot love, Nor take no shape nor project of affection, She is so self-endured.

Urs. Sure, I think so;
And, therefore, certainly, it were not good She knew his love, lest she make sport at it.

Hero. Why, you speak truth. I never yet saw man,
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely feature'd, But she would spell him backward: if fair-faced, She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister: If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick, Made a foul blot: if tall, a lance ill-headed; If low, an agate very vilely cut: If speaking, why, a vane blown with all winds: If silent, why, a block moved with none. So turns she every man the wrong side out, And never gives to truth and virtue that Which simplicity and merit purchase.

Urs. Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.
Hero. No; not to be so odd, and from all fashions As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable.

But who dare tell her so? If I should speak, She would mock me into air: O! she would laugh me Out of myself, press me to death with wit. Therefore, let Benedick, like cover'd fire, Consume away in sighs. waste inwardly:
It were a better death than she with mocks, Which is as bad as die with tackling.

Urs. Yet tell her of it: hear what she will say.

Hero. No; rather I will go to Benedick, And counsel him to fight against his passion: And, truly, I'll devise some honest slanders To stain my cousin with: One doth not know, How much an ill word may enmoyon liking.

Urs. O! do not your cousin such a wrong.
She cannot be so much without true judgment, (Having so swift and excellent a wit, As she is priz'd to have) as to refuse So rare a gentleman as signor Benedick.

Hero. He is the only man of Italy,
Always excepted my dear Claudio.

Urs. I pray you, be not angry with me, madam, Speaking my fancy: signor Benedick,
For shape, for bearing, argument and valour, Goes foremost in report, through Italy,

Hero. Indeed, he hath an excellent good name.

Urs. His excellence did earn it, ere he had it.—
When are you married, madam?

Hero. Why, in a day:—to-morrow. Come, go in: I'll show thee some attires, and have thy counsel, Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow.

Urs. [Aside.] She's lim'd, I warrant you: we have caught her, madam.

Hero. [Aside.] If it prove so, then loving goes by baps:
Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps.

[Exit Hero and Ursula.

Beat. [Advancing.] What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true?

Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn, so much? Contempt, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu!

No glory lives but in the lack of such.
And, Benedick, love on: I will requite thee,
Taming my wild heart to thy loving hand.
If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee
To bind our loves up in a holy band,
For others say thou dost deserve, and I
Believe it better than reportingly.

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claud. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchsafe me.

D. Pedro. Nay; that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth: he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

Bene. Gallants, I am not as I have been.
Leon. So say I: methinks you are sadder.

Claud. I hope he be in love.

D. Pedro. Hang him, truant! there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch'd with love. If he be sad he wants money.

Bene. I have the tooth-ache.

D. Pedro. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it!

Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

D. Pedro. What! sigh for the tooth-ache!

Leon. Where is but a humour, or a worm?

Bene. Well, every one can master a grief, but he that has it.

Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.

D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises: as to be a Dutchman to-day, a Frenchman to-morrow, in the shape of two countries at once; as a German from the waist downward, all slopes, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet. Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: a' brushes his hat o' mornings; what should that bode?

D. Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

Claud. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed'tennis-balls.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. Pedro. Nay, a' rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that?

Claud. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's in love.

D. Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy. Claud. And when was he wont to wash his face?

D. Pedro. Yea, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit, which is now crept into a lustrestring, and now governed by stops.

D. Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him.

Conclude, conclude, he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.

D. Pedro. That would I know too: I warrant, one that knows him not.

Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and in despite of all dies for him.

D. Pedro. She shall be buried with her face upwards.

Bene. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-ache.—Old signior, walk aside with me: I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.]

D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. 'Tis even so, Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

Enter John.

John. My lord and brother, God save you.

D. Pedro. Good den, brother.

John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

D. Pedro. In private?

John. If it please you; yet count Claudio may hear, for what I would speak of concerns him.

D. Pedro. What's the matter?

John. [To Claudio.] Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

D. Pedro. You know, he does.

John. I know not that, when he knows what I know.

Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you, discover it.

John. You may think, I love you not: let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest. For my brother, I think, he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage; surely, suit ill spent, and labour ill bestowed!

D. Pedro. Why, what's the matter?

John. I came hither to tell you; and, circumstances shortened, (for she has been too long a talking of) the lady is disloyal.

Claud. Who? Hero?

John. Even she: Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

Claud. Disloyal?

John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness: I could say, she were worse: think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till farther warrant; go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered, even the night before her wedding-day; if you love her then, to-morrow wed her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.

Claud. May this be so?

D. Pedro. I will not think it.

John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know. If you will follow me, I will show you enough; and when you have seen more, and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Claud. If I see any thing to-night, why I should not marry her to-morrow, in the congregation, where I should wed, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And, as I woed for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

John. I will dispassion her no farther, till you are my witnesses: bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. Pedro. O day untowardly turned!

Claud. O mischief strangely thwarting!

John. O plague right well prevented! So will you say, when you have seen the sequel. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the Watch.

Dogb. Are you good men and true?

Verg. Yea, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dogb. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the prince's watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.

Dogb. First, who think you the most desartless man to be constable?

1 Watch. Hugh Osteak, sir, or George Seacoal, for they can write and read.

Dogb. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal. God hath blessed you with a good name: to be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune, but to write and read comes by nature.

2 Watch. Both which, master constable,—

Dogb. You have: I knew it would be your answer

1 The remainder of the sentence to the period, is from the quarto.

2 nose breeches

3 from the quarto

4 from the quarto: the folio
Well, for your favour, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no bost of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore, bear you the lantern. This is your charge. You shall comprehend all vagrom men: you are to bid any man stand, in the prince’s name.

2 Watch. How, if a’ will not stand?

Dogb. Why then, take no note of him, but let him go: and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince’s subjects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince’s subjects.—You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and talk is most tolerable, and not to be endured.

2 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogb. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should offend; only, have a care that your bills be not stolen. Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

2 Watch. How, if they will not?

Dogb. Why then, let them alone till they are sober; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

2 Watch. Well, sir.

Dogb. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be a true man; and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

2 Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dogb. Truly, by your office you may: but, I think, they that touch pitch will be defiled. The most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is, to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

Dogb. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will: much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

2 Watch. How, if the nurse be asleep, and will not hear it?

Dogb. Why then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying; for the ever that will not hear her lamb when it baaes, will never answer a call when he bleats.

Verg. ’Tis very true.

Dogb. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince’s own person: if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay, by’r lady, that, I think, a’ cannot.

Dogb. Five shillings to one on’t, with any man that knows the statutes, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince be willing: for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verg. By’r lady, I think it be so.

Dogb. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night: an there be any matter of weight chances, call up me. Keep your fellows’ counsels and your own, and good night. Come, neighbour.

2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dogb. One word more, honest neighbours. I pray you, watch about signior Leonato’s door: for the wed ding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to night. Adieu; be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges]

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What, Conrade!

Watch. [Aside.] Peace! stir not.

Bora. Conrade, I say!

Con. Here, man: I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought, there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close, then, under this penthouse, for it drizzles rain, and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

Bora. Thou shouldst rather ask, if it were possible any villainy should be so rich: for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirmed. Thou knowest, that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Therefore I will in this business.

Watch. [Aside.] I know that Deformed; a’ has been a vile thief this seven year; a’ goes up and down like a gentleman. I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?

Con. No: ’t was the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily a turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five and thirty? sometime, fashioning them like Pharaoh’s soldiers in the reed2 painting; sometime, like god Bel’s priests in the old church window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his eddie-piece seems as massy as his club.

Con. All this I see, and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art thou not thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so, neither: but know, that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the lady Hero’s gentlewoman, by the name of Hero: she leans me out at her mistress’ chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good night.

—I tell thee this tale vilely:—I should first tell thee, how the prince, Claudio, and my master, placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they3 Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil, my master, knew she was Margaret, and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio. enraged; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.

1 Watch. [Coming forward.] We charge you in the prince's name, stand.
2 Watch. Call up the right master constable. We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery, that ever was known in the commonwealth.
1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them: I know him, a' 1 wear a lock.
Con. Masters, masters!
2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.
Con. Masters,—
1 Watch. Never speak: we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.
Bora. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.
Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you. [Exit Ursula.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.
Urs. I will, lady.
Hero. And bid her come hither.
Urs. Well. [Exit Ursula.

Marg. Troth, I think, your other rabato were better.
Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.
Marg. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant, your cousin will say so.
Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another.
I'll wear none but this.
Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown's a most rare fashion, I faith. I saw the duchess of Milan's gown, that they praise so.
Hero. O! that exceeds, they say.
Marg. By my troth, it's but a night-gown in respect of yours: cloth o' gold, and cuts, and laced with silver, set with pearls down the sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts round, under-borne with a blushing tinsel; but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.
Hero. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!
Marg. 'T will be more joyous soon by the weight of a man.
Hero. Fie upon thee! art not ashamed?
Marg. Of what, lady? of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think, you would have me say, saving your reverence,—a husband: an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend no body. Is there any harm in it,—dearer for a husband? None, I think, an it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light, and not heavy: ask my lady Beatrice else; here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good morning, coz.
Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero.
Hero. Why, how now? do you speak in the sick tone?
Beat. I am out of all other tone, methinks.

Marg. Clap us into—'Light o' love,' 1 that goes without a burden: do you sing it, and I'll dance it.
Beat. Yea, 'Light o' love,' with your heels!—then, if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.
Marg. O, illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.
Beat. 'T is almost five o'clock, cousin: 'tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill—Heigh ho!
Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?
Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H. 2
Marg. Well, an ye be not turned Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.
Beat. What means the fool, troth?
Marg. Nothing I; but God send every one their heart's desire!
Hero. These gloves the count sent me, they are an excellent perfume.
Beat. I am sufficed, cousin: I cannot smell.
Marg. A maid, and sufficed! there's goodly catching of cold.
Beat. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you profess'd apprehension?
Marg. Ever since you left it. Dost not my wit become me rarely?
Beat. It is not seen enough, you should wear it in your cap.—By my troth, I am sick.
Marg. Get you some of this distilled carduns beneas, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God. I am as honest as any man living, that is an old man, and no honester than I.

Dogb. Comparisons are odorous; palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dogb. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor Duke's officers; but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousness on me? ha!

Dogb. Yea, an 't were a thousand pound more than 'tis; for I hear as good exclamation on your worship, as of any man in the city, and though I be but a poor man. I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so am I.

Leon. I would fain know what you have to say.

Verg. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have taken a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.

Dogb. A good old man, sir; he will be talking: as they say, when the age is in, the wit is out. God help us! it is a world to see!—Well said, i' faith, neighbour Verges:—well, God's a good man; an two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind. An honest soul, i' faith, sir: by my troth he is, as ever broke bread; but, God is to be worshipped: all men are not alike; alas, good neighbour!

Leon. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.

Dogb. Gifts, that God gives.

Leon. I must leave you.

Dogb. One word, sir. Our watch, sir, have, indeed, comprehended two suspicious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me: I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you.

Dogb. It shall be sufficiency.

Leon. Drink some wine ere you go. Fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. I'll wait upon them: I am ready.

[Exeunt Leonato and Messenger.

Dogb. Go, good partner, go; get you to Francis Seacoal; bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol: we are now to examination these men.

Verg. And we must do it wisely.

Dogb. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here's that shall drive some of them to a non con: only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the gaol.

[Exeunt

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, John, Leonato, Friar, Claudio, Benedick, Hero, Beatrice, &c.

Leon. Come, friar Francis, be brief: only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?

Claud. No.

Leon. To be married to her; friar, you come to marry her?

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment, why you should not be conjoined, I charge you on your souls to utter it.

Claud. Know you any, Hero?

Hero. None, my lord.

Friar. Know you any, count?

Leon. I dare make his answer; none.

Claud. O, what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do, not knowing what they do!

Bene. How now! Interjections! Why thou, some be of laughing, as, ha! ha! ha!

Claud. Stand thee by, Friar.—Father, by your leave: Will you with free and unconstrained soul Give me this maid, your daughter?

Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Claud. And what have I to give you back, whose worth May counterfeit this rich and precious gift?

D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Claud. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankful-ness.

The rest of the speech is from the quarto. * A quotation from the Accidence. * thee: in f. e. * wide: in f. e. The change was suggested also by Pope. * rage: in f. e. * wide: in f. e.

ACT IV.

D Pedro. What should I speak? I stand dishonour'd, that have gone out
To link my dear friend to a common stake.

Leon. Are these things spoken, or do I but dream?

John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

Bene. This looks not like a night.

Hero. True? O God!

Claud. Leonato, stand I here?

Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother?

Is this face Hero's? Are our eyes our own?

Leon. All this is so; but what of this, my lord?

Claud. Let me but move one question to your daughter.

And, by that fatherly and kindly power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.

Hero. O God, defend me! how am I beset!—

What kind of catechizing call you this?

Claud. To make you answer truly to your name.

Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name
With any just reproach?

Claud. Marry, that can Hero:
HerO itself can blot out Hero's virtue,
What man was he that did with you yesternight
Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?

Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.

Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.

D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden.—Leonato,
I am sorry you must hear: upon mine honour,
Myself, my brother, and this griev'd count,
Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night,
Talk with a ruffian at her chamber window;
Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain,
Confess'd the vile encounters they have had
A thousand times in secret.

John. Fie, fie! they are not to be nam'd, my lord,
Not to be spoke of;
There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. Thou pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.

Claud. O Hero! what a Hero hast thou been,
If half thy outward graces had been plac'd
About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart!
But, fare thee well, most foul, most fair! Farewell,
Thou pure, incomparable, impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eyelids shall conjecture hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.

Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?

[Hero swoons.

Beat. Why, how now, cousin! wherefore sink you down?

John. Come, let us go. These things, come thus to light,
Smother her spirits up.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, John, and Claudius.

Bene. How doth the lady?

Beat. Dead, I think.—help, uncle! Hero! why, Hero!—Undo!—Signior Benedick!—

Friar. O foul fate! take not away thy heavy hand:
Death is the fairest cover for her shame,
That may be wish'd for.

Beat. How now, cousin Hero?

Friar. Have comfort, lady.

Leon. Dost thou look up?
SCENE I.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Leon. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.

Friar. 'Tis well consented: present by a way,
For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure.—
Come, lady, die to live: this wedding day, Perhaps, is but prolong'd: have patience, and endure. [Exeunt Friar, Hero, and Leonato.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?
Beat. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.
Bene. I will not desire that.
Beat. You have no reason; I do it freely.
Bene. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is wronged.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would right her!
Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?
Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.
Bene. May a man do it?
Beat. It is a man's office, but not yours.
Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well as you.

Is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not. It were as possible for me to say; I loved nothing so well as you; but believe me not, and yet I lie not: I confess nothing: nor deny nothing.—I am sorry for my cousin.

Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thou livest me.
Beat. Do not swear by it, and eat it.
Bene. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says I love not you.
Beat. Will you not eat your word?
Bene. With no sauce that can be devised to it. I protest, I love thee.
Beat. Why, then, God forgive me!
Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice?
Beat. You have stayed me in a happy hour: I was about to protest, I loved you.
Bene. And do it with all thy heart.
Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.
Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.
Beat. Kill Claudio.
Bene. Ha! not for the wide world.
Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.
Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.
Beat. I am gone, though I am here: there is no love in you.—Nay, I pray you, let me go.
Bene. Beatrice,—
Beat. In faith, I will go.
Bene. We'll be friends first.
Beat. You dare easier be friends with me, than fight with mine enemy.
Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy.
Beat. Is he not approved in the height a villain, that had slandered, scorned, dishonoured my kinswoman?

O, that I were a man!—What! bear her in hand until they come to take hands, and then with public accusation, uncorrected slander, unmitigated rancour,—O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Hear me, Beatrice—
Beat. Talk with a man out at a window!—a proper saying.
Bene. Nay, but Beatrice—
Beat. Sweet Hero!—she is wronged, she is slandered, she is undone.

Bene. Beat.

Beat. Princes, and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count, count confect, a sweet gallant, surely! O, that I were a man for his sake! or that I frame of: in f. 0 kind: in f. 0 princes: in quarto ack'd and lost: in f. e.

had any friend would be a man for my sake! But mankind is melted into courtesy, valour into compliment, and men are only turned to courtesy, and trim ones too; he is now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and swears it. — I cannot be a man with wishing; therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

Bene. Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.

Beat. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.

Bene. Think you in your soul the count Claudio hath wronged Hero?

Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought, or a soul.

Bene. Enough! I am engaged, I will challenge him. I will kiss your hand, and so I leave you. By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account. As you hear of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin: I must say she is dead; and so, farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Prison.

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Conrad and Borachio.

Dogb. Is our whole dissemblance appeared?

Verg. O! a stool and a cushion for the sexton.

Sexton. Which be the malefactors?

Dogb. Marrv, that am I and my partner.

Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

Dogb. Yea, marry, let them come before me.—What is your name, friend?

Bora. Borachio.

Dogb. Pray write down Borachio.—Yours, sirrah?

Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrad.

Dogb. Write down master gentleman Conrad.—Masters, do you serve God?

Con. Bora. Yes, sir, we hope.

Dogb. Write down—that they hope they serve God;—and write God first: for God defend but God should go before such villains!—Masters, it is proved already that you are lii less than false knaves, and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

Con. Marrv, sir, we say we are none.

Dogb. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him.—Come you hither, sirrah: a word in your ear, sir: I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

Bora. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

Dogb. Well, stand aside.—'Fore God, they are both in a tale. Have you writ down, that they are none?

Sexton. Master constable, you go not the way to examine: you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Dogb. Yea, marry, that's the easiest way.—Let the watch come forth.—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

1 Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

Dogb. Write down—prince John a villain.—Why this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

Sexton. What heard you him say else?

2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.

Dogb. Flat burglary as ever was committed.

Verg. Yea, by the mass, that it is.

Sexton. What else, fellow?

1 Watch. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

Dogb. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.

Sexton. What else?

2 Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stolen away: Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and, upon the grief of this, suddenly died. Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's: I will go before, and show them their examination. [Exit.

Dogb. Come, let them be opinioned.

Verg. Let them be bound.

Bora. Hands off, coxcomb!

Dogb. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write the prince's officer, coxcomb.—Come, bind them.—Thou naughty varlet.

Con. Away! you are an ass: you are an ass.

Dogb. Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years?—O, that he were here to write me down an ass!—but, masters, remember, that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass.—No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness. I am a wise fellow; and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a householder; and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messina; and one that knows the law, to go to; and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had leases; and one that hath two gowns, and every thing handsome about him. Bring him away. O, that I had been writ down an ass! [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself; and 'tis not wisdom thus to second grief against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel, which falls into mine ears as profitless as water in a sieve. Give not me counsel;
SCENE I.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. {119

But there is no such man; for, brother, men can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief which they themselves do not feel, but, tasting it, their counsel turns to passion, which before would give precepts to medicine to rage; fester strong madness in a silken thread; charm aching with air, and agony with words. No, no, 'tis all men's office to speak patience to those that wring under the load of sorrow; but no man's virtue, nor sufficiency, to be so moral when he shall endure the like himself. Therefore give me no counsel: My griefs cry louder than advertisement.

Ant. Therein do men from children nothing differ. Leon. I pray thee, peace! I will be flesh and blood: For there was never yet philosopher, that could endure the tooth-ache patiently; however they have writ the state of gods, and made a pause at chance and suffering.

Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself; make those do offend you suffer too.

Leon. There thou speakest reason: nay, I will do so.

My soul doth tell me Hero is belied. And that shall Claudio know; so shall the prince, and all of them, that thus dishonour her.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

Ant. Here comes the prince, and Claudio hastily.

D. Pedro. Good den, good den.

Cl audio. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Hear you, my lords.—

D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.

Leon. Some haste, my lord!—well, fare you well, my lord.

Ant. Are you so hasty now?—well, all is one.

D. Pedro. Nay; do not quarrel with us, good old man.

Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling, some of us would lie low.

Cl audio. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry, thou dost wrong me; thou, dissembler, thou.

Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword, I fear thee not.

Cl audio. Marry, beshrew my hand, if it should give your age such cause of fear. In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leon. Think, think, man! never fear and jest at me: I speak not like a dotard, nor a fool; as, under privilege of age, to brag what I have done being young, or what would do, were I not old. Know, Claudio, to thy head, thou hast so wrong'd mine innocent child and me that I am forc'd to lay my reverence by, and with my hair, and bruises of many days, do challenge thee to trial of a man.

I say, thou hast belied mine innocent child: Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart.

And she lies buried with her ancestors. O! in a tomb where never scandal slept, save this of hers, fram'd by thy villainy.

Cl audio. My villainy?

Leon. Thou, Claudio; thine, I say.

D. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Leon. My lord, my lord.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare; despite his nice fence, and his active practice. His May of youth, and bloom of lustyhood.

Claud. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Canst thou so daff me? Thou hast kill'd my child:

If thou kill'st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:

But that's no matter; let him kill one first:—

Win me and wear me,—let him answer me.—

Come, follow me, boy! come, sir boy, come, follow me. Sir boy, I'll whip you from your joining fence, Nay; as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother—

Ant. Content yourself. God knows, I lov'd my niece: And she is dead: slander'd to death by villains, That dare as well answer a man, indeed, as I dare take a serpent by the tongue. Boys, apes, braggarts, Jacks, milksops!—

Leon. Brother Antony—

Ant. Hold you content. What, man! I know them; yea, And what they weigh, even to the uttermost scruple: Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys, That lie, and cog, and hint, deprave and slander, Go antickly, and show an outward hideousness, And speak half a dozen dangerous words, How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst, And this is all!

Leon. But, brother Antony—

Ant. Do not you meddle, let me deal in this.

D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.

My heart is sorry for your daughter's death: But, on my honour, she was charg'd with nothing But what was true, and very fully of proof.

Leon. My lord, my lord!—

I will not hear you.

Leon. No?

Come, brother, away.—I will be heard.—

Ant. And shall, or some of us will smart for it.

[Exeunt Leonato and Antonio.

Enter Benedick.

D. Pedro. See, see! here comes the man we went to seek.

Claud. Now, signior, what news?

Bene. Good day, my lord.

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior: you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother. What think'st thou? Had we fought, I doubt, we should have beer too young for them. Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true valor, came to seek you both.

Claud. We have been up and down to seek thee, for we are high-proof melancholy, and would fain have it beaten away. Wilt thou use thy wit?

Bene. It is in my scabbard: shall I draw it?

D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

Claud. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit—I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; draw to pleasure us.

1 And sorrow, wag: in f. e. 2 Ben Jonson calls a book-worm, a candle-waster. This would make the text mean, pedantic speech. 3 pitch: often spelt as in the text. 4 Put me aside. 5 Draw their instruments from their cases.
D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale.—
Art thou sick, or angry?
Claud. What! courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.
Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, if you charge it against me.—I pray you, choose another subject.
Claud. Nay then, give him another staff: this last was broke cross.
D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more.
I think he be angry indeed.
Claud. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.¹
Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?
Claud. God bless me from a challenge!
Bene. You are a villain.—I jest not.—I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare.—Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.
D. Pedro. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.
Claud. What a feast? a feast?
D. Pedro. I'faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf's-head and capers,² the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught.—Shall I not find a woodcock too?
Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well: it goes easily.
D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day. I said, thou hadst a fine wit: "True," said she, "a fine little one:" "No," said I, "a great wit:" "Right," says she, "a great gross one:" "Nay," said I, "a good wit:" "Just," said she, "it hurts nobody:" "Nay," said I, "the gentleman is wise:" "Certain," said she, "a wise gentleman:" "Nay," said
I, "he hath the tongues:" "That I believe," said she,
"for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forewore on Tuesday morning: there's a double tongue; there's two tongues." Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.
Claud. For the which she wept heartily, and said she cared not.
D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly. The old man's daughter told us all.
Claud. All, all; and moreover, who saw him when he was hid in the garden.
D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?
Claud. Yea, and text underneath, "Here dwells Benedick the married man!"³ Bene. Fare you well, boy: you know my mind. I will leave you now to your gossip-like humour; you break jests as braggets do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not.—My lord, for your many courtesies
I thank you; I must discontinue your company. Your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina: you have, among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady. For my lord Lack-beard, there, he and I shall meet; and till then, peace be with him. [Exit Benedick.
D. Pedro. He is in earnest.
Claud. In most profound earnest; and, I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.
D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee?
Claud. Most sincerely.

¹ Large belts were worn with the girdle before, but for wrestling, the buckle was turned behind, to give the adversary a faire graç at the girdle. The action was therefore a challenge.—Holt White.
² a capon : in f. e. ³ An allusion to a popular belief that a woodcock had no brains ⁴ God—with a period at the end of the speech: in f. e.
Leon. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast kill’d

Mine innocent child?

Bona. Yea, even I alone.

Leon. No, not so, villain; then holiest thyself:
Here stand a pair of honourable men,
A third is fled, that had a hand in it.—
I thank you, princes, for my daughter’s death;
Record it with your high and worthy deeds.
’T was bravely done, if you bethink you of it.

Claud. I know not how to pray your patience,
Yet I must speak. Choose your revenge yourself;
Impose me to what penance your invention
Can lay upon my sin: yet sinn’d I not,
But in mistaking.

D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I;
And yet, to satisfy this good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he’ll enjoin me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you cease my daughter live;
That was impossible. But, I pray you both,
Possess the people in Messina, here,
How innocently she died: and, if your love
Can labour aught in sad invention,
Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb,
And sing it to her bones: sing it to-night.—
To-morrow morning come you to my house,
And since you could not be my son-in-law,
Be yet my nephew. My brother hath a daughter,
Almost the copy of my child that’s dead,
And she alone is heir to both of us:
Give her the right you should have given her cousin,
And so dies my revenge.

Claud. O noble sir!
Your over-kindness doth wring tears from me.
I do embrace your offer, and dispose
For heneckthor of poor Claudio.

Leon. To-morrow, then, I will expect your coming:
To-night I take my leave.—This naughty man
Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,
Who, I believe, was pact in all this wrong,
Hid’t to it by your brother.

Bona. No, by my soul, she was not;
Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me;
But always hath been just and virtuous,
In any thing that I do know by her.

Dobg. Moreover, sir, which, indeed, is not under white and black, this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remembered in his punishment. And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it, and borrows money in God’s name; the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God’s sake. Pray you, examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Dobg. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth, and I praise God for you.

Leon. There’s for thy pains.

Dobg. God save the foundation!

Leon. Go: I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.

Dobg. I leave an arrant knave with your worship:
which, I beseech your worship, to correct yourself for the example of others. God keep your worship: I wish your worship well: God restore you to health. I humbly give you leave to depart, and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it.—Come, neighbour.

Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Aut. Farewell, my lords: we look for you to-morrow.

D. Pedro. We will not fail.

Claud. To-night I’ll mourn with Hero.

Leon. Bring you these fellows on. We’ll talk with Margaret.

How her acquaintance grew with this low’d fellow.

SCENE II.—Leonato’s Garden

Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, deserve well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg. Will you, then, write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thea deserve it.

Marg. To have no man come over me? why shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound’s mouth;
it calethes.

Marg. And your’s as blunt as the fencer’s foils;
which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman: and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice. I give thee the bucklers.

Marg. Give us the swords, we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

Marg. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who, I think hath legs.

Exit Margaret.

Bene. And therefore will come.

The god of love,
That sits above,
And knows me, and knows me,
How pitiful I deserve.

I mean, in singing; but in loving, Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first employer of panders, and a whole book full of these quondam carpet-mongers whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over, as my poor self, in love. Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried: I can find out no rhyme to “lady” but “baby,” an innocent rhyme; for “scorn,” “horn,” a hard rhyme; for “school,” “fool,” a babbling rhyme—very ominous endings. No, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.—

Exit Beatrice.

Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Ye, signior; and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O! stay but till then.

Beat. Then[4] is spoken; fare you well now:—and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came for; which is,
with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noise; therefore
I will depart unkissed.

1. bid: in f e. 2. Knight ad hes to the old reading pack’d, an old form of the word in the text. 3. Wicked. 4. The beginning of a song by William Ryall.
Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge, and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my oed parts did you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epithet. I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think. Alas, poor heart! If you spit it for my sake, I will spit it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession: there's not one who man among twenty that will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbours. If a man do not erect, in this age, his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument, than the bell rings, and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. Question:—why an hour in clamber, and a quarter in rhenum: therefore is it most expedient for the wise, (if Don Wurm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary,) to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for praising myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy. And now tell me, how doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend. There will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle. Yonder's old coil at home: it is proved, my lady Hero been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is tied and gone. Will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Attendants, with music and lapers.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Att. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reads.]

EPIPHAPHI.

Done to death by slanderous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies:
Death, in gordan of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies.
So the life, that died with shame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.
Hang thou there upon the tomb,
Praising her when I am dumb.—

Now music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin bright:
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb we go.

MIDNIGHT, ASSIST OUR MOON;
HELP US TO SIGH AND GROAN,
HEAVILY, HEAVILY:
GRAVES, YAWN, AND YIELD YOUR DEAD.
TILL DEATH BE UTTERED, 2
HEAVILY, HEAVILY.

Claud. Now, unto thy bones good night!

Yearly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters: put your torches out.

The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle day Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Thanks to you all, and leave us: fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters: each his way can tell.*

[Exeunt Torch-bearers.]

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other weed; And then to Leonato's we will go.

Claud. And Hymen now with luckier issue speed, Than this, for whom we render'd up this woe! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice.

Ursula, Friar, and Hero.

Friar. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who accuse'd her

Upon the error that you heard debated: But Margaret was in some fault for this, Although against her will, as it appears

In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things son so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enforc'd

To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all,

Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves, And, when I send for you, come hither mask'd.

The prince and Claudio promis'd by this hour To visit me.—You know your office, brother; You must be father to your brother's daughter, And give her to young Claudio.

[Exeunt Ladies.

Ant. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Friar. Frier, I must entreat your pains, I think. Friar. To do what, signior?

Bene. To bind me, or undo me; one of them.—

Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior, Your niece regards me with an eye of favour.

Leon. That eye my daughter lent her: 'tis most true.

Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her.

Leon. The sight whereof, I think, you had from me, From Claudio, and the prince. But what's your will?—

Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical:
But, for my will, my will is, your good will May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin'd In the state of honourable marriage:—

In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

Leon. My heart is with your liking.

Friar. And my help

Here come the prince, and Claudio. 4

[Exeunt Don Pedro and Claudio, with Attendants.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio.

Come here attend you. Are you yet determin'd To-day to marry with my brother's daughter?

Claud. I'll hold my mind were she an Ethiop.

Leon. Call her forth, brother: here's the friar ready.

[Exit Antonio.

1 Used in the colloquial emphatic sense, for "great." 2 Knight: in f. e. 3 Done away with. 4 Each his several way: n. f. e. 5 Not in f. e. 4 This line is from the quarto.
SCENE IV.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

123

That you have such a February face.

So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness?

Claud. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull.—

Tush! fear not, man, we'll tip thy horns with gold.

And all Europa shall rejoice at thee.

As once Europa did at lusty Jove.

When he would play the noble beast in love.

Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low:

And some such strange bull leap'd thy father's cow,

And got a calf in that same noble feat.

Much like to you, for you have just his beat.

Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.

Claud. For this I owe you; here come other reckonings.

Which is the lady I must seize upon?

Leon. This same is she, and I do give you her.

Claud. Why, then she's mine.—Sweet, let me see your face.

Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand

Before this friar, and swear to marry her.

Claud. Give me your hand before this holy friar:

I am your husband, if you like of me.

Hero. And when I liv'd, I was your other wife.

[Unmasking.

Claud. And when you lov'd, were you my other husband?

Claud. Another Hero?

Hero. Nothing certain.

One Hero died belied; but I do live,

And, surely as I live, I am a maid.

D Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!

Leon. She died, my lord, but whilst her slander liv'd.

Friar. All this amazement can I qualify;

When after that the holy rites are ended,

I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death:

Mean time, let wonder seem familiar,

And to the chapel let us presently.

Bene. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice?

Beat. I answer to that name. [Unmasking.] What is your will?

Bene. Do not you love me?

Beat. Why, no more than reason.

Bene. Why, then, your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio,

Have been deceived, for they swore you did.

Beat. Do not you love me?

Bene. Troth, no more than reason.

Beat. Why, then, my cousin, Margaret, and Ursula,

Are much deceived: for they swore, you did.

Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me.

Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

Bene. It is not matter.—Then, you do not love me?

Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.

Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.

Claud. And I'll be sworn upon it, that he loves her.

For here's a paper, written in his hand,

A halting sonnet of his own pure brain.

Fashion'd to Beatrice.

Hero. And here's another,

Writ in my cousin's hand, stolen from her pocket,

Containing her affection unto Benedick.

Bene. A miracle! here's our own hands against our hearts.—Come, I will have thee: but, by this right, I take thee for pity.

Beat. I would not deny you; but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion, and partly, to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption.

Bene. Peace! I will stop your mouth.

D Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick, the married man?

Bene. I'll tell thee what, prince; a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour. Dost thou think I care for a satire, or an epigram? No: if a man will be beaten with brains, a' shall wear nothing handsome about him. In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it: and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it, for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion.—For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but, in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin.

Claud. I had well hoped, thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have engulph'd thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.

Bene. Come, come, we are friends.—Let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives' heels.

Leon. We'll have dancing afterward.

Bene. First, of my word; therefore, play, music!—Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife; there is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your brother John is taken in flight

And brought with armed men back to Messina.

Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow; I'll devise three brave punishments for him.—Strike up, pipers.

[Enter a Messenger.]

Officers and others, attendants on the King and Princess.

SCENE, Navarre.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Navarre. A Park, with a Palace in it.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumaine.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives, Live register'd upon our brazen tombs, And then grace us in the disgrace of death; When, spite of cormorant devouring time, 'Th' endeav'our of this present breath may buy That honour, which shall bate his scythe's keen edge, And make us heirs of all eternity. Therefore, brave conquerors!—for so you are, That war against your own affections. And the huge army of the world's desires,— Our late edict shall strongly stand in force. Navarre shall be the wonder of the world: Our court shall be a little Academe, Still and contemplative in living art.

You three, Biron, Dumaine, and Longaville, Have sworn for three years' term to live with me, My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes, That are recorded in this schedule here: [Showing it.] Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names, That his own hand may strike his honour down, That violates the smallest branch herein.

If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do, Subscribe to your deep oaths, and keep them too.

Long. I am resolv'd: 'tis but a three years' fast. The mind shall banquet, though the body pine: Fat paunches have lean pates; and dainty bits Take rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the waist. Dum. My loving lord, Dumaine is mortified. The grosser manner of this world's delights He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves: To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine at, With all these living in philosophy. Biron. I can but say their protestation over; So much, dear liege, I have already sworn, That is, to live and study here three years.

But there are other strict observances; As, not to see a woman in that term. Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there: And, one day in a week to touch no food, And but one meal on every day beside. The which, I hope, is not enrolled there: And then, to sleep but three hours in the night, And not be seen to wink of all the day, When I was wont to think no harm all night, And make a dark night, too, of half the day, Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there. O! these are barren tasks, too hard to keep, Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep.

King. Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these Biron. Let me say no, my liege, an if you please. I only swore to study with your grace, And stay here in your court for three years' space. Long. You swore to that, Biron, and to the rest. Biron. By yea, and nay, sir, then I swore in jest. What is the end of study, let me know? King. Why, that to know which else we should no know. Biron. Things hid and barr'd, you mean, from common sense? King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense. Biron. Come on, then: I will swear to study so, To know the thing I am forbid to know; As thus,—to study where I well may dine, When I to feast expressly am forbid; Or study where to meet some mistress fine, When mistresses from common sense are hid; Or, having sworn too hard-a-keeping oath, Study to break it, and not break my troth. If study's gain be this, and this be so, Study knows that which yet it doth not know. Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say no. King. These be the stops that hinder study quite, And train our intellects to vain delight.

1 Not in T. D. 2 From the quarto, 1598.
Biron. Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain, Which, with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain:
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look:
Light, seeking light, doth light of light beruile.
So, ere you find where light in darkness lies.
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairer eye;
Who dazzling so, that eye shall be his heed.
And give him light that it was blinded by.
Study it like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks:
Small have continental plodders ever won.
Save base authority from others' books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights,
That give a name to every fixed star.
Have no more profits of their shining nights,
Than those that walk, and not what they are.
Too much to know is to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name.

King. How well he's read, to reason against reading!

Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding!

Long. He weeds the corn, and still let's grow the weeding.

Biron. The spring is near, when green geese are a breeding.

Dum. How follows that?

Biron. In fit in his place and time.

Dum. In reason nothing.

Biron. Something, then, in rhyme.

King. Biron is like an envious snapping frost,
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.

Biron. Well, say I am: why should proud summer boast.

Before the birds have any cause to sing?
Why should I joy in any abortive birth?
At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled showers;
But like of each thing that in season grows.
So by, study now it is too late,
Climb o'er the house-top to unlock the gate.2

King. Well, set you out: go home, Biron: adieu!

Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay with you:
And, though I have for barbarism spoke more,
Than for that angel knowledge you can say,
Yet confident I'll keep to what I swore,
And hide the penance of each three years' day.
Give me the paper: let me read the same:
And to the strictest decrees I'll write my name.

King. How well this yielding resists thee from shame!

Biron. [Reads.] Item, "That no woman shall come within a mile of my court."—Hath this been proclaimed?

Long. Four days ago.

Biron. Let's see the penalty. [Reads.] "On pain of losing her tongue."—Who devised this penalty?

Long. Marry, that did I.

Biron. Sweet lord, and why?

Long. To fright them hence with that dread penalty.

Biron. A dangerous law against garrulity.9

[Reads.] Item, "If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise."

This article, my liege, yourself must break;
For, well you know, here comes in embassies.
The French king's daughter with yourself to speak.—
A maid of grace, and complete majesty,—
About surrender up of Aquitain
To her despeopled, sick, and bed-rid father:
Therefore, this article is made in vain,
Or vainly comes th' admired princess rather.

King. What say you, lords? why, this was qui forgot.

Biron. So study evermore is overshot:
While it doth study to have what it would,
It doth forget to do the thing it should;
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost.

King. We must of force dispence with this decree.
She must lie here on mere necessity.

Biron. Necessity will make us all forsorn
Three thousand times within this three years' space:
For every man with his affects is born,
Not by might master'd, but by special grace.

If I break faith, this word shall plead* for me,
I am forsworn on mere necessity.—
So to the laws at large I write my name: [Subscribes.
And he, that breaks them in the least degree.
Stands in attainer of eternal shame.
Suggestions are to others, as to me;
But, I believe, although I seem so loth,
I am the last that will last keep his oath.
But is there no quick recreation granted?

King. Ay, that there is. Our court, you know, is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world's new fashions flaunted,'
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain;
One, whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony;
A man of complements, whom right and wrong
Have chose as crupule of their mutiny:
This child of fancy, that Armado hight,
For interm to our studies, shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight.
From tawny Spain, lost in the world's debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I,
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie.
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.

Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.

Long. Costard, the swain, and he shall be our sport,
And so to study three years is but short.

Enter Dull, with a letter, and Costard.

Dull. Which is the duke's own person?

Biron. This, fellow. What wouldst?

Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his grace's tharborough; but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.

Biron. This is he.

Dull. Signior Arm—Arm—commends you. There villainy abroad: this letter will tell you more.

Cost. Sir, the contempt that thereof are as touching me.

King. A letter from the magnificient Armado.

Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Long. A high hope for a low hearing! God grant us patience!

1 From the quarto; the folio reads: and.
2 Snipping, or nipping.
3 Climbing o'er the house-top to unlock the gate: in folio. 4 I'll keep what I have swore: in f. e. 5 Gentility: in f. e. 6 speak: in f. e. 7 Temptations. 8 World's new fashions pasted: in f. e. 9 As a man steele to tell me stories. 10 Third borough, a peace officer. 11 having: in f. e.
Biron. To hear, or forbear hearing.

Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both.

Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to chime in in the merriest.

Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.

Biron. In what manner?

Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those three: I was seen with her in the manor house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is, in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman; for the form,—in some form.

Biron. For the following, sir?

Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; and God defend the right!

King. Will you hear this letter with attention?

Biron. As we would hear an oracle.

Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.

King. [Reads.] "Great deputy, the welkin's vicegerent, and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul's earth's God, and body's fostering patron,—"

Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.

King. "So it is,—"

Cost. It may be so; but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so.—

King. Peace!

Cost. —be to me, and every man that dares not fight.

King. No words.

Cost. —of other men's secrets, I beseech you.

King. "So it is, beseeched with sable-coloured melancholy, I did command the black-oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betook myself to walk. The time when? About the sixth hour; when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walked upon: it is ycleped thy park. Then for the place where; where, I mean, I did encounter that obscene and most preposterous event, that draweth from my snow-white pen the ebon-coloured ink, which here thou viewest, beholdest, surveyest, or seest. But to the place, where:—it standeth north-north-east and by cast from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden: there did I see that low-spirited swain, that base minnow of thy mirth,—"

Cost. Me.

King. "—that unletter'd small-knowing soul,"

Cost. Me.

King. "—that shallow vessel,"

Cost. Still me.

King. "—which, as I remember, hight Costard,"

Cost. O! me.

King. "—sorted and consorted, contrary to thy established proclaimed edict and continent canon, with—now,—O! with—but with this I passion to say wherewith?"

Cost. With a wench.

King. "—with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I (as my ever-esteemed duty pricks me on) have sent to thee, to receive the seed of punishment, by thy sweet grace's officer, Antony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation."

Dull. Me, an't shall please you: I am Antony Dull. King. "For Jaquenetta, (so is the weaker vessel called) which I apprehended with the aforesaid swain, I keep her as a vessel of thy law's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial. Thine, in all complements of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty;

"DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO."

Biron. This is not so well as I looked for; but the best that ever I heard.

King. Ay, the best for the worst.—But, sirrah, what say you to this?

Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.

King. Did you hear the proclamation?

Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment to be taken with a wench.

Cost. I was taken with none, sir: I was taken with a dame.

King. Well, it was proclaimed dame.

Cost. This was no damest neither, sir: she was a virgin.

King. It is so varied, too, for it was proclaimed virgin.

Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity: I was taken with a maid.

King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.

Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.

King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence: you shall fast a week with bran and water.

Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.

King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.—

My lord Biron, see him deliver'd o'er:

And so we, lords, to put in practice that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Dumaine.

Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat. These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.

Dull. Sirrah, come on. 4

Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir: for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore, welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again, and till then, set thee down, sorrow! 5

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—ARMADO'S House in the Park.

Enter Armado and Moth, his page.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it, when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad

Arm. Why? sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.

Moth. No, no; O lord! sir, no.

Arm. How cast thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenile?

Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough senior.

Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?

Moth. Why tender juvenile? why tender juvenile?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenile, as a congruent epitheton appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.

Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough Arm. Pretty, and apt.

Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt; or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Arm. Thou pretty, because little.

Moth. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore apt?

Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.

Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?

Arm. In thy condivg praise.

Moth. I will praise an eel with the same praise.

Arm. What, that an eel is ingenious?

Moth. That an eel is quick.

Arm. I do say, thou art quick in answers. Thou heatest my blood.

Moth. I am answered, sir.

Arm. I love not to be crossed.

Moth. [Aside.] He speaks the mere contrary: crosses love not him?

-Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.

Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.

Arm. Impossible.

Moth. How many is one threeth told?

Arm. I am ill at reckoning: it fitteth the spirit of a tapster.

Moth. You are a gentleman, and a gamester, sir.

Arm. I confess both: they are both the varnish of a complete man.

Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of deuce-ace amounts to.

Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.

Moth. Which the base vulgar do call three.

Arm. True.

Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study?

Arm. Here, in this three studied ere you'll thrice wink: and how easy it is to put years to the word three, and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

Moth. A most fine figure!

Moth. [Aside.] To prove you a cypher.

Arm. I will heretofrom confess I am in love; and, as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wenche. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the reproach thought of it, I would take desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new devised courtesy. I think scorn to sigh: methinks, I should out-swear Cupid. Comfort me, boy. What great men have been in love?

Moth. Heracles, master.

Arm. Most sweet Heracles! — More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.

Moth. Samson, master; he was a man of good carriage, great carriage; for he carried the town-gates on his back, like a porter, and he was in love.

Arm. O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson! I do exel thee in my rapier, as much as thou dost me in carrying gates. I am in love too. Who was Samson's love, my dear Moth?

Moth. A woman, master.

Arm. Of what complexion?

Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or the two, or one of the four.

Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion.

Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.

Arm. Is that one of the four complexions?

Moth. As I have read, and sir, as the best of them too.

Arm. Green, indeed, is the colour of lovers; but to have a love of that colour, methinks, Samson had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.

Moth. It was so, sir, for she had a green wit.

Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.

Moth. Most immaculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours.

Arm. Define, define, well-educated infant.

Moth. My father's wit, and my mother's tongue, assist me!

Arm. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty, and poetical!

Moth. If she be made of white and red,

Her faults will ne'er be known;

For blushing cheeks by faults are bred,

And fears by pale white shown:

Then, if she fear, or be to blame,

By this you shall not know;

For still her cheeks possess the same,

Which native she doth owe.

A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.

Arm. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?

Moth. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since, but, I think, now 'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the tune.

Arm. I will have that subject newly writ o'er. I may examine my digression by some mighty precedent. Boy, do love that country girl, that I look in the park with the rational kind Costard: she deserves well.

Moth. [Aside.] To be whipped; and yet a better love than my master.

Arm. Sing, boy: my spirit grows heavy in love.

Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.

Arm. I say, sing.

Moth. Forbear, till this company be past.

[Enter Dull, Costard, and Jaquenetta.

Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must let him take no delight, no penance; but a' must fast three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day's-woman. Fare well you.

Arm. I do betray myself with blushing.—Maid.

Jaq. Man.

Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Jaq. That's hereby.

Arm. I know where it is situate.

Jaq. Lord, how wise you are!

Arm. I will tell thee wonders.

Jaq. With that face?

Arm. I love thee.

Jaq. So I heard you say.

Arm. And so farewell.

Jaq. Fair weather after you.

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away.

[Exeunt Dull and Jaquenetta.

Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences, ere thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Arm. Take away this villain: shut him up.

Moth. Come, you transgressing slave: away!

1 Coins: so called from the crosses on them. 2 Bankes' horse, Marocco, exhibited in London about the close of the sixteenth century and repeatedly alluded to in the writings of the time. He is said to have ascended St. Paul's steeple. Bankes took his horse to the continent, and both are said to have been burnt, at Rome, for witchcraft. 3 pathetical: in e. 4 Fowkes. 5 It is printed in Vol. I. of Percy's Reliques. 6 Doy, or dairy.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Park. A Pavilion and Tent at a distance.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your clearest spirits.

Consider whom the king your father sends,
To whom he sends, and what's his embassy:
Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem,
To parley with the sole inheritor
Of all perfections that a man may owe.
Matchless Navarre: the plea of no less weight
Than Aquitaine, a dowry for a queen.
Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you.

Prin. Good lord Boyet, my beauty, though but mean,
Needs not the painted flourish of your praise:
Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye,
Not utter'd by base sale of chapanen's tongues.
I am less proud to hear you tell my worth.
Than you much willing to be counted wise
In spending your wit in the praise of mine.
But now to task the tasker.—Good Boyet,
You are not ignorant, all-telling name,
Doth noise abroad, Navarre hath made a vow,
Till painful study shall out-wear three years,
No woman may approach his silent court:
Therefore to us seem'th it needful course.
Before we enter his forbidden gates,
To know his pleasure; and in that behalf,
Bold of your worthiness, we single you
As our best moving fair solitor.
Tell him, the daughter of the king of France,
On serious business, craving quick despatch,
Importunes personal conference with his grace.
Haste, signify so much; while we attend,
Like humble-vis'g'd suitors, his high will.

Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly I go. [Exit.

Prin. All pride is willing pride, and yours is so.—
Who are the votaries, my loving lords,
That are vow-fellows with this virtuous duke?
1 Lord. Longaville is one.

Prin. Know you the man?

Mar. I know him, madam: at a marriage feast,
Between lord Perigot and the beautiful heir is a great argument of falsehood) if I love; and how and how can that be true love, which is falsely attempted? Love is a familiar; love is a devil: there is no evil angel but love.

Yet was Samson so tempted, and he had an excellent strength: yet was Solomon so seduced, and he had a very good wit. Cupid's butt-shaft is too hard for Hercules' club, and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's rapier. The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the passage he respects not: the duello he regards not: his disgrace is to be called boy, but his glory is, to subdue men. Adieu, valour! rust, rapier!
be still, drum! for your armiger 1 is in love; yea, be lotheth. Assist me some extemporal god of rhyme, ter,
I am sure, I shall turn sonnet-maker 2 . Devise wit, write pen, for I am for whole volumes in folio.

[Exeunt.

Of Jaques Falconbridge, solemnized
In Normandy, saw I this Longaville.
A man of sovereign parts he is esteem'd;
Well fitted in the arts: glorious in arms:
Nothing becomes him ill, that he would well.
The only soil of his fair virtue's gloss,
If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil,
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will;
Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will wills
It should none spare that come within his power.

Prin. Some merry mocking lord, belike; is't so?

Mar. They say so much that most of his honours know

Prin. Such short-lived's wits do wither as they grow

Who are the rest?

Kath. The young Dumesne, a well-accomplished youth,
Of all that virtue love for virtue lov'd:
Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill,
For he hath wit to make an ill shape good.
And shape to win grace though he had no wit.
I saw him at the Duke Alençon's once;
And much too little of that good I saw
Is my report to his great worthiness.

Ros. Another of these students at that time
Was there with him: if I have heard a truth,
Biron they call him; but a merrier man,
Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal.
His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue (conseil's expositor)
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales,
And younger hearers are quite ravished,
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

Prin. God bless my ladies! are they all in love,
That every one her own hath garnished
With such beauteous ornaments of praise?

Lord. Here comes Boyet.

Re-enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord.

Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach;
And he, and his competitors in oath,
Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt,
He rather means to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes here to besiege his court,
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpeopled house.
Here comes Navarre.

[The ladies mask.]

Enter King, Longaville, Dumaine, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.

Prin. Fair, I give you back again; and welcome I have not yet; the roof of this court is too high to be yours, and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.
Prin. I will be welcome then. Conduct me thither.
King. Hear me, dear lady: I have sworn an oath.
Prin. Our lady help my lord! he'll be forsworn.
King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.
Prin. Why, will shall break it; will, and nothing else.
King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.

Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance,
I hear your grace hath sworn out house-keeping:
T is deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it.

But pardon me. I am too sudden-bold:
To teach a teacher till beseech me.

Vouchsafe me to read the purpose of my coming.
And suddenly resolve me in my suit.
[Givea paper.]

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may.
[Reads.]
Prin. You will the sooner that I were away,
For you'll prove perjur'd, if you make me stay.
Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?
Biron. I know you did.

Ros. How needless was it, then?

To ask the question?

Biron. You must not be so quick.

Ros. 'Tis long of you, that spurn me with such questions.

Biron. Your wit is too hot, it speeds too fast, it will tire.

Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.

Biron. What time o' day?

Ros. The hour that fools should ask.

Biron. Now fair befall you, mask!
Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!
Biron. And send you many lovers!
Ros. Amen, so you be none.
Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
Being but the one half of an entire sum,
Disbursed by my father in his wars.
But say, that be, or we, (as neither have)
Receive'd that sum, yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more; in surety of the which,
One part of Aquitain is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money's worth.
If, then, the king your father will restore
But that one half which is unsatisfied.
We will give up our right in Aquitain.
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
But that, it seems, he little purpeth,
For he here doth demand to have repaid
An hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,
On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitain:
Which we much rather had depart withal;
And have the money by our father lent,
SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Song. See, my love.

Arm. Warble, child: make passionate my sense of hearing.

Moth. Conceit—(Amato bene).
[ Singing.
Arm. Sweet air!—Go, tenderness of years; take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him festively hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?
Arm. How meanest thou? brawling in French?
Moth. No, my complete master; but to jog off a tune at the tongue’s end, canary1 to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids; sigh a note, and sing a note; sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love; sometime through the nose, as if you snuffed up love by smelling love; with your hat penthouse-like, o’er the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly’s doublet, like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a snap and away. These are complements, these are humours; these betray nice wenchers, that would be betrayed without these, and make them men of note, (do you note, men?) that most are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?
Moth. By my pain of observation.

Arm. But O,—but O,
Moth. The hobby-horse is forgot.

Arm. Callest thou my love hobby-horse?
Moth. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love, perhaps, a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm. By heart, and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master; all those three I will prove.

Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live: and this, by, in, and with out, upon the instant: by heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.

1 Not in F. e.  2 A play upon the legal meaning of the words common, unclosed land; and several, that is private property.
3 Not in F. e.  4 Fr. Branca, a dance in which the parties joined hands and danced around a couple, who kissed in turn all of the opposite sex to themselves, then took their places in the circle, and were succeeded by a second couple, and so on, till all had had their share.
5 The name of a lively, grotesque dance.
6 f.e.: penny. The original word of the folio is pence.
Scene I.

Love's Labour's Lost.

Moth. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Arm. Fetch hither the swain: he must carry me a letter.

Moth. A messenger well sympathised: a horse to be ambassador for an ass.

Arm. Ha, ha! what sayest thou?

Moth. Marry sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited: but I go.

Arm. The way is but short. Away!

Moth. As swift as lead, sir.

Arm. Thy meaning, pretty ingenious?

Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?

Moth. Minime, honest master; or rather, master, no.

Arm. I say, lead is slow.

Moth. You are too swift, sir, to say so:

Is that lead slow which is fir'd from a gun?

Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric!

He represents me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he:

I shoot thee at the swain.

Moth. Thump then, and I flee. [Exit.

Arm. A most acute juvenal; valuable and fair* of grace!

By thy favour, sweet welinke, I must sigh in thy face:

Most-eyed melancholy, valour gives thee place.

My herald is return'd.

Re-enter MOTH with COSTARD.

Moth. A wonder, master! here's a Costard* broken in a shin.

Arm. Some enigma, some riddle: come,—thy l'envoy begin.

Cost. No egnia, no riddle, no l'envoy! no salve in them at all,* sir: O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain! no l'envoy, no l'envoy: no salve, sir, but a plantain.

Arm. By virtue, thou enforeest laughter; thy silly thought, my spleen; the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling. O, pardon me, my stars! Dost the inconsiderate take salve for l'envoy, and the word l'envoy for a salve?

Moth. Do the wise think them other? is not l'envoy a salve?*

Arm. No, page: it is an epilogue, or discourse, to make plain.

Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been seen.

I will example it:

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

There's the moral: now the l'envoy.

Moth. I will add the l'envoy. Say the moral again.

Arm. The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Moth. Until the goose came out of door,
And stay'd the odds by making three.

Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my l'envoy.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Arm. Until. the goose came out of door,
Staying the odds by making four.

A good l'envoy. 2

Moth. Ending in the goose; would you desire more?

Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain,* a goose,
That's flat.

Sir, your pennyworth is good, an your goose be fat.

To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose.* Let me see, a fat l'envoy; ay, that's a fat goose.

Arm. Come hither, come hither. How did this argument begin?

Moth. By saying that a Costard was broken in a shin.

Then call'd you for the l'envoy.

Cost. True. And I for a plantain: thus came your argument in;

Then the boy's fat l'envoy, the goose that you bought

And he ended the market. 11

Arm. But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?

Moth. I will tell you sensibly.

Cost. Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth: I will speak that l'envoy.

1. Costard, running out, that was safely within,

Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.

Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.

Cost. Till there be more matter in the shin.

Moth. Sirrah Costard, marry, 12 I will enfranchise thee.

Cost. O! marry me to one Frances?—I smell some l'envoy, some goose, in this.

Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean, setting thee at liberty, enfreeing thy person: thou wilt immersed, restrained, captivated, bound.

Cost. True, true; and now you will be my purgation,
And let me be loose.

Arm. I give thee thy liberty, set thee free from durance; and, in lien thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: bear this significant [Giving a letter.]* to the country maid Jaquenetta. There is remuneration; for the best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependents Moth, follow.

[Exit.

Moth. Like the sequel, 1.—Signior Costard, adieu.

[Exit.

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my income! 14

Jew!—

Now will I look to his remuneration.

Remuneration! O! that's the Latin word for three farthings: three farthings, remuneration. "What's the price of this inkle"? A penny,—No. I'll give you a remuneration why, it carries it.—Remuneration why, it is a fairer name than French crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter BIRON.

Biron. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Biron. What is a remuneration?

Cost. Marry, sir, half-penny farthing. [Showing it. 18

Biron. O! why then, three-farthings-worth of silk.

Cost. I thank your worship. God be with you.

Biron. O, stay, slave! I must employ thee:

As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave,
Do one thing for me that I shall entreat.

Cost. When would you have it done, sir?

Biron. O! this afternoon.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir. Fare you well.

Biron. O! thou knowest not what it is Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it

Biron. Why, villain, thou must know first.

Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter the Princess, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, Attendants, and a Forester.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurst his horse so hard against the steep uprising of the hill?

Boyet. I know not; but, I think, it was not he.

Prin. Whoe'er a' was, a' show'd a mounting mind.

Well, lords, to-day we shall have our despatch;

On Saturday we will return to France.

Then forester, my friend, where is the bush,

That we must stand and play the murderer in?

For. Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice;

A stand where you may make the fairest shot.

Prin. I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot,

And thereupon thou speak'st the fairest shot.

For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

Prin. What, what? first praise me, and again say, no?

O, short-div'd pride! Not fair? alack for woe!

For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now:

Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.

Here, good my glass, take this for telling true.

[Giving him money.

Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see! my beauty will be sav'd by merit.

O heresy in faith, 1 fit for these days!

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.

But come, the bow—now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:

Not wounding, pity would not let me do't;

If wounding, then it was to show my skill,

That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.

And, out of question, so it is sometimes;

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,

Lieu of all lotters and malcontents,

Dread prince of plackets, king of cod-pieces,

Sole imperator, and great general

Of trotting paritors, 2 (O my little heart!)

And I to be a corporal of his field,

And wear his colours like a tumbler's hoop!

What? I love! I sue! I seek a wife!

A woman, that is like a German clock,

Still a repairing, ever out of frame,

And never going aright; being a watch,

But being watch'd that it may still go right?

Nay, to be perjur'd, which is worst of all;

And, among three, to love the worst of all;

A witty 4 wanton with a velvet brow,

With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes;

Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,

Though Argus were her ennemis and her guard:

And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!

To pray for her! Go to; it is a plague

That Cupid will impose for my neglect

Of his almighty dreadful little might.

Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan:

Some men must love my lady, and some Joan. 3

[Exit.

When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,

We bend to that the working of the heart;

As I for praise alone now seek to spill

The poor deers' blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst wives 4 hold that self-sovereignty

Only for praise's sake, when they strive to be

Lords o'er their lords?

Prin. Only for praise; and praise we may afford

To any lady that subdues a lord.

Enter Costard.

Prin. Here comes a member of the commonplace

Cost. God dig-you-den all. Pray you, which is the head lady?

Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest that have no heads.

Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest, and the tallest.

Cost. The thickest, and the tallest? it is so; truth is truth.

An your waist, mistress, were as slender as my wit,

One o' these maid's girdles for your waist should be fit.

Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest here.

Prin. What's your will, sir? what's your will?

Cost. I have a letter, from monsieur Biron to one lady Rosaline.

[Giving it.

Prin. O, thy letter, thy letter! he's a good friend of mine.

Stand aside, good bearer.—Boyet, you can carve;

Break up 8 this epyon. 3

[Handling it to him.

Boyet. I am bound to serve.—

This letter is mistook; it importeth none here:

It is writ to Jaquenetta.

Prin. We will read it, I swear.

Break the neck of the wax, and every one give ear.

Boyet. [Reads] 3 By heaven, that thou art fair, is most infallible; true, that thou art beautiful; truth itself, that thou art lovely. More fairer than fair, beautiful than beauteous, truer than truth itself, have commemoration on thy heriocall vessel! The magnanimous and most illustre king Copieclata set upon the pernicious and indubitate beggar Penelope; and he it was that might rightly say, reni, vidit, vici; which to anatomize in the vulgar, (O base and obscure vulgar!) videlicet. he came, saw, and overcame; he came, one; saw, two; overcome, three. Who came the king? Wely did he come to see? Why did he see? to overcome; To whom came he? to the beggar? What saw he? the beggar; Whom overcame he? the beggar. The conclusion is victory: on whose side? the king's: the captive is enriched on: whose side? the beggar's. The catastrophe is a nuptial: on whose side? the king's—to, on both in one, or one in both. I am the king, for so stands the comparison; thou the beggar, for so witnessed thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may. Shall I enforce thy love? I could. Shall I entreat thy love? I will. What shall thou exchange for rags? robes; for tittles; titles; for thyself? me. Thus, expecting thy reply, I profane my lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part.

"DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO."—

"Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar
'Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey:
Submitive fall his princely feet before,
And he from forage will incline to play:
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture for his den."—

Prin. What plume of feathers is he that indicted this letter?

What vane? what weather-cook? did you ever hear better?

Boyet. I am much deceiv'd, but I remember the style.

Prin. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it weekly.

Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keeps here in court;
A phantasm, a Monarchica, and one that makes sport
To the prince, and his book-mates.

Prin. Thou, fellow, a word.

Who gave thee this letter?

Cost. I told you; my lord.

Prin. To whom shouldst thou give it?

Cost. From my lord to my lady.

Prin. From which lord, to which lady?

Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master of mine,
To a lady of France, that he call'd Rosaline.

Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter.—Come, lords, away.

Here, sweet, put up this: 'twill be thine another day.

[Exit Princess and Train.]

Boyet. Who is the tutor? who is the tutor?

Ros. Shall I teach you to know?

Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.

Cost. Why, she that bears the bow.

Boyet. My lady goes to kill horns; but if thou marry,
Hang me by the neck, if horns that year miscarry.

Boyet. Ros. Well then, I am the shooter.

Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself: come not near.

FINELY PUT ON, indeed!—

Mar. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower. Have I hit her now?

Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when king Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?

Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when queen Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it,
Thou canst not hit it, my good man.

Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot,
An I cannot, another can.

[Exeunt Ros. and Kath.]

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant: how both did fit it!

Mar. A mark marvellous well shot, for they both did hit it.

Boyet. A mark! O! mark but that mark: a mark, says my lady.

Let the mark have a prick in't, to note at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide o' the bow hand: 'tis faith, thy hand is out.

Cost. Indeed, a' must shoot nearer, or he'll never hit the clout.

Boyet. An if my hand be out, then belike your hand is in.

Cost. Then will she get the upshot by cleaving the pin.4

Mar. Come, come, you talk grassely; your lips grow foul.

Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir: challenge her to bowl.

Boyet. I fear too much rubbing. Good night, my good owle.

[Exeunt BOYET and MARIA.]

Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple clown!

Lord, lord! how the ladies and I have put him down!
O' my troth, most sweet jests! most ineocy vulgar wit!
When it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely, as it were, so fit.

Armado o' the one side.—O, a most dainty man!
To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fan!
To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly a' will swear!

Looking babies in her eyes, his passion to declare,4
And his page o' the other side, that handful of small' wit!
Alas, heavens, it is a most pathetical nit!

Solo, sola! [Shouting within.]

[Exit Costard.]

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter HOLOFERNES, SIR NATHANIEL, and DULL.

Nath. Very reverend sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, sanguis,—in blood; ripe as the pomewercr, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of cafol—the sky, the wealkin, the heaven; and anon fallacly as a crab, on the face of terra,—the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: but, sir, I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.3

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, hand eredo.

Dull. 'T was not a hand credo, 't was a pricket.4

1 These verses are usually given to Boyet, as his own, instead of being an appendage to Armado's epistle.
2 An Englishman, who according to Nash, (Have with you to Saffron Walden, 1596) quite renounced his natural English accents and gestures, and wrote himself wholly to the Italian postures. He asserted himself to be sovereign of the world, and from this "phantastic humor" obtained the title of Monarchico.
3 A play upon sheater and sutor, showing that the pronunciation of the two was similar.
4 Clout and pin, terms in archery: the clout or pin, held up the mark aimed at.
5 This line is not in f. e.
6 Not in f. e.
7 A kind of apple.
8 A stag five years old.
9 A stag two years old.
Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of admiration, as it were, in vain, in way of explication; facere, as it were, replication, or, rather, ostentare, to show, as it were, his inclination.—after his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or, ratherest, unconfirmed fashion,—to insert again my hand credo for a deer.

Dull. I said, the deer was not a hand credo; 't was pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicity, his coxum!—
O thou monster ignorance, how deformed dost thou look!

Nath. Sir, he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book;
He hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drunk ink;
His intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal not to think.Only sensible in the duller parts; and such barren plants
Are set before us, that we thankful should be
Which we, having taste and feeling, are for those parts that do frustrate in us more than he:
For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet,
or, a fool,
So, were there a patch set on learning, to set him in a school:
But, omne bene, say I; being of an old father's mind,
Many can brook the weather, that love not the wind.

Dull. You two are book men: can you tell by your wit.
What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?

Hol. Doctissimâ, good man Dull; Dictymna, good man Dull.

Dull. What is Dictymna?

Nath. A title to Phæbe, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more;
And naught* not to five weeks, when he came to five-score.
The allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'Tis true indeed: the collusion holds in the exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the exchange, for the moon is never but a month old; and I say beside, that 't was a pricket that the princess kill'd.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemporal epitaph on the death of the deer? and, to humour
the ignorant, I have call'd the deer the princess kill'd,
pricket.

Nath. Perge, good master Holofernes, perge; so it shall please you to abrogate scrupulosity.

Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facility. [Reads.
The pious girl princesèd and prick'd a pretty pleasing
pricket;
Some say, a sore; but not a sore, till now made sore with shooting.
The dogs did yell; put I to sore, then sorel jumps from thick thistles.

Or pricket sore, or else sorel; the people fell a howling.
If sore he be sore, then to I sorel makes fifty sore; O sorel! If
Of one sore I am hundred make, by adding but one more I.

Nath. A rare talent!

Dull. If a talent he a claw, looke how he clawes him with a talent [Aside.]
Scene III.

Love's Labour's Lost.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am courting myself: they have pitch'd a toil; I am toiling in a pit—pitch'd that defiles. Desile f a foul word. Well set thee down, sovereign! for so they say the fool had, and so say I, and I the fool. Well proved, wit! By the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me, I a sheep. Well proved again of my side! I will not love; if I do, hang me: if faith, I will not. O! but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do love, and it hath taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy: and here is part of my rhyme, and here my melancholy. Well, she hath one of my sonnets already: the clown bore it, the fool sent it, and the lady hath it: sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world, I would not care a pin, if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper: God give him grace to scan! [Gets up into a tree.

Enter the King, with a paper.

King. [Reads.] So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh mornings drops upon the grass,
As th' eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The dew of night that on thy cheeks down flows:
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep.
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light;
Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep.
No drop but as a coach doth carry thee;
So ridest thou triumphing in my woe.
Do but behold the tears that swell in me,
And they thy glory through my grief will show:
But do not love myself; then thou wilt keep
My tears for glasses, and still make me weep.
O queen of queens, how far thou dost excelt.
No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell.
How shall I know my griefs? I'll drop the paper.
Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here?

Enter Longaville, with a paper.

What, Longaville! and reading? listen, ear.

Biron. [Aside in the tree] Now, in thy likeness, one more fool appear!

Long. Ay me! I am forsworn.

Biron. [Aside]. Why, he comes in like a perjure, bearing papers.

King. [Aside] In love, I hope. Sweet fellowship in shame!

Biron. [Aside] One drunkard loves another of the name.

Long. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so?

Biron. [Aside]. I could put thee in comfort: not by two that I know.

Thou makes the triumvir, the corner-cap of society,
The shape of love's Tyburn, that hangs up simplicity.
Long. I fear these stubborn lines lack power to move
O sweet Maria, empress of my love.

These numbers will I tear, and write in prose.

Biron. [Aside] O! rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose:

Disfigure not his slop.

Long. This same shall go. [He reads the sonnet

Bold not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,

Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,

Persuade my heart to this false perjury?

Voices for thee break, deserve not punishment.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,

Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee.

My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;

Thy grace, being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.

Voices are but breath, and breath a vapour is:

Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine.

Exhalst this vapour-vow; in thee it is:

If broken, then, it is no fault of mine.

If by me broke, what foul is not so wise,

To lose an oath, to win a paradise?

Biron. [Aside] This is the liver vein, which makes flesh a deity:

A green goose, a goddess, pure, pure idolatry.

God amend us! God amend us: we are much out o' the way.

Enter Dumaine, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?—Company! stay.

Like a demi-god here sit I in the sky,

And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.

* tired: in f. e. 2 An enclosure, into which game were driven. 3 night of dew: in f. e. 4 dost thou: in f. e. 5 Aside: in f. e. 6 Papers stating their offence, were affixed to perjurers at the time of their punishment.—Holifnhed. 7 Trimminings. 8 shape: in f. e. 9 The liver was supposed to be the seat of the affections. 10 An old name for hide and go seek.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

More sucks to the mill! O heavens! I have my wish:
Dumaine transform'd? four woodcocks in a dish.
Dum. O most divine Kate!
Biron. [Aside.] O most profane cowcomb!
Dum. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye!
Biron. [Aside.] By earth, she is most corporal; there you lie.
Dum. Her amber hairs for foul have amber quoted.
Biron. [Aside.] An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.
Dum. As upright as the cedar.
Biron. [Aside.] Stoops, I say:
Her shoulder is with child.
Dum. As fair as day.
Biron. [Aside.] Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine.
Dum. O, that I had my wish!
Long. [Aside.] And I had mine!
King. [Aside.] And I mine too, good lord!
Biron. [Aside.] Amen, so had I mine. Is not that a good word?
Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be.
Biron. [Aside.] A fever in your blood? why, then incision would let her out in saucers: sweet misprision!
Dum. Où once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.
Biron. [Aside.] Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.
Dum. On a day, allack the day!
Love, whose month is ever May,
S pies a blossom, passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow,
Air, wouldst I might triumph so!
But allack! my hand is sworn,
Never to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Yow, allack! for youth unmeet,
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forsworn for thee;
Thou for whom great? Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiopian were;
And deny himself for June,
Turning mortal for thy love.

This will I send, and something else more plain,
That shall express my true love's lasting pain.
O, would the King, Biron, and Longaville,
Were lovers too! ill, to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note;
For none offend, where all alike do dote.

Long. [Advancing.] Dumaine, thy love is far from charity,
That in love's grief desir'st society:
You may look pale, but I should blush, I know,
To be overheard, and taken napping so.

King. [Advancing.] Come, sir, blush you; as his your case is such;
You chide him at offending twice as much;
You do not love Maria; Longaville
Did never soot for her sake compile,
Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bush,
And mark'd you both, and for you both did blush.
I heard your guilty rhymes, observed your fashion,
Saw sighs recur from you, noted well your passion:
Ay me! says one; O love! the other cries:
One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes:
You would for paradise break faith and truth:
[To Long]
And Jove for your love would infringe an oath.
[To Dumaine]
What will Biron say, when that he shall hear
Faith infringed, with such zeal did swear?
How will he scorn! how will he spend his wit?
How will he triumph, leap, and laugh at it!
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me.
Biron. Now step I forth to whip hypocrisy. —

Ah, good my liege, I pray thee pardon me.
Good heart! what grace hast thou, thus to reprove
These worms for loving. that art most in love?
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears
There is no certain princess that appears:
You'll not be perjur'd; 'tis a hateful thing:
'Tush! none but minstrels like of sonneting.
But are you not ashamed? nay, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershot?
You found his mote: the king your mote did see,
But I a beam do find in each of three.
O! what a scene of folly have I seen,
Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of teen!
O me! with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transformed to a gnat!
To see great Hercules whipping a gig,
And profound Solomon to tune a jig,
And Nestor play at push-pin with the boys,
And critic Timon laugh at idle toys:
Where lies thy grief? O! tell me, good Dumaine:
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my liege's? all about the breast:
A coudle, ho!

King. Too bitter is thy jest.
Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?
Biron. Not you by me, but I betray'd to you:
I, that am honest; I, that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engaged in;
I am betray'd, by keeping company
With men, like men of strange inconstancy.
When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?
Or groan for love? or spend a minute's time
In pruning me? When shall you hear that I
Will raise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb? —

[Going.

King. Soft! Whither away so fast?
A true man, or a thief, that gallops so?
Biron. I post from love; good lover, let me go.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.

Jug. God bless the king!
King. What, peasant, hast thou there
Cost. Some certain treason.
King. What makes treason here?
Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.
King. If it make nothing neither,
The treason and you go in peace away together.
Jug. I beseech your grace, let this letter be read:
Our parson misdoubts it; 'twas treason, he said.

King. Biron, read it over. [Biron reads the letter]

Where hadst thou it?
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE III.

Jag. Of Costard.
King. Where hast thou it?
Cost. Of Dun Adramadio, Dun Adramadio.
King. How now! what is in you? why dost thou tear it?
Biron. A toy, my liege, a toy: your grace needs not fear it. [Tearing it! Long. It did move him to passion, and therefore let's hear it.
Dum. It is Biron's writing, and here is his name.
[Pick up the pieces.
Biron. Ah, you whoreson loggerhead! [To Costard.] you were born to do me shame.—
Guilty, my lord, guilty! I confess, I confess.
King. What?
Biron. That you three fools lack'd me, fool, to make up the mess.
He, he, and you, and you my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.
O! dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.
Dum. Now the number is even.
Biron. True, true; we are four.—
Will these turtles be gone?
King. Hence, sirs; away!
Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.
[Exeunt Costard and Jaquenetta.
Biron. Sweet lords, sweet lovers! O! let us embrace.
As true we are, as flesh and blood can be:
The sea will ebb and flow; heaven show his face;
Young blood doth yet obey an old decree:
We cannot cross the cause why we were born;
Therefore, of all hands must we be forsworn.
King. What, did these rent lines show some love of thine?
Biron. Did they? quoth you. Who sees the heavenly Rosaline,
That, like a rude and savage man of Inde,
At the first opening of the gorgeous east,
Bows not his vassal head; and, stricken blind,
Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?
What peremptory, eagle-eyed sight
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty?
King. What zeal, what fury hath inspir'd thee now?
My love, her mistress, is a gracious moon,
She, an attending star, scarce seen a light.
Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron.
O! but for my love, day would turn to night.
Of all complications the end'd sovereignty
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek;
Where several worthies make one dignity,
Where nothing wants that want itself doth seek.
Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues,—
Fie, painted rhetoric! O! she needs it not:
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs;
She passes praise; then praise too short doth blot.
A wither'd hermit, five-score winters worn,
Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye:
Beauty doth vanish age, as if new-born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy.
O! 'tis the sun, that maketh all things shine!
King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.
Biron. Is ebony like her? O wood divine!
A wife of such wood were felicity.
O! who can give an oath? where is a book?
That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack,
If that she learn not of her eye to look:
No face is fair, that is not full so black.
King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,

The hue of dungeons, and the shade of night;
And beauty's best becomes the heavens well.
Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of light.
O! if in black my lady's brows be deck'd,
It mourns, that painting, and usurping hair,
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Her favour turns the fashion of these days;
For native blood is counted painting now,
And therefore red, that would avoid displeasure,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.
Dum. To look like her are chimney-sweepers black.
Long. And since her time are colliers counted bright.
King. And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.
Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.
Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain,
For fear their colours should be wash'd away.
King. 'T were good, yours did; for, sir, to tell you plain,
I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day.
Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till doomsday here.
King. No devil will fright thee then so much as she.
Dum. I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.
Long. Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see.
Biron. O! if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.
Dum. O vile! then, as she goes, what upward lies
The street should see, as she walk'd over head.
King. But what of this? Are we not all in love?
Biron. O! nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.
Then leave this chat: and, good Biron, now prove
Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn.
Dum. Ay, marry, there; some flattery for this evil.
King. O! some authority how to proceed;
Some tricks, some quibbles, how to cheat the devil.
Dum. Some salve for purgery.
Biron. O! 'tis more than need.
Have at you, then, affection's men at arms.—
Consider, what you first did swear unto;—
To fast,—to study,—and to see no woman:
Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.
Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies.
And where that you have vow'd to study, lords,
In that each of you hath forsworn his book,
Can you still dream, and pore, and thereon look?
For when would you, my lord, or you, or you,
Have found the ground of study's excellence,
Without the beauty of a woman's face?
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They are the ground, the books, the Academies,
From whence doth spring the true Prometheus fire.
Why, universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries,
As motion, and long-during action, tires
The sinewy vigour of the traveller.
Now, for not looking on a woman's face,
You have in that forsworn the use of eyes,
And study, too, the causer of your vow;
For where is any author in the world,
Teaches such learning* as a woman's eye?
Learning is but an adjunct to ourself,
And where we are, our learning likewise is.
Then, when ourselves we see in ladies' eyes*.
Do we not likewise see our learning there?

*Not in f. e. * now in f. e. * From quodlibets. * beauty: in f. e. * Between this and the next line, f. e. insert: With our best
SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis yudis sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir; your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without security, witty without affectation, audacious without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is intitled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tanguam te: his humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thrasial. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too perigrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithet.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical phantoms, such incoherents and point-desert companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak doubt, fine, when he should say, doubt; det, when he should pronounce, debt—d, e, b, t, not d, e, t; he elepheth a calf, cauf; half, hauf; neighbour vocatur.

Enter Armado, MOTH, and Costard.

Nath. Videus quies venit?

Hol. Video, et gaudeo.

Arm. Chirrah!

Moth. Quare Chirrah, not sirrah?

Arm. Men of peace, well encounter'd.

Hol. Most military sir, salutation.

Moth. They have been at a great feast of languages, and stolen the scraps.

Cost. O! they have lived long on the alms-basket of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatis; then art easier swallowed than a flap-dragon.

Moth. Peace! the peal begins.

Arm. Monsieur, [To Hol.] are you not letter'd?

Moth. Yes, yes; he teaches boys the horn-book.—What is a, b, spelt backward with the horn on his head.

Hol. Ba, pueritia, with a horn added.

ACT V.

Else none at all in aught proves excellent. Then, fools you were those women to forswear, Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love, Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men, Or for men's sake, the authors of these women, Or women's sake, by whom we men are men, Let us once lose our oaths to find ourselves, Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths. It is religion to be thus forsworn; For charity itself fulfils the law, And who can sever love from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field! Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them, lords! Pell-mell, down with them! but be first advis'd, In conflict that you get the sun of them. Long. Now to plain-dealing. Lay these glories by. Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France? King. And win them too: therefore, let us devise Some entertainment for them in their tents.

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither; Then, homeward, every man attach the hand Of his fair mistress. In the afternoon We will with some strange pastime solace them, Such as the shortness of the time can shape; For revols, dances, masks, and merry hours. Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers. King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted, That will be time, and may by us be fitted. Biron. Allons! allons!—Sow'd cockle reap'd ne corn; And justice always whirs in equal measure; Light wench's may prove plagues to men forsworn If so, our copper buys no better treasure. [Exeunt.

1 humility; in f. e. 2 affectation. 3 on the style of terence's Thraup. 4 nicety to excess. 5 it insinuath one of insanin: ne intelligis, domine? to make frantick, lunatic. 6 NATH. LAUS DEO, BONE INTELLIGE. 7 Hol. Bone? —bone, for bene: Prician a little scratch'd; 't will serve. 8 Hol. Vides quies venit? [To MOTH. 9 Hol. Vide, et gaudeo. 10 Arm. Chirrah! 11 Hol. Quare Chirrah, not sirrah? 12 Arm. Men of peace, well encounter'd. 13 Hol. Most military sir, salutation. 14 Moth. They have been at a great feast of languages, and stolen the scraps. 15 Cost. O! they have lived long on the alms-basket of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatis; then art easier swallowed than a flap-dragon. 16 MOTH. Peace! the peal begins. 17 Arm. Monsieur, [To Hol.] are you not letter'd? 18 MOTH. Yes, yes; he teaches boys the horn-book.—What is a, b, spelt backward with the horn on his head.

19 Hol. Ba, pueritia, with a horn added.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE II.

Moth. Ba! most silly sheep, with a horn.—You hear his learning.

Hol. Quis, quis, thou consonant?

Moth. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

Hol. I will repeat them, a. e. i.—

Moth. The sheep: the other two concludes it; o. u.

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick venue1 of wit! snip, snap, quick and home: it rejoiceth my intellect: true wit!

Moth. Offer'd by a child to an old man; which is wit-old.

Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?

Moth. Horns.

Hol. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy gig.

Moth. Lend me your horn to make one, and I will whip about your infancy circumscribed. A gig of a cuckold's horn!

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half-penny purser of wit, thou pigeon-egg of discretion. O! an the heavens were so pleased, that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldst thou make me. Go to; thou hast it od doughty; at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Hol. O! I smell false Latin; dunghill for waggon.

Arm. Art's man, praemulsa; we will be singled from the baronons. Do you not educate youth at the large house2 on the top of the mountain?

Hol. Or mouns, the hill.

Arm. At your sweet pleasure for the mountain.

Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulater the princess at her pavilion in the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the afternoon: the word is well cul'd, chose; sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir; I do assure.

Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar, I do assure you, my very good friend.—For what is inward between us, let it pass.—I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy;—I beseech thee, apparel thy head;—and among other important and most serious designs,—and of great import indeed. too. but let that pass:—for I must tell thee, it will please his grace (by the world) sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger, thus dally with my excrescence, with my mustache: but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable: some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass.—The very all of all is.—but, sweet heart. I do implore secrecy,—that the king would have me present the princess, sweet chuck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antick, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self are good at such enchantments, and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the nine Worthies.—Sir Nathaniel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistance,—the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrous, and learned gentleman,—before the princess, I say, none so fit as to present the nine Worthies.

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?

Hol. Joshua, yourself; myself, or this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccabeus; this swain, (because of his great limb or joint,) shall pass for Pompey the great; the page, Heracles.

Arm. Pardon, sir; error; he is not quantity enough for that worthy's thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minotory: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake; and I will have an apology for that purpose.

Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience hies, you may cry, "Well done, Hercules! now thou crushest the snake!" that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the Worthies?—

Hol. I will play three myself.

Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman.

Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?

Hol. We attend.

Arm. We will have, if this fudge3 not, an antick, I beseech you, to follow.

Hol. Fit!—Goodman Dull, thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir.

Hol. Allons! we will employ thee.

Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the tabor to the Worthies, and let them dance the hay.

Hol. Most dull, honest Dull. To our sport, away!

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—Another part of the Same. Before the Princess's Pavilion.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria, with presents.4

Priv. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart. If fairings come thus plentifully in:

A lady wall'd about with diamonds!—

Look you, what I have from the loving king.

Ros. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Priv. Nothing but this? yes; as much love in rhyme,

As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper,

Writ on both sides the leaf; margin and all,

That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name.

Ros. That was the way to make his god-head wax;'

For he hath been five thousand years a boy.

Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Ros. You'll ne'er be friends with him: a kill'd you, sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;

And so she died: had she been light, like you,

Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit,

She might a' been a grandam ere she died;

And so may you, for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mon'st, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.

Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll mar the light by taking it in snuff,

Therefore, I'll darkly end the argument.

Ros. Look, what you do, you do it still i' the dark

Kath. So do not you, for you are a light wench.

Ros. Indeed, I weigh not you, and therefore light.

Kath. You weigh me not?—O! that's you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason; for, past cure is still past care.

Priv. Well banded both; a set of wit well play'd

1 A hit in fencing. 2 charge-house: in f. o. 3 Fit, agree. 4 These two words not in f. e. 5 Grow. 6 A term of endearment
But Rosaline, you have a favour too:
Who sent it? and what is it?

Ros. I would you knew:
An it my face were but as fair as yours,
My favour were as great: be witness this.
Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron.
The numbers true; and, were the numbr'ing too,
I were the fairest goddess on the ground:
I am compar'd to twenty thousand fairs.
O! he hath drawn my picture in his letter.

Prin. Any thing like?
Ros. Much, in the letters, nothing in the praise.
Prin. Beauteous as ink: a good conclusion.
Kath. Fair as a text 1 in a copy-book.
Ros. 'Ware pencils! How? let me not die your debtor,
My red dominical, my golden letter:
O. that your face were not so full of O!'s!

Prin. A pax of that jest! and I besheew all shrows!
But, Katharine, what was sent to you from fair Du-maine?

Kath. Madam, this glove.
Prin. The. Did he not send you twain?
Kath. Yes, madam: and, moreover,
Some thousand verses of a faithful lover:
A huge translation of hypocrisy.

Vilely compil'd, profound simplicity.

Mar. This, and these pearls to me sent Longaville:
The letter is too long by half a mile.
Prin. I think no less. Dost thou not wish in heart,
The chain were longer and the letter short?
Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.
Prin. We are wise girls to mock our lovers so.
Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.
That same Biron I'll torture ere I go.
O! that I knew he were but in by the week 1!
How I would make him fawn, and beg, and seek,
And wait the season, and observe the times,
And spend his prodigal wits in boodless rhymes,
And shape his service wholly to my behests,
And make him proud to make me proud that jests!
So potently 2 would I o'ersway his state,
That he should be my fool, and I his fate.

Prin. None are so surely caught, when they are catch'd,
As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,
Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school,
And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.
Ros. The blood of youth bursus not with such excess,
As gravity's revolt to wantonness.

Mar. Folly in fools bears not: so strong a note,
As foolery in the wise, when wit doth dote;
Since all the power thereof it doth apply,
To prove by wit worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Boyet. O! I am stabb'd with laughter. Where's her grace?

Prin. Thy news, Boyet?

Boyet. Prepare, madam, prepare!
Arm. wenches, arm! encounterers 4 mounted are Against your peace. Love doth approach disguis'd,
Armed in arguments: you'll be surpris'd.
Muster your wits: stand in your own defence,
Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.

Prin. Saint Dennis to saint Cupid! What are they,
That charge the breach against us? say, scout, say.

Boyet. Under the cool shade of a sycamore,
I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour,

When, lo! to interrupt my purpose rest,
Toward that shade I might behold address
The king and his companions: warily
I stole into a neighbour thicket by.
And overheard what you shall overhear:
That by and by disguis'd they will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page.
That well by heart hath conn'd his embassage:
Action, and accent, did they teach him there:
"Thus must thou speak, and thus thy body bear"
And ever and anon they made a doubt
Presence majestic would put him out;
"For," quoth the king, "an angel shall thou see
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously.
"The boy replied. "An angel is not evil;
I should have feared her, had she been a devil."
With that all laugh'd, and chapp'd him on the shoulder
Making the bold wags by their praises bolder.
One ruff'd his elbow thus, and fleer'd and swore
A better speech was never spoke before:
Another, with his finger and his thumb,
Cry'd: "Vae! we will not, come what will come!"
The third he esper'd, and cried. "All goes well!"
The fourth turn'd on the floor, and down he fell.
With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
That in this spleen ridiculous appears.

To cheek their folly, passion's sudden 5 tears.

Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?

Boyet. They do, they do: and are apparel'd thus:-
Like Muscovites, or Russians: as I guess,
Their purpose is, to parle, to court, and dance;
And every one his love-suit will advance
Unto his several mistress; which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow.

Prin. And will they so? the gallant's shall be task'd
For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd,
And not a man of them shall have the grace,
Despite of suit, to see a lady's face —
Hold Rosaline; this favour thou shall wear,
And then the king will court thee for his dear:
Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine,
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.
And change your favours, too: so shall your loves
Woo contrary, deceiv'd by these removes.

Ros. Come on them; wear the favours most in sight
Kath. But in this changing what is your intent?
Prin. The effect of my intent is, to cross theirs:
They do it but in mockery, merriment;
And mock for mock is only my intent.
Their several counsels they unbosom shall
To loves mistook: and so he mock'd while,
Upon the next occasion that we meet.
With visages display'd, to talk, and greet.

Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to't?

Prin. No; to the leath, we will not move a foot
Nor to their peep'd speech render we no grace;
But, while it is spoke, each turn away her face.

Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart,
And quite divorce his memory from his part.

Prin. Therefore I do it; and, I make no doubt,
The rest will never come in, if he be out.
There's no such sport, as sport by sport o'erthrown;
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our own:
So shall we stay, mocking intended game;
And they, well mock'd, depart away with shame.

[Trumpets sound within.
Boyet. The trumpet sounds: be mask'd, the maskers come.

King. Will you not dance? How come you thus estranged?
Ros. You took the moon at full, but now she's charged.
King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.

The music plays: vouchsafe some motion to it.
Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.

King. But your legs should do it.
Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by chance,
We'll not be particular: we will not dance.

Boy. Why take we hands then?
Ros. Only to part friends.

Court. Sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.
King. More measure of this measure: be not nice.
Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.

King. Prize you yourselves? What buys your company?
Ros. Your absence only.

King. That can never be.
Ros. Then cannot we be bought: and so adieu.
Twice to your visor, and half twice to you!
King. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.
Ros. In private, then.

King. I am best pleas'd with that. [They converse apart]

Biron. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
Prin. Honey, and milk, and sugar: there are three.
Biron. Nay, then, two treys, (an if you grow so nice)
Metheglin, wort, and mulsey.—Well run, dice!
Theirs half a dozen sweets.
Prin. Seventh sweet, adieu.

Since you can egg, I'll play no more with you.
Biron. One word in secret.
Prin. Let it not be sweet.
Biron. Thou grieve'st my gall.
Biron. Therefore meet. [They converse apart]

Dum. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a word?
Mar. Name it.
Dum. Fair lady,—
Mar. Say you so? Fair lord.—
Take that for your fair lady.

Dum. Please it you, as much in private, and I'll bid adieu.

[They converse apart.

Kath. What was your visor made without a tongue?
Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.
Kath. O, for your reason! quickly, sir; I long.
Long. You have a double tongue within your mask,
And would afford my speechless visor half.

Kath. Veal, quoth the Dutchman.—Is not veal a calf?
Long. A calf, fair lady?
Kath. No, a fair lord calf.
Long. Let's part the word.
Kath. No; I'll not be your half:
Take all, and wean it: it may prove an ox.

Long. Look, how you but yourself in these sharp mocks.

Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.
Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.

Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.

Kath. Bleat softly then: the butcher hears you cry

[They converse apart.

Boy. The tongues of mocking wenchers are as keen
As is the razor's edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen;
Above the sense of sense, so sensible
Seemeth their conference; their conceits have wings,
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.

Ros. Not one word more, my maids: break off, break off.

Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scold!

King. Farewell, mad wenches; you have simple wits.

[Exit King, Lords, Mort, Music, and Attendants.]

Prin. Twenty adues, my frozen Musevites.—And will the breasted of 'tis so wonder'd at?

Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out.

Ros. Well-liking wits they have; gross, gross; fat, fat.

Prin. O, poverty in wit, kill'd by pure scold! Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night, Or ever, but in visors, show their faces? This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.

Ros. O! they were all in lamentable cases!

The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.

Prin. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.

Mar. Dumaime was at my service, and his sword:

No point, quoth I; my servant straight was mute.

Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;
And trow you, what he call'd me?

Prin. Qualm, perhaps.

Kath. Yes, in good faith.

Prin. Go, sickness as thou art!

Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps;
But will you hear? the king is my love sworn.

Prin. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.

Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.

Mar. Dumaime is mine, as sure as bark on tree.

Boyet. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear.

Immediately they will again be here In their own shapes; for it can never be, They will digest this harsh indignity.

Prin. Will they return?

Boyet. They will, they will, God knows; And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows: Therefore, change favours; and, when they repair, Blow like sweet roses in this summer air.

Boyet. Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in their bud; Dismask'd, their damask sweet conmixture shown, Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.

Prin. Avant, perplexity! What shall we do, If they return in their own shapes to woo?

Ros. Good madam, if by me you'll be advised, Let's mock them still, as well, known, as disguisd.
Let us complain to them what fools were here, Disguis'd like Musevites, in shapeless gear; And wonder, what they were, and to what end Their shallow shows, and prologue vilely penn'd, And their rough carriage so ridiculous.

Should be presented at our tent to us.

Boyet. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.

Prin. Whip to our tents, as roes run over land.

[Exit Princess, Ros., Kath. and Maria.]

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumaime, in their proper habits.

King. Fair sir, God have you! Where is the princess?

Boyet. Gone to her tent; pray give to your majesty, Command me any service to her thither?

King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.

Boyet. I will; and so will she, I know, my lord.

[Exit.]

Biron. This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons peas.

And utters it again when God doth please. He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares At wakes, and wassails, meetings, markets, fairs; And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know, Have not the grace to grace it with such show.

This gallant pins the wenches on his sleeve: Had he been Adam, he had tempted Eve. A can carve too, and liep: why, this is he, That kiss'd his hand away in courtesy. This is the ape of form, monstrous the nice, That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice In honourable terms: nay, he can sing A mean most meanly: and, in ushering, Mend him who can: the ladies call him, sweet; The stairs, as he trends on them, kiss his feet. This is the flower that smiles on every one, To show his teeth as white as whales bone; And consciences, that will not die in debt, Pay him the due of honey-tongued Boyet.

King. A blister on his sweet tongue, with my heart That put Armado's page out of his part!

Enter the Princess, ushered by Boyet: ROSALINE, MARIA, KATHARINE, and ATTENDANTS.

Biron. See where he comes!—Behaviour, what wilt thou, Till this man show'd thee? and what art thou now?

King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!

Prin. Fair, in all hail, is foul, as I conceive.

King. Construe my speeches better, if you may.

Prin. Then wish me better: I will give you leave.

King. We come to visit you, and purpose now To lead you to our court: vouesafie it, then.

Prin. This field shall hold me, and so hold your vow.

Nor God, nor I, delight in perjur'd men.

King. Rebuke me not for that which you provoke; The virtue of your eye must break my oath.

Prin. You nick-name virtue; vice you should have spoke, For virtue's office never breaks men's troth.

Now, by my maiden honour, yet as pure As the unsullied lily, I protest, A world of termrets though I should endure, I would not yield to be your house's guest; So much I hate a breaking cause to be Of heavenly oaths, vow'd with integrity.

King. O! you have liv'd in desolation here, Unseen, unvisited: much to our shame.

Prin. Not so, my lord; it is not so, I swear: We have had pastimes here, and pleasant game. A mess of Russians left us but of late.

Ay, in truth, my lord Trim gallants, full of courtship, and of state.

Ros. Madam, speak true.—It is not so, my lord: My lady (to the manner of these days) In courtesy gives undeserving praise. We four, indeed, confronted were with four In Russian habit: here they stay'd an hour. And talk'd apace; and in that hour, my lord, They did not bless us with one harpy word. I dare not call their fools: but this I think, When they are thisty, fools would fain have drink.

Biron. This jest is dry to me.—Fair, gentle sweet, Your wit makes wise things foolish: when we greet, With eyes best seeing, heaven's fiery eye, By light we lose light: your capacity

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Scene II.

Is not that nature, that to your huge store Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but poor. Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my eye,— Biron. I am a fool, and full of poverty. Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong, It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue. Biron. O! I am yours, and all that I possess. Ros. All the fool-mine? Biron. I cannot give you less. Ros. Which of the visors was it, that you wore? Biron. Where? when? what visor? why demand you this? Ros. There, then, that visor; that superfluous ease, That hid the worse, and show'd the better face. King. We are desir'd: they'll mock us now downright. Dum. Let us confess, and turn it to a jest. Prin. Amaz'd, my lord? Why looks your highness sad? Ros. Help! hold his brows! he'll swoon. Why look ye pale?— Sea-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy.

Biron. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury. Can any face of brass hold longer out?— Here stand, I, lady: dart thy skill at me; Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a flout; Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance; Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit; And I will wish thee never more to dance, Nor never more in Russian habit wait. O! never will I trust to speeches pen'd, Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue; Nor never come in visor to my friend; Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song; Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise, Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation, Figures pedantical; these summer flies Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. I do forswear them, and I here protest By this white glove, (how white the hand, God knows,) Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd In rustic years, and honest kersey noes; And, to begin,—wench, so God help me, la! My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw. Ros. Sans sans, I pray you. Biron. Yet I have a trick Of the old rage,—bear with me, I am sick; I'll leave it by degrees. Soft! let us see:— Write "Lord have mercy on us" on those three; They are infected, in their hearts it lies; They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes; These lords are visited; you are not free, For the Lord's tokens on you do I see. Prin. No, they are free that gave these tokens to us. Biron. Our states are forfeit: seek not to undo us. Ros. It is not so; for how can this be true, That you stand forfeit, being those that sue? Biron. Peace! for I will not have to do with you. Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend. Biron. Speak for yourselves: my wit is at an end. King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression Some fair excuse. Prin. The fairest is confession, Were you not here, but even now, disguis'd?

King. Madam, I was. Prin. And were you well advis'd? King. I was, fair madam. Prin. When you then were here, What did you whisper in your lady's ear? King. That more than all the world I did respect her. Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will reject her. King. Upon mine honour, no. Prin. Peace! peace! forbears: Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear. King. Despise me, when I break this oath of mine. Prin. I will; and therefore keep it.—Rosaline, What did the Russian whisper in your ear? Ros. Madam, he swore, that he did hold me dear As precious eye-sight, and did value me Above this world; adding thereto, moreover, That he would wed me, or else die my lover. Prin. God give thee joy of him! the noble lord Most honourably doth uphold his word. King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my troth I never swore this lady such an oath. Ros. By heaven, you did; and to confirm it plain, You gave me this: but take it, sir. again. King. My faith, and this, the princess I did give: I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve. Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear; And lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear,— What! will you have me, or our pearl again? Biron. Neither of either, I remit both twain: I see the trick on 't—here was a consent, Knowing beforehand of our merriment, To dash it like a Christmas comedy. Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight zany, Some mumble-news, some trencher-knight, some Dick, That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick To make my lady laugh when she's disposed, Told our intents before; which once disclosed, The ladies did change favours, and then we, Following the signs, wou'd but the sign of she. Now, to our perjury to add more terror, We are again forsworn—in will, and error. Much upon this it is:—and might not you [To Boyet. Forestal our sport, to make us thus untrue? Do you not know my lady's foot by the squire2? And laugh upon the apple of her eye? And stand between her back, sir, and the fire, Holding a trencher, jesting merrily? You put our page out: go, you are allow'd. Do when you will, a smack shall be your shroud. You leer upon me, do you? there's an eye, Wounds like a leaden sword. Boyet. Full merrily Hath this brave manage, this career, been run. Biron. Lo! he is standing straight. Peace! I have done.

Enter Costard.

Welcome, pure wit! thou parkest a fair tray. Cost. O lord, sir, they would know, Whether the three Worthies shall come in, or no. Biron. What, are there but three? Cost. No, sir; but it is vara fine, For every one pursuents three. Biron. And three times three is nine Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir, I hope, it is not so. You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know:

1 The inscription, written on houses infected with the plague. 2 Hesitate, an old use of the word. 3 Square. 4 Beg to have the
I hope, sir, three times three, sir,—
Biron. Is not nine.
Cost. Under correction, sir, we know where until it doth amount.

Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.
Cost. O Lord! sir, it were pity you should get your lying by reckoning, sir.
Biron. How much is it?
Cost. O Lord! sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereuntil it doth amount: for mine own part, I am, as they say, but to purport one man,—an' one poor man—Pompeion the great, sir.

Biron. Art thou one of the Worthies?
Cost. It pleased them, to think me worthy of Pompeion the great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the Worthy, but I am to stand for him.

Biron. Go, bid them prepare.
Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir: we will take some care.

[Exit Costard.

King. Biron, they will shame us; let them not approach.

Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord; and 'tis some policy
To have one show worse than the king's and his company.

King. I say, they shall not come.
Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o'er-rule you now. That upon best pleasures, that doth least know how:
Where zeal strives to content, and the cheats
Die in the zeal of which they present.
Their form confounded makes most form in mirth;
When great things labouring perish in their birth,
Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

[Enter Armado.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words.

[Armado converses with the King, and deliver's a paper to him.

Prin. Doth this man serve God?
Biron. Why ask you?

Prin. 'A speaks not like a man of God's making.
Arm. That's all one, my fair, sweet, honey monarch;
for, I protest, the school-master is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain: but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna della guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couple! [Exit Armado.

King. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies. He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pompey the great: the parish curate, Alexander; Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Macabæus.
And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive, These four will change habits, and present the other five.

Biron. There is five in the first show.

King. You are deceived; 'tis not so.
Biron. The pedant, the bragget, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy:—
Abate throw at novum,
and the whole world again
Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his vein.

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.

[Enter Costard armed, for Pompey.

Cost. I Pompey am,—

Boyet. You lie, you are not he.

Cost. I Pompey am,—

Boyet. With libbard's head on knee.
Biron. Well said, old mocker: I must needs be friends with thee.

Cost. I Pompey am, Pompey surnam'd the big,—

Dum. The great.
Cost. It is great, sir;—Pompey surnam'd the great, That oft in field, with targe and shield, did make my foe to sweat:
And travelling along this coast I here am come by chance,
And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lase of France?
If your ladyship would say, "Thanks, Pompey," I had done.

Prin. Great thanks, great Pompey.
Cost. 'Tis not so much worth; but, I hope, I was perfect. I made a little fault in, "great."
Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best Worthy.

[Enter Sir Nathaniel armed, for Alexander.

Nath. "When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander;
By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:
My'scutcheon plain declares, that I am Alisander."

Boyet. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Biron. Your nose smells, no, in this, most tender-scenting knight.

Prin. The conqueror is dismay'd.—Proceed, good Alexander.
Nath. "When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander;"

Boyet. Most true; 'tis right; you were so, Alisander.
Biron. Pompey the great.—

Cost. Your servant, and Costard.
Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away Alisander.

Cost. O sir, [To Nath.] you have overthrown Alisander the conqueror. You will be spared out of the painted cloth for this: your lion, that holds his pollaxe sitting on a close-stool, will he give to Ajax: he will be the ninth Worthy. A conqueror, and afraid to speak? run away for shame, Alisander. [Nath. retires.] There, 'an't shall please you; a foolish mild man; an honest man, look you, and soon dash'd. He is a marvellous good neighbour, faith, and a very good bowler, but, for Alisander, alas! you see how 'tis;—a little o'parted. But there are Worthies a coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

King. Stand aside, good Pompey. [Exit Costard.

[Enter Holofernes armed, for Judas, and Moth armed, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Hercules is presented by this imp, Whose club kill'd Cercibros, that three-headed conis; And, when he was a babe, a child, a shrimp, Thus did he strangle serpents in his manus.
Quomiam, he seemeth in minority, Ergo, I come with this apology. —
Some keep some state in thy exit, and vanish. [Exit Moth.

Hol. "Judas I am,—"

Dum. A Judas!
Hol. Not Iesnariot, sir—
"Judas I am, yclep'd Macabaeus."
Hol. "Judas I am,—"

Dum. The more shame for you, Judas.

1 A game at dice, of which five and nine were the chief throws. 2 Panther's. 3 Alexander was wry-necked, and his body, says Plutarch, and a sweet odour. 4 Used for walls in place of tapestry. 5 The arms given to Alexander in the old history of the Nine Worthies, were "a lion sitting in a chair, holding a battle-axe." 6 Not in f. e.
Love's Labour's Lost

Scene II.

HOL. What mean you, sir?
BOYET. To make Judas hang himself.
HOL. Begin, sir; you are my elder.
BIRON. Well follow'd: Judas was hang'd on an elder. I will not be put out of countenance.
BIRON. Because thou hast no face.
HOL. What is this?
BOYET. A cittern head.
DUM. The head of a bodkin.
BIRON. A death's face in a ring.
LONG. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.
BOYET. The pummel of Caesar's fauchion.
DUM. The carb'd-bone face on a flask.
BIRON. St. George's half-cheek in a brooch.
DUM. Ay, and in a brooch of lead.
BIRON. Ay, and worn in the cap of a tooth-drawer.
And now forward, for we have put thee in countenance.
HOL. You have put me out of countenance.
BIRON. False: we have given thee faces.
HOL. But you have out-fac'd them all.
BIRON. An thou wert a lion, we would do so.
BOYET. Therefore, as he is an ass, let him go.
And so adieu, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay?
DUM. For the latter end of his name.
BIRON. For the ass to the Jude? give it him:—
JUD.-away.
HOL. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.
BOYET. A light for monsieur Judas! it grows dark, he may stumble.
PRIN. Alas, poor Maccabeus, how hath he been bailed?

Enter Armando armed, for Hector.

BIRON. Hide thy head, Achilles: here comes Hector in arms.

DUM. Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry.

KING. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.
BOYET. But is this Hector?
BING. I think Hector was not so clean-timber'd.
LONG. His leg is too big for Hector's.
DUM. More cail, certain.
BOYET. No; he is best inlaid in the small.
BIRON. This cannot be Hector.
DUM. He is a god or a painter; for he makes faces.

"The armipotent Mars of lanes the almighty, Gave Hector a gift."

DUM. A gift nutmeg.
BIRON. A lemon.
LONG. Stuck with cloves.
DUM. No, cloven.
ARM. Peace!

"The armipotent Mars of lanes the almighty, Gave Hector a gift, the heir of llion: A man so breath'd, that certain he would fight, yea, From morn till night, out of his pavilion. I am that flower,"

DUM. That mint.
LONG. That columbine.
ARM. Sweet lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.
LONG. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

DUM. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.
ARM. The sweet war-man is dead and rotten: sweet chucks, beat not the bones of the buried: when he breathed, he was a man. But I will forward with my device. Sweet royalty, bestow on me the sense of bearing.

PRIN. Speak, brave Hector: we are much delighted.
ARM. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.
BOYET. Loves her by the foot.
DUM. He may not by the yard.
ARM. "This Hector far surmounted Hannibal,"—

Re-enter Costard, in haste, unarm'd.

COST. The party is gone: fellow Hector, she is gone: she is two months on her way.
ARM. What meanest thou?
COST. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan, the poor wench is cast away: she's quick; the child brasts in her belly already: 'tis yours.
ARM. Dost thou infamize me among potentates Thou shalt die.

COST. Then shall Hector be whipp'd for Jaquenetta that is quick by him, and hang'd for Pompey that is dead by him.

DUM. Most rare Pompey!
BOYET. Renowned Pompey!
BIRON. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the huge!
DUM. Hector trembles.
BIRON. Pompey is moved.—More Ares, more Ares! stir them on! stir them on!
DUM. Hector will challenge him.
BIRON. Ay, if a have no more man's blood in his belly than will sup a flea.

ARM. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.

COST. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man: I'll slash: I'll do it by the sword.—I pray you let me borrow my arms again.

DUM. Room for the incensed Worthies!

COST. I'll do it in my shirt.
DUM. Most resolute Pompey!
MOTH. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower.

Do you not see, Pompey is unsparing for the combat? What mean you? you will lose your reputation.
ARM. Gentlemen, and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.

DUM. You may not deny it: Pompey hath made the challenge.
ARM. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.
BIRON. What reason have you for't?
ARM. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt. I go woolward for penance.

BOYET. True, and it was enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn, he wore none, but a dish-clout of Jaquenetta's, and that a wears next his heart for a favour.

Enter Monsieur Mercade, a Messenger.

MER. God save you, madam.
PRIN. Welcome, Mercade, But that thou interrupt'st our merriment.
MER. I am sorry, madam, for the news I bring
Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—
PRIN. Dead, for my life!
MER. Even so: my tale is told.

BIRON. Worthies, away! The scene begins to cloud
ARM. For mine own part, I breathe free breath. I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

[Exeunt Worthies.

KING. How fares your majesty?
PRIN. Boyet, prepare: I will away to-night.
KING. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.
PRIN. Prepare, I say.—I thank you, gracious lords, For all your fair endeavours; and entreat,
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning,
If this austere in-sovereign life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood;
If frosts, and fasts, hard lodging, and thin weeds,
Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love,
But that it bear this trial, and last love;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Come challenge me, challenge6 by these deser's.
And by this virgin palm, now kissing thine.
I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut
My woful self up in a mourning house,
Raining the tears of lamentation,
For the remembrance of my father's death.
If this thou do deny, let our hands part,
Neither intimated in the other's heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,
To flatten up these powers of mine with rest.
The sudden hand of death close up mine eye,
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

Biron. And what to me, my love? said what to me?
Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank:4
You are attain'd with faults and perjury;
Therefore, if you my favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But seek the weary beds of people sick.

Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?
Kath. A wife!—A beard, fair health, and honesty;
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

Dum. O! shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?
Kath. Not so, my lord. A twelvemonth and a day
I'll mark no words that smooth-fac'd wooers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come,
Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.

Dum. I'll serve thee true and faithfully till then.
Kath. Yet swear not, lest you be forsworn again.
Long. What says Maria?

Mar. At the twelvemonth's end,
I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.
Long. I'll stay with patience; but the time's long
Mar. The like you; few taller are so young.
Biron. Studies my lady? mistress look on me—
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye, What handful thine answer shall there?
Impose some service on me for thy love.

Ros. Oft had I heard of you, my lord Biron,
Before I saw you, and the world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks,
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts,
Which you on all estates will exercise15
That lie within the mercy of your wit:
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain,
And, therewithal, to win me, if you please,
Without the which I am not to be won,
You shall this twelvemonth term, from day to day,
Visit the speechless sick, and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.

Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be; it is impossible:
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

Ros. Why, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools.

1 humble: in f.e. 2 parts of time extremely form: in f.e. 3 The technical term for the loss of an arrow. 4 double: in f.e 5 straining: in f.e. 6 straining: in f.e. 7 A sin: in f.e. 8 Cotton wood: used for stuffing dresses. 9 has me: in f.e. 10 instances: in f.e 11 Knight and C-bridge think that this speech of Rosaline's should be omitted. It is found in all the old eds. 12 execute: in f.e
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it; then, if sickly ears,
Deaf’d with the clamours of their own dire groans,
Will hear your idle swains, continue them?
And I will have you, and that fault withal;
But, if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.

Biron. A twelvemonth? well, befal what will befal,
’t will jeth a twelvemonth in an hospital.

Prin. Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave.

[to the King.

King. No, madam; we will bring you on your way.

Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies’ courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.

King. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day,
And then ’t will end.

Biron. That’s too long for a play.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me.—
Prin. Was not that Hector?

Dum. The worthy knight of Troy.

Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave.
I am a votary: I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? it should have followed in the end of our show.

King. Call them forth quickly; we will do so.

Arm. Holla! approach.

Enter Holofernes, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard, and
others.

This side is Hiems, winter; this Ver, the spring; the one maintained by the owl, the other by the cuckoo.
Ver, begin.

Song.

Spring. When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white

And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight.
The cuckoo then, on every tree.

Mock'd married men, for thus sings he:

Cuckoo,

Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

II.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughman’s clocks,
When turtles tread, and rooks, and days,
And maidsens bleach their summer smocks,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,

Mock’d married men, for thus sings he;

Cuckoo,

Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

III.

Winter. When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp’d, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,

To-who,

Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

IV.

When all about the wind doth blow,
And coughing drouns the parson’s sake,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian’s nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,

To-who,

Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the song of Apollo. You, that way: we, this way

SCENE: Athens, and a Wood not far from it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

The. The time, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon; but, oh, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes! she languishes my desires,
Like to a step-dame, or a dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue.

Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in Seven nights; four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow,
New-bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

The. Go, Philostrate,
Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the port and nimble spirit of mirth:
Turn melancholy forth to funerals,
The pale companion is not for our pomp.

[Exeunt Philostrate.

Hippolyta. I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelry.

Enter Egeus, with his daughter Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!
The. Thanks, good Egeus: what's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I; with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.

1 now: in f. n. The change was also suggested by Rowe, and adopted generally 2 Revelling, r. in f.
The. Rather, your eyes must with his judgment look.

Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me.
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concern my modesty,
In such a presence here, to plead my thoughts;
But I beseech your grace, that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to die the death, or to adjure
For ever the society of men.
Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon.
Thrice blessed they, that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage:
But earthy! happier is the rose distill'd,
Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.
Her. So will I grow, so will I, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship, to whose unwish'd yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

The. Take time to pause: and by the next new moon
The sealing-day betwixt my love and me
For everlaste? bond of fellowship.
Upon that day either prepare to die
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life.

Dem. Relent, sweet Hermia:—and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

Ege. Soomly Lysander! true, he hath my love,
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she, my mine, and all my right of her
I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than his;
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
(If not with vantage,) as Demetrius';
And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia.

Why should not I then prosecute my right?

Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,
Made love to Nedar's daughter. Helena,
And won her soul: and she, sweet lady, dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Upon this duped and inconstant man.

The. I must confess, that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it.—But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus: you shall go with me,
I have some private schoolung for you both.—
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself.
To fit your fancies to your father's will,
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
(Which by no means we may extenuate)
To death, or to a vow of single life.—
Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love?—

Demetrius, and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial, and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

Ege. With duty, and desire, we follow you.

Lys. How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?

Her. Belike, for want of rain, which I could Betemn them from the tempest of mine eyes.

Lys. Ah me! for aught that I could ever read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood.—

Her. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to low*!
Lys. Or else misgraff'd, in respect of years;—
Her. O spite! too old to be engag'd to young!
Lys. Or else it stood upon the choice of men*;

Her. O he! to choose love by another's eyes!
Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lastlie to it,
Making it momentary as a sound.

Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the collied' night,
That, in a speen*, unfolds both heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say,—behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion.

Her. If, then, true lovers have been ever cross'd,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then, let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross,
As due to love as thoughts, and dreams, and sighs,
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Lys. A good persuasion: therefore, hear me, Hermia.
I have a widow aunt, a dowager
Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
From Athens is her house remote* seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee,
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursuue us to. she tells me,
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night,
And in the wood, a league without the town,
(Where I did meet thee once with Helena)
To do observance to a morn of May
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander!
I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls, and prospers loves,
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke:
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

Enter Helena.

Her. God speed fair Helena! Whither away?
Hol. Call you me fair? I thank you, fair again unsay.
Demetrius loves your fair*: O happy fair!
Your eyes are lode-stars, and your tongue's sweet air
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear.
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in a Cottage.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here?

Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the script.

Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and duchess on his wedding-day at night.

Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors, and so go on to appoint.

Quin. Marry, our play is:—The most amenable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.

Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry.—Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer, as I call you.—Nick Bottom, the weaver.

Bot: Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.

Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes: I will move stones; I will condole in some measure. To the rest:—yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split.

"The raging rocks,
And shivering shocks,
Shall break the looks,
Of prison-gates:
And Phibbus' ear
Shall shine from far
And make and mar
The foolish fates."

This was lofty!—Now name the rest of the players—This is Ercles' vein; a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condoling.

Quin. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.

Flu. Here, Peter Quince."Quin. What is Thisby? a wandering knight?

Quin. It, the lady that Pyramus must love.

Flu. Nay, faith, let me not play a woman: I have a beard coming.

Quin. That is all one. You shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.

Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too. I'll speak in a monstrous little voice:—"Thisby, Thisby—Ah, Pyramus, my lover dear! thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!"

Quin. No, no; you must play Pyramus, and, Flute, you Thisby.

Bot. Well, proceed.

Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.

Star. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother.—Tom Snout, the tinker.

Snout. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. You, Pyramus's father: myself, Thisby's father.—Snug, the joiner, you, the lion's part; and, hope, here is a play fitted.

Snug. Have you the lion's part written? pray you if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM

...
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
Didst thou not lead him through the glimmering night
From Perseus, whom he ravished?
And make him with fair Ægée break his faith,
With Ariadne, and Autiope?

Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy:
And never, since the middle summer's spring,
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paved fountain, or by rushing brook,
Or on the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brows thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea
Contagious fogs; which falling in the land,
Have every petting river made so proud.

That they have overborne their continents:
The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain
The ploughman lost his savour: and the green corn
Hath rooted, ere his youth attain'd a beard:
The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrain flock:
The nine men's moris is fill'd up with mud;
And the quaint mazes on the wanton green,
For lack of tread are undistinguishable.
The human mortals want their winter here.
No night is now with hymn or carol blest;
Therefore the moon, the governess of floods,
Dale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatic diseases do abound:
And through this distemper, we see
The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose;
And on old Hyem's shirt, and icy crown,
An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds
Is, as in mockery, set.
The spring, the summer,
The child'ed autumn, angry winter change
Their wonted liverys; and the mazed world,
By their increase, now knows not which is which.
And this same progeny of evils comes
From our debate, from our dissension:
We are their parents and original.

Obe. Do you amend it then; it lies in you.
Why should Titania cross her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman.

Tita. Set your art at rest:
Thy fairy land buys not the child of me.
His mother was a votress of my order:
And, in the speeded Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossip'd by my side,
And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
Marking the embarks of traders on the flood.
When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grow big-bellied, with the wanton wind;
Which she, with pretty and with swimming gait,
Following, (her womb, then ripe) with my young squire
Would imitate, and sail upon the land,
To fetch me trilles, and return again.
As from a voyag'd, rich with merchandise,
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And for her sake I do rear up her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.

Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?

Tita. Perchance, till after Theseus' wedding-day.

If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts
Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.

Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom.—Fairies, away!
We shall chide downright, if I longer stay.

[Exit Titania, with her train.

Obe. Well, go thy way; thou shalt not from this grove.

Till I torment thee for this injury.

My gentle Puck, come hither: thou remember'st
Once since I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew calm at her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres
To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw (but thou couldst not)
Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal10 thrown by the west,
And loos'd his love-shot smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts:
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon
And the imperial votaries passed on,

In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet mark'd I where the bower of Cupid fell:
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidskin call it love-in-idleness.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee once
The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that is seen11.

Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again,
Ere the levantian can swim a league.

Puck. I did21 put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes.

[Exit Puck.

Obe. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes:
The next thing then she wak'd looks upon,
(Do it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
Or meddling monkey, or on busy ape),
She shall pursue it with the soul of love;
And ere I take this charm off from her sight,
(As I can take it with another herb)
I'll make her render up her page to me.
But who comes here? I am invisible,
And I will over-hear their conference.

[Retiring

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander, and fair Hermia?

The one I'll slay the other slayeth me.
Thou told'st me they were stol'n into this wood,
And here am I, and wood14 within this wood,
Because I cannot meet my Hermia.

Hence! get thee gone, and follow me no more.

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant:
But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? Do I speak you fair?
Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth
Tell you I do not, nor I cannot love you?

Hel. And even for that do I love you the more.
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
SCENE II.—Another Part of the Wood.

Enter Titania, with her train.

Tita. Come, now a roundel, and a fairy song:
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence:
Some, to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds:
Some war with reat-mice\(^2\) for their feathered wings,
To make my small elves coat; and some keep back
The elamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders
At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices, and let me rest.

FAIRIES' SONG.

1 Fai. You spott'd snakes, with double tongue,
Thorny hedge-hogs, be not seen,
Nevets, and blind-worms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen:

CHORUS.

Philomel, with melody,
Sing now your sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby.
Never harm,
Nor spell nor charm,
Come our lovely lady nigh;
So, good night, with lullaby.

2 Fai. Weaving spiders, come not here;
Hence, you long-legg'd spinners, hence;
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm, nor snail, do no offence.

CHORUS.

Philomel, with melody, &c.

2 Fai. Hence, away! now all is well.
One, aloof, stand sentinel.

[Exeunt Fairies. TITANIA SLEEPS.

Obi. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,

[Anointing Titania's eyelids.

Do it for thy true love sake;
Love, and languish for his sake:
Be it o'once, or eat, or bear;
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When thou wak'st, it is thy dear.
Wake when some vile thing is near.

[Lysander and Hermia,

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood;
And, to speak truth, I have forgot our way:
We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.

Her. Be it so, Lysander: find you out a bed,
For upon this bank will rest my head.

Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both:
One heart, one bed. two bosoms, and one troth.

Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear,
Lie further off yet; do not lie so near.

Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence;
Love takes the meaning in love's confidence.
I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit,
So that but one heart we can make of it:
Two bosoms interchanged with an oath;
So then, two bosoms, and a single troth.
Then, by your side no bed-room me deny,
For, lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.

Her. Lysander riddles very prettily.
Now much beshrew my manners and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied.
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
Lie further off; in human modesty
Such separation as may well be said

Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid.
So far be distant; and good night, sweet friend.
Thy love ne'er after till thy sweet life end!

Ly. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I;
And then end life, when I end loyalty?
Here is my bed: sleep give thee all his rest!
Her. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be press'd!

[They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,
But Athenian found I none,
On whose eyes I might approve
This flower's force in stirring love.
Night and silence! who is here?
Weeds of Athens he doth wear:
This is he, my master said,
Despised the Athenian maid;
And here the maiden, sleeping sound
On the dank and dirty ground.
Pretty soul! she durst not lie
Near this lack-love, kill-courtsey.
Churl, upon thy eyes I throw
All the power this charm doth owe.

[Ancienting his eyes!
When thou wak'st, let love forbid
Sleep his seat on thy eyelid.
So awake when I am gone,
For I must now to Oberon.

[Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helena, running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.
Dem. I charge thee, hence; and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O! wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.
Dem. Stay, on thy peril: I alone will go.

[Exit Demetrius.

Hel. O! I am out of breath in this fond chase.

The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.
Happy is Hermia, whereso'er she lies,
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.
How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt tears:
If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than hers.
No, no, I am as ugly as a bear,
For beasts that meet me, run away for fear;
Therefore, no marvel, though Demetrius
Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.
What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
Made me compare with Hermia's sphyre eyne?—
But who is here?—Lysander on the ground?
Dead, or asleep?—I see no blood, no wound.
Lysander, if thou live, good sir, awake.

Ly. And run through fire I will, for thy sweet sake.

[Waking.

Transparent Helena! Nature here shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.

Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
Is that vile name to perish on my sword!
Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.
What though he love your Hermia? Lord! what though?
Yet Hermia still loves you: then, be content.

Ly. Content with Hermia? No: I do repent!
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
Not Hermia, but Helena I love.
Who will not change a raven for a dove?
The will of man is by his reason sway'd,
And reason says you are the worthier maid.
Things growing are not ripe until their season;
So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason;
And touching now the point of human skill.
Reason becomes the marshal to my will,
And leads me to your eyes; where I o'erlook
Love's stories, written in love's richest book.
Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?
When, at your hands, did I deserve this scorn?
Is't not enough, is't not enough, young man,
That I did never, no, nor never can,
Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,
But you must float my insufficiency?
Good troth, you do me wrong; good sooth, you do,
In such disdainful manner me to woo.

But fare you well: perforce I must confess,
I thought you lord of more true gentleness.
O, that a lady, of one man refus'd,
Should, of another, therefore, be abus'd!

Ly. She sees not Hermia.—Hermia, sleep thou there
And never may'st thou come Lysander near;
For, as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The deepest loathing to the stomach brings;
Or, as the heresies, that men do leave,
Are hated most of those they did deceive;
So thou, my surfeit, and my heresy.
Of all be hated, but the most of me:
And all my powers address their love and might.
To honour Helen, and to be her knight.

Her. Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best.

To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast,
Ah, me, for pity!—what a dream was here!
Lysander, look, how I do quake with fear.
Methought a serpent ate my heart away;
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey,—
Lysander! what, remov'd? Lysander! lord!
What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?
Alack! where are you? speak, an if you hear;
Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.

No?—then I will perceive you are not nigh:
Either death, or you, I'll find immediately.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. Titania lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?

Quin. Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsals. This green plot shall be our stage this hawthorn brake our acting-house; and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the duke.

1 This direction not in F. e.  2 Malone's reading "Nature shows her art."  3 By our lady kin.
Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance, tell them, that I, Pyramus, am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver. This will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue, and it shall be written in eight and six.

Bot. No, make it two more: let it be written in eight and eight.

Snout. Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in, God shield us! a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing; for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion living, and we ought to look to it.

Snout. Therefore, another prologue must tell he is not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same effect:—Ladies, or fair ladies, I would wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would entreat you, not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: no, I am no such thing: I am a man as other men are; and there, indeed, let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Snug, the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there are two hard things: that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; for you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

Snug. Doth the moon shine that night we play our play?

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanack; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then you may leave a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorn and a thorn, and say, he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby (says the story,) did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snug. You can never bring in a wall.—What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present wall; and let him have some plaster, or some lime, or some roughcast about him, to signify wall: and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin. When you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.

Puck. What hempen home-spuns have we swaggering here.

So now the cradle of the fairy queen?

What, a play toward? I'll be an auditor;

An actor too, perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus.—Thisby, stand forth.

Pyr. Thisby, the flowers have odious savours sweet."

Quin. Odours, odours.

Pyr. "Odours savours sweet:

So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby, dear.—

But, hark, a voice! stay thou but here a while,

And by and by I will to thee appear."

[Exit

Puck. A stranger Pyramus than e'er play'd here.

[Exit

This. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand; he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and to come again.

This. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,

Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,

Most briskly juvenal, and eke most lovely Jew;

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire,

I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb."

Quin. Ninus' tomb, man. Why you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus. You speak all your part at ones, cues and all.—Pyramus, enter: your cue is past; it is, "never tire."

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass's head on.

This. O!—"As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire."

Pyr. "If I were, fair Thisby, I were only thine."—

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.

Pray, masters! fly, masters! help!

[Exit Clowns, in confusion.

Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,

Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier:

Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,

Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.

[Exit

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make me afraid.

Re-enter Snout.

Snout. O Bottom! thou art changed; what do I see on thee?

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass's head of your own, do you?

[Exit

Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated.

Bot. I see their knavery. This is to make an ass of me, to fright me, if they could; but I will not stir from this place, do what they can. I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

[Sings.

The osell-cock, so black of hue,

With orange-tawny bill,

The throatle with his note so true,

The wren with little quill.

Tita. What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

Bot. The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,

The plain-song cuckoo gray,

Whose note full many a man doth mark,

And dares not answer, say;

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird?

who would give a bird the lie, though he cry "enekoo?

never so?

Tita. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:

Mine ear is much enamour'd of thy note,

So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue's force, perforce, doth move me,

On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days. The more the pity, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleek 1 upon occasion.
Tita. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.
Bot. Not so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.
Tita. Out of this wood do not desire to go:
Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state,
And I do love thee: therefore, go with me;
I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee;
And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,
And bring while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:
And I will purge thy mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.—
Peas-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustard-seed.

Enter four Fairies.

1 Fai. Ready. 2 Fai. And I. 3 Fai. And I.
4 Fai. Where shall we go?
Tita. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman:
Hap in his walks, and gambol in his eyes;
Feed him with apricocks, and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green fags, and mulberries.
Their honey bags steal from the humble-bees,
And for night tapeere crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes,
To have my love to bed, and to arise;
And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,
To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes.

Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

Bot. I cry you worship's mercy, heartily.—I beseech, your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire of you more acquaintance, good master Cobweb. If I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.—Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas. Peas-blossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to mistress Squash, your mother, and to master Peascod, your father.

Good master Peas-blossom, I shall desire of you more acquaintance too.—Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mus. Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house. I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water even now. I desire of you more acquaintance, good master Mustard-seed.

Tita. Come, wait upon him: lead him to my bower.
The moon, methinks, looks with a watery eye,
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.

Tie up my lover's tongue, and bring him silently.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder if Titania be awak'd;
Then, what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.—How now, mad spirit?
What night-rule 1 now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.
Near to her close and consecrated bower,
While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,
A crew of patches, rude mechanicals,
That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
Were met together to rehearse a play,
Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day.
The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake,
When I did him at this advantage take;
An ass's nose! I fixed on his head:
Anon, his Thise be must be answered,
And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,
As wild geese that the creeping Fowler eye,
Or russet-pated choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report,
Served themselves, and madly sweep the sky;
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly,
And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls:
He murder cries, and help from Athens calls.
Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong
Made senseless things begin to do them wrong,
For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch,
Some, sleeves, some, hats, from yielders all things catch
I led them on in this distracted fear,
And left sweet Pyramus translated there;
When in that moment (so it came to pass)
Titania wak'd, and straightway lov'd an ass.

Obe. This falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou yet latched 2 the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?

Puck. I took him sleeping, (that is finish'd too)
And the Athenian woman by his side,
That, when he wak'd, o' er force she must be ey'd.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Obe. Stand close: this is the same Athenian.

Puck. This is the woman; but not this the man.

[They stand apart.

Dem. O! why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.

Her. Now, I but chide; but I should use thee worse
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.
The sun was not so true unto the day,
As he to me. Would he have stol'n away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon,
This whole earth may be bor'd, and that the moon
May through the centre creep, and so displease
Her brother's noon-tide with th' Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim.

Dem. So should the murder'd look, and so should I,
Pier'd through the heart with your stern cruelty;
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her glistening sphere.

Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

Dem. I had rather give his carcasse to my bounds.
Her. Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds,
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O! once tell true, tell true, e'en for my sake;
Durst thou have lock'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with double tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Dem. You spend your passion in a mispris’d flood:
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood,
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.

Her. I pray thee, tell me, then, that he is well.
Dem. And, if I could, what should I get therefore?
Her. A privilege, never to see me more.—
All from thy hated presence part I so;
See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit.

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here, therefore, for a while I will remain.
So sorrow’s heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay. [Dies down.

Obe. What hast thou done? thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid the love-juice on some true-love’s sight:
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true-love turn’d, and not a false turn’d true.

Puck. Then fate o’er-rules; that one man holding truth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.

Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helen of Athens look thou find:
All faery-sick she is, and pale of cheer
With sighs of love, that cost the fresh blood dear.
By some illusion see you bring her here:
I’ll charm his eyes against she do appear.

Puck. I go, I go; look how I go;
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar’s bow. [Exit.

Obe. Flower of this purple die,
Hit with Cupid’s archery,
Sink in apple of his eye.

[Anointing his eyes.
When his love he doth espy,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky,—
When thou wak’st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

[Re-enter Puck.

Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand,
And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover’s fee.
Shall we their fond pageant see?

[Exit.

Lord, what fools these mortals be!

Obe. Stand aside: the noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me,
That befall preposterous.

[Tey stand apart.

Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
Sorn and derision never come in tears:
Look, when I woe I weep, and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
How can these things in me seem scorn to you,
Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O, devilish-holy fray!
These vows are Hermia’s: will you give her o’er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:
Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.

Lys. I had no judgment, when to her I swore.

Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o’er.

Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Dem. O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!

To what, my love, shall I compare thee now?
Crystal is muddy: O! how ripe in show
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure concealed white, high Taurus snow.
Fam’d with the eastern wind, turns to a crow.
When thou hold’st up thy hand, O, let me kiss
This impress of pure white, this seal of bliss!

Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me, for your errament:
If you were civil, and knew courtesy,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do.
But you must join in souls to mock me too?
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so:
To vow, and swear, and superprop my parts,
When, I am sure, you hate me with your hearts.
You both are rivals, and love Hermia,
And now both rivals. to mock Helena.
A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid’s eyes
With your derision! none of noble sort
Would so offend a virgin, and extort
A poor soul’s patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius: be not so.
For you love Hermia; this, you know, I know:
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia’s love I yield you up my part;
And yours in Helena to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath
Than you, Lysander, keep thy Hermia: I will none:
If e’er I lov’d her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn’d,
And now to Helen it is home return’d,
There to remain.

Lys. Helen, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know.
Lest to thy peril thou aby it dear.—

[Enter Hermia.

Hel. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes
The car more quick of apprehension makes:
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompense.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so?

Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?
Hel. What love could press Lysander from my side?
Lys. Lysander’s love, that would not let him hide,
Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all your fiery eyes and eyes of light.
Why seek’st thou me? could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare thee made me leave thee so?
Hel. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel. Lo! she is one of this confederacy.
Now I perceive they have conjoin’d, all three.
Now I perceive they have conjoin’d, all three.
In fashion this false sport in spite of me.
Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid!
Have you conspir’d, have you with these contriv’d
To bait me with this foul derision?
Is all the counsel that we two have shar’d,
The sisters’ vows, the hours that we have spent.
When we have chid the hasty-footed time.
For parting us,—O! is all forgot?

All school days’ friendship, p. childhood’s innocence
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower.
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion.
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition:
Two loving' berries moulded on one stem.
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
Doe but to one, and crowned with one crest.
And will you rend our ancient love asunder,
To join with men in seeming your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 't is not maidenly:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feel the injury.

_Hel._ I am amazed at your passionate words.
I seem you not: it seems that you scorn me.

_Hel._ Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face,
And make your other lover, Demetrius.
(Who even but now did spurn me with his foot,
To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection,
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon love, so fortunate,
But miserable most to love unlov'd,
This you should pity, rather than despise.

_Her._ I understand not what you mean by this.

_Hel._ Ay, do, persevere, counterfeit bad looks,
Make mouths upon me when I turn my back:
Wink at each other; hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you had any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But, fare ye well: it is partly mine own fault,
Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy.

_Lys._ Stay, gentle Helen; hear my excuse:
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helesa!
_Hel._ O excellent!

_Her._ Sweet, do not scorn her so.

_Dem._ If she cannot entreat, I can compel.

_Lys._ Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
Thy threats have no more strength than her weak prayers.——

Helen, I love thee; by my life, I do:
I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.
_Dem._ I say, I love thee more than he can do.

_Lys._ If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

_Dem._ Quick, come,—

_Her._ Lysander, whereto tends all this? [Holding him.

_Lys._ Away, you Ethiop!

_Dem._ No, no, he'll——

Seem to break loose; take on, as you would follow;
But yet come not. You are a tame man, go!

_Lys._ Hang off, thou cat, thou burr! vile thing, let loose.
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

_Her._ Why are you grown so rude? what change is this,
Sweet love?

_Lys._ Thy love? out, tawny Tartar, out!
Out, loathed medeino! hated potion, hence!

_Her._ Do you not jest?
Scene II.

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Ly's. Get you gone, you dwarf;
You minimus, of hindering knot-grass made:
You head, you acorn.

Dem. You are too officious in her behalf that scorns your services.
Let her alone; speak not of Helena;
Take not her part, for if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby it.

Ly's. Now she holds me not;
Now follow, if thou dar'st, to try whose right,
Or thine or mine, is most in Helena.

Her. Follow? nay, I'll go with thee, cheek by jowl.
[Exeunt Lys. and Dem.

Her. You, mistress, all this coil is long of you.
Nay, go not back.

Hel. I will not trust you, I,
Nor longer stay in your erst company.
Your hands, than mine, are quicker for a fray;
My legs are longer thought than Demetrius.
[Exit.

Her. I am amazed, and know not what to say.
[Exit.

Obe. This is thy negligence: still thou mistak'st.
[Coming forward.

Or else commit'st thy knaverys wilfully.*

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows. I mistook.
Did you not tell me I should know the man
By the Athenian garments he had on?
And so far blameless proves my enterprise,
That I have pointed an Athenian's eyes:
And so far am I glad it did sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou seest these lovers seek a place to fight:
He, therefore, Robin, overcast the night:
The stary welkin cover thou anon
With drooping fog, as black as Aechron:
And lead these testy rivals so astray.
As one come not within another's way,
Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius,
And from each other look them lead them thus,
Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep.
With leaden legs and batty wings, doth creep
Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property,
To take from thence all error with his might.
And make his eye-balls roll with wonted sight.
When they next wake, all this diversion
Shall seem a dream, and fruitless vision;
And back to Athens shall the lovers wend,
With league, whose date till death shall never end.
While I in this affair do thee employ,
I'll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy:
And then I will her charmed eye release
From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste,
For night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora's harbing'er:
At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,
Troop home to churchyard, and damn'd spirits all,
That in cross-ways and floods have lur'd,
Already to their wormy beds are gone;
For fear lest day should look their shames upon,
They wilfully themselves exile from light,
And must for aye consort with black-brow'd night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort.
I with the morning's love have oft made sport;
And, like a forester, the groves may tread,
Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams.
Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams.
But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay:
We may effect this business yet ere day
[Exit Oberon

Puck. Up and down, up and down:
I will lead them up and down:
I am fear'd in field and town:
Goblin, lead them up and down.

Here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Ly's. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

[thou?

Puck. Here, villain! draw and ready. Where art

Ly's. I will be with thee straight.

Puck. Follow me then

To plainer ground...

[Exit Lys. as following the voice.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander! speak again.

Thou run away, thou coward, art thou fled?

Speak! In some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars,

Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,

And wilt not come? Come, recreant: come, thou child:

I'll whip thee with a rod: he is defil'd,

That draws a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea; art thou there?

Puck. Follow my voice: we'll try no manhood here.

[Exit

Re-enter Lysander.

Ly's. He goes before me, and still dares me on:

When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
The villain is much lighter heel'd than I:
I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;
That fallen am I in dark uneven way,
And here will rest me. Come, thou gentle day!

[Enter

For if but once thou show me thy grey light,

I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite.

Ly's. Ha! ha! ha! Coward, why com'st thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st; for well I wot

Thou run'st before me, shifting every place,

And dar'st not stand, nor look me in the face.

Where art thou now?

Puck. Come hither: I am here.

Dem. Nay, then thou mock'st me. Thou shalt by this dear,

If ever I thy face by day-light see.

Now, go thy way. Fainting constraint me

To measure out my length on this cold bed.

By day's approach look to be visited.

[Enter Helena

Hel. O weary night! O, long and tedious night!

Abate thy hours: shine, comforts, from the east.

That I may back to Athens, by day-light,

From these that my poor company detest.

And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye.

Steal me a while from mine own company,

[Sleeps

Puck. Yet but three? Come one more:

Two of both kinds make up four.

Here she comes, erst and sad.

Cupid is a knavish lad,

Thus to make poor females mad.

Enter Hermia.

Her. Never so weary, never so in woe.

Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with briers.
I can no farther crawl, no farther go:
My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the break of day.
Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!

Puck. On the ground sleep sound
I'll apply to your eye,
Gentle lover, remedy.
[Anointing* Lysander's eyes.
When thou wak'st, see thou tak'st

True delight in the sight
Of thy former lady's eye:
And the country proverb known,
That every man should take his own,
In your waking shall be shown:
Jack shall have Jill;
Nought shall go ill;
The man shall have his mare again,
And all shall be well.

[Exit Puck.—Dem. Hel. &c. *e.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter Titania and Bottom: Fairies attending:
Oberon behind unseen.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,
While I thy amiable cheeks do coy,
And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head,
And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.
Bot. Where's Peas-blossom?
Peas. Ready.
Bot. Scratch my head, Peas-blossom.—Where's monsieur Cobweb?
Cob. Ready.
Bot. Monsieur Cobweb; good monsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped hum ble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good monsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and, good monsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not: I would be loath to have you overthrown with a honey-bag, signior.—
Where's monsieur Mustard-seed?
Must. Ready.
Bot. Give me your neif, monsieur Mustard-seed.
Pray you, leave your courtesy, good monsieur.
Must. What's your will?
Bot. Nothing good monsieur, but to help cavality Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, monsieur; for, methinks, I am marvellous hairy about the face, and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.
Tit. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?
Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music: let's have the tongs and the bones.
Tit. Or, say, sweet love, what thou desir'st to eat.
Bot. Truly, a peck of provender: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.
Tit. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts.
Bot. I had rather have a handful or two of dried pecs. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me:
I have an exposition of sleep come upon me.
Tit. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Fairies, be gone, and be a while* away.
So doth the woodbine, the sweet honey-suckle,
Gently entwine: the female ivy so
Earnings the barksy fingers of the clim.
O, how I love thee! how I dote on thee! [They sleep.
Enter Puck.

Obe. [Advancing.] Welcome, good Robin. Seest thou this sweet sight?
Her dotage now I do begin to pity;
For meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet savours for this hateful fool,
I did upbraid her, and fall out with her:
For she his hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers;
And that same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'rets' eyes.
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.
When I had at my pleasure taunted her,
And she in mild terms beg'd my patience,
I then did ask of her her changeling child,
Which straight she gave me; and her fairy sent
To bear him to my bower in fairy land.
And now I have the boy, I will undo
This hateful imperfection of her eyes:
And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain,
That he, awaking when the other do,
May all to Athens back again repair,
And think no more of this night's accidents,
But as the fierce vexation of a dream.
But first I will release the fairy queen.
Bot. Be as thou wanst to be; [Anointing her eyes.
See, as thou wanst to see;
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and such power.
Now, my Titania! wake you, my sweet queen.
Tit. My Oberon! what visions have I seen!
Methought, I was enamour'd of an ass.
Obe. There lies your love.
Tit. How came these things to pass?
Obe. Silence, a while.—Robin, take off this head.
Titania, music call; and strike more dead
Than common sleep of all these five the sense.
Tit. Music, ho! music! such as charmeth sleep.
Puck. Now, when thou wak'st, with thine own fool's eyes peep.
Obe. Sound, music! Come, my queen, take hands with me.
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.
Now thou and I are new in amity,
And will to-morrow midnight solemnly
Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly.
And bless it to all fair posterity.
There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.
Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark:
I do hear the morning lark.
Obe. Then, my queen, in silence sate,
Trip we after the night's shade;
We the globe can compass soon.
Swifter than the wandering moon.
Tit. Come, my lord: and in our flight,

'* Lies down: in i. e.
* Squeezing the juice on Caresse.
* Fist. A probable misprint for Peas-blossom.
* all ways: in i. e.
Tell me how it came this night,
That I sleeping here was found
With these mortals on the ground. [Exeunt.]

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester;
For now our observation is perform'd:
And since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds.—
Uneouple in the western valley: let them go!—
Despatch, I say, and find the forester.—
We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top,
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in concertation.

Hip. I was with Herecles, and Callimedes, once,
When in a wood of Crete they bade the bear
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry. I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so scented; and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
Crook-kneed, and dew-lap'd like Thessalian bulls;
Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tuneful
Was never hallowed to, nor cheerr'd with horn,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly;
Judge, when you hear.—But, soft! what nymphs are these?

Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
And this, Lysander; this Demetrius is;
This Helena, fled Nedar's Helena:
I wonder where their being here together.

The. No doubt, they rose up early, to observe
The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.—
But speak, Egeus: is not this the day
That Hermione should give answer of her choice?

Ege. It is, my lord.

The. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.

[Horns, and shouts within. Demetrius, Lysander, Hermia, and Helena, wake and start up.

The. Good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?

Lys. Pardon, my lord. [He and the rest kneel.

The. I pray you all, stand up.
I know, you two are rival enemies;
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?

Lys. My lord, I shall reply amaz'd,
Half sleep, half waking: but as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here;
But, as I think, (for truly would I speak,—
And now I do bespeak me, so it is)—
I came with Hermione hither: our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.

Ege. Enough, enough! my lord, you have enough.
I beg the law, the law, upon his head.
They would have stoll a way; they would, Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated you and me;
You, of your wife, and me, of my consent,
Of my consent that she should be your wife.

Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,
Their purpose hither, to this wood;

And I in fury follow'd them,
Fair Helena in fancy following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power
(But by some power it is,) my love to Hermia,
Melted as the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idol gawd,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon;
And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,
The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia:
But, like in sickness, do I loath this food,
But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will far evermore be true to it.

The. The fair loves, you are fortunately met.
Of this discourse we more will hear anon.—
Egeus, I will overbear your will,
For in the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And, for the morning now is something worn,
Our purpose'd hunting shall be set aside.
Away, with us, to Athens: three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.—
Come, Hippolyta.

[Exeunt Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.

Dem. These things seem small, and undistinguishable
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.

Her. Methinks, I see these things with parted eye
When every thing seems double.

Hel. So methinks:
And I have found Demetrius, like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem. Are you sure
That we are awake? It seems to me
That yet we sleep, we dream.—Do not you think
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?

Her. Yea; and my father.

Hel. And Hippolyta.

Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why then, we are awake. Let's follow him,
And by the way let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt.

Bot. [Waking.] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer:—my next is, "Most fair Pyramus."

—Hey, ho!—Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's my life! stolen hence, and left me asleep. I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream,—past the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was, and methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom, and I will sing it in the latter end of the play, before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at Thisby's death.

[Exit.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? Is he come home yet?

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.

—the fore part.  9 Fleshe'd, the large chaps of a hound; sanded, their hunes.  1 Party-coloured fool.  * a: in 'e.  * her: in f.
SCENE I.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Hip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

The. More strange than true: I never may believe
These antic fables, nor these fairy toys.
Lovers, and madmen, have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends.
The lumin, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic.

Phil. Such Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt:
The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Dost glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;
And imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation, and a name.
Such tricks hath strong imagination,
That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehends some bringer of that joy;
Or in the night, imagining some fear.
How easy is a bush supposed a bear?

Hip. But all the story of the night told over,
And all their minds transfigur'd so together,
More witness than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, howsoever, strange, and admirable.

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter Lyndander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.
Joy, gentle friends! joy, and fresh days of love,
Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us
Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed! I have,

The. Come now; what masks, what dances shall we Tea wound away this long age of three hours,
Between our after-supper, and bed-time?
Where is our usual manager of mirth?

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these lads? where are these hearts?
Quin. Bottom!—O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders: but ask me not what, for, if I tell you, I am no true Athenian.
I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out.
Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you is That the duke hath dined. Get your apparel together;
Good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your Pumps: meet presently at the palace: every man look
After his part; for, the short and the long is, our play
Is preferred. In any case let Thisby have clean linen,
And let not him that plays the lion pare his nails, for They shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions, nor garlic, for we are in Utter sweet breath, and I do not doubt but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words.
Away! go; away!

[Exit.]

ACT V.

What revels are in hand? Is there no play,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?
Call Philostrate.

Phil. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?
What mask? what music? How shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Phil. There is a brief how many sports are ripe;
Make choice of which your highness will see first.

The. [Reads.] "The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung
By an Athenian eunuch to the harp."
We'll none of that: that have I told my love,
In glory of my kinsman Theseus.

"The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals, Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage."
That is an old device; and it was play'd
When I from Thebes came last a conqueror.

"The three Muses mourning for the death Of learning, late deceased in baggery."
That is some satire, keen, and critical,
Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

"A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus,
And his love Thisbe; very tragical mirth."
Merry and tragical! Tedium and brief!
That is, hot ice, and wondrous seething' snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Phil. A play this is, my lord, some ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious; for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted:
And tragical, my noble lord, it is.

For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which, when I saw reheard, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they, that do play it?

Phil. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here
Which never labour'd in their minds till now;
And now have tol'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same play, against your nuptial

[Strange: in the folio. This is the reading of the quartos. In the folio, Lyndander reads the "brief," and Theseus comments.]

The. And we will hear it.

Philos. No, my noble lord: It is not for you: I have heard it over, and it is nothing, nothing in the world. Unless you can find sport in their intents, extremely stretched, and contr’d with cruel pain, to do you service.

The. I will hear that play: For never any thing can be amiss, when simplicity and duty tender it. Go, bring them in; and take your places, ladies. [Exit Philostrate]

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o’ercharg’d, and duty in his service perish’d.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He says they can do nothing in this kind.

The. The kinder we do, the more you thank for nothing. Our sport shall be to take what they mistake: And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect takes it in might, not merit. Where I have come, great clerks have purposes To meet me with premeditated welcomes: Where I have seen them shiver and look pale, make periods in the midst of sentences, Throttle their practis’d accent in their fears, And, in conclusion, dully have broke off. Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet, out of this silence, yet, I pick’d a welcome; and in the modesty of fearful duty I read as much, as from the rattling tongue Of saucy and audacious eloquence. Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity, I least speak most, to my capacity.

Enter Philostrate.

Philos. So please your grace, the prologue is addresses. The. Let him approach. [Flourish of trumpets.]

Enter the PROLOGUE.

Proc. If we offend, it is with our good will. That you should think, we come not to offend, but with good-will. To show our simple skill, that is the true beginning of our end. Consider, then, we come but in despite. We do not come as minding to content you, our true intent is. All for your delight, We are not here. That you should here repent you, the actors are at hand: and, by their show, You shall know all, that you are like to know.

The. This fellow doth not stand upon his points.

Lys. He Hath hid his prologue like a rough colt; he knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: it is not enough to speak, but to speak true.

Hip. Indeed, he hath played on this prologue, like a child on a recorder: a sound, but not in government.

The. His speech was like a tangled chain, nothing impair’d, but all disorders.

Who is next?

Enter the PRESENTER, Pyramus, and Thisbe, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion. As in dumb show.

Pres. Gentles, perchance, you wonder at this show: But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.

This man is Pyramus, if you would know: This beauteous lady Thisby is certain.

This man, with time and rough-cast, doth present Wall, that vile wall which did these lovers sunder; And through wall’s chink, poor souls, they are content To whisper, at the wheel which let no man wonder. This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn. Presenteth moonshine; for, if you will know, By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn

To meet at Ninus’ tomb, there, there to woo. This grisly beast, which lion hight by name, the trusty Thisby, coming first by night, Did scare away, or rather did affright: And, as she fled, her mantle she did pull, Which lion vile with bloody mouth did stain. Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall, And finds his gentle Thisby’s mantle slain; Whereat, with blade, with bloody blamful blade, He bravely broach’d his boiling bloody breast And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade, His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest, Let lion, moonshine, wall, and lovers swain, At large discourse, while here they do remain.”

[Exeunt Pres., Thesib, Lion, and Moonshine.]

The. I wonder, if the lion be to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord: One lion may, when many asse do.

Wall. In this same interlude, it doth befall, That I, one Snout by name, present a wall; And such a wall, as I would have you think, That had in it a cranny, hole, or chink, Through which the lovers Pyramus and Thisby, Did whisper often very secretly.

This time, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth show That I am that same wall: the truth is so: And this the cranny is, right and sinister, Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.

The. Would you desire line and hair to speak better? Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. O, grim-look’d night! O, night with hue so black!

O night, which ever art, when day is not!

O night! O night! alack, alack, alack!

I fear my Thisby’s promise is forgot.—

And thou. O wall! O sweet, O lovely wall!

That stand between her father’s ground and mine;

Thou wall, O wall! O sweet, and lovely wall!

Show me thy chink to blink through with mine eye.

[Wall holds up his fingers.]

Thanks, courteous wall! Jove shielde thee well for this!

But what see I? No Thisby do I see.

O wicked wall! through whom I see no bliss:

Curs me thy stones for thus deceiving me!”

The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not,—"Deceiving me,” is Thisby’s cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall out as I told you,—Yonder she comes.

Enter Thisbe.

This. O wall, full often hast thou heard my moan;

For parting my fair Pyramus and me;

My cherry lips have often kiss’d thy stones;

Thy stones with line and hair knit up in thee.”

Pyr. I see a voice: now will I to the chink.

To spy an I can hear my Thisby’s face.

Thisby!"

This. My love! thou art my love, I think.”

Pyr. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover’s grace

And like Limander an. ‘tis true still.”

This. And I like Helen, till the fates me kill.”

Pyr. Not Shafalus to Procrus was so true.”

This. As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you.”

Pyr. O! kiss me through the hole of this vile wall,”

This. I kiss the wall’s hole, not your lips at all.

*Ready. *Flagonet. *Not in the prologue. *This speech is given in the prologue.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT’S DREAM.

Pyr. "Will thou at Ninny’s tomb meet me straightway?"
This. "Tide life, tide death, I come without delay."
Wall. "Thus have I, wall, my part discharged so; And, being done, thus wall away doth go."

[Exeunt Wall, Pyramus, and Thisbe.]
The. Now is the wall down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so willful to hear without warning.

Hip. This is the silliest stuff that e’er I heard.

The. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Hip. It must be your imagination, then, and not theirs.

The. If we imagine no worse of them, than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. "You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear" The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on floor, May now, perchance, both quake and tremble here.

When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.

Then know, that I, one Snug the joiner, am A lion’s pelt; nor else no lion’s dam:

For, if I should as lion come in strife into this place, ’t were pity on your life.

The. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that e’er I saw.

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour.

The. True, and a goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion, and the fox carries the goose.

The. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour, for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present?"

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.

The. He is not crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present; Myself the man i’ the moon do seem to be."

The. This is the greatest error of all the rest. The man should be put into the lantern: how is it else the man i the moon?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle: for, you see, it is already in snuff.

Hip. I am aweary of this moon: would, he would change!
The. It appears by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, moon.

Moon. All that I have to say, is, to tell you, that the lantern is the moon; I, the man in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lantern; for all these are in the moon. But, silence! here comes Thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

This. "This is old Ninny’s tomb. Where is my love?"

Lion. "Oh—!" [The Lion roars.—Thisbe runs off.

Dem. Well roared, lion.

The. Well run, Thisbe.

Hip. Well shone, moon.—Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

[The Lion tears Thisbe’s mantle.

[and exit.]
The. Well mouthed, lion.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams; I thank thee, moon, for shining so bright, For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams, I trust to take of truest Thisby sight. But stay; —O spite! [Seeing Thisbe’s mantle But mark, poor knight, What dreadful dote is here! Eyes, do you see? How can it be? O dainty duck! O dear! Thy mantle good, What! stain’d with blood? Approach, ye furies fell! O fates! come, come; Cut thread and thrum; Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!"

The. This passion on! the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyr. "O, wherefore, nature, dist thou lions frame, Since lion vile hath here defour’d my dear? Which is — no, no — which was the fairest dame, That liv’d, that lov’d, that lik’d, that look’d with cheer. Come, tears, confound: Out, sword, and wound

The pap of Pyramus:

Where heart doth hop:

Thus die I, thus, thus, thus! [Stabs himself

Now am I dead, [as oft]

Now am I fled;

My soul is in the sky:

Tongue, lose thy light!

Moon, take thy flight! [Exit Moonshine.

Now die, die, die, die, die, [Dies.

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.

Lys. Less than an ace, man, for he is dead; he is nothing.

The. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and yet prove an ass.

Hip. How chance moonshine is gone, before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover? She. She will find him by starlight.—Here she comes, and her passion ends the play.

Enter Thisbe.

Hip. Methinks, she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better: he for a man, God warrant us: she for a woman, God bless us.

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she means, videlicet——

This. "Asleep, my love?"

What, dead, my dove?

O Pyramus! arise:

Speak, speak! Quite dumb?

Dead, dead? A tomb

Must cover thy sweet eyes.

This lily lip,

This cherry tip,

These yellow cowslip cheeks,

Are gone, are gone.

1 And this line is: "Well mouthed, lion.
2 And this line is: "And so the lion vanished.
3 And this line is: "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;" I thank thee, moon, for shining so bright, For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams, I trust to take of truest Thisby sight. This lily lip,

This cherry tip,

These yellow cowslip cheeks,

Are gone, are gone.
Lovers, make morn:
His eyes were green as looks.
O! sisters three,
Came, come to me,
With hands as pale as milk;
Lay them in gore,
Since you have shore
With shears his thread of silk.
Tongue, not a word:
Come, trusty sword;
Come, blade, my breast imbrue:
And farewell, friends.—
Thus Thisby ends:

Adieu, adieu, adieu!" [Dies.

The. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and wall too.

Bot. No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company?

The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse, for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it, had play'd Pyramus, and hanged himself in Thisbe's garret, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly, and very notably discharged. But come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone.

[A dance.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve.—
Lovers, to bed: 'tis almost fairy time.
I fear we shall oversleep the coming morn.
As much as we this night have overwatch'd.
This palpable gross play hath well beguil'd
The heavy gait of night.—Sweet friends, to bed.—
A fortnight hold we this solemnity,
In nightly revels, and new jollity.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Enter Puck, with a broom on his shoulder.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf beholds the moon;
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task forborne.
Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch, that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a shroud.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his sprite,
In the church-way paths to glide:
And we fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic; not a mouse

Shall disturb this hallow'd house:
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter Oberon and Titania, with all their train.

Obe. Through the house give glimmering light,
By the dead dust fiery fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from brier;
And this ditty after me
Sing, and dance trippingly.

Tit. First, rehearse your song by rote.
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand with fairy grace
Will we sing, and bless this place.

THE SONG.

Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray.
To the best bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the blots of nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand:
Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity.

Shall upon their children be,
With this field-dew consecrate.
Every fairy take his gait,
And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace with sweet peace;
Ever shall it rest,
And the owner of it blest.
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train.

Puck. If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but slumber'd here,
While these visions did appear;
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend.
And, as I am an honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long,
Else the Puck a liar call:
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends. [Exit

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter ANTONIO, SALARINO, and SALARIO.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad.

Shal wearies me: you say, it wearies me:

But how I catch it, found it, or came by it,

What stufit is made of, whereof it is born,

I am to learn;

And such a want-wit sadness makes of me,

That I have much ado to know myself.

Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean,

There, where your argosies' with portly sail,

Like signiors and rich buccaneers on the flood,

Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea,

Do overpeer the petty traffickers,

That curtsey to them, do them reverence,

As they fly by them with their woven wings.

SALAN. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth,

The better part of my affections would

Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still

Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind,

Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads;

And every object that might make me fear

Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt,

Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind, cooling my broth,

Would blow me to an ague, when I thought

What harm a wind too great might do at sea.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,

But I should think of shallows and of flats,

And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,

Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,

To kiss her burial. Should I go to church,

And see the holy edifice of stone.

And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks,

Which touching but my gentle vessel's side,

Would scatter all her spices on the stream,

\[^1 \text{Vessels of about two hundred tens.}\]

Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks,

And, in a word, but even now worth this,

And now worth nothing? Shall I have the thought

To think on this, and shall I lack the thought,

That such a thing bechan'd would make me sad?

But, tell not me: I know, Antonio

Is sad to think upon his merchandise.

Ant. Believe me, no. I thank my fortune for it,

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,

Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate

Upon the fortune of this present year:

Therefore, my merchandise makes me not sad.

SALAN. Why, then you are in love.

Ant. Fie, fie!

SALAN. Not in love neither? Then let's say, you are sad,

Because you are not merry: and 't were as easy

For you to laugh, and leap, and say, you are merry.

Because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Janus

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:

Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,

And laugh, like parrots, at a bag-piper;

And other of such vinegar aspect.

That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile.

Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.
SCENE II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?

Sal. We'll make our pleasures to attend on yours.

[Exit Salario and Salanio.

Lor. My lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio,
We two will leave you; but at dinner-time
I pray you have in mind where we must meet.

Bass. I will not fail you.

Gra. You look not well, signor Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world:
They lose it, that do it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd.

Ant. I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano:
A stage, where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.

Gra. Let me play the fool:
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come,
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire out in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio,—
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks;—
There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond,
And do a willful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit;—
As who should say, "I am sir Oracle.
And, when I ope my lips, let no dog bark?"
O! my Antonio, I do know of these,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; when I am very sure,
If they should speak, 'twould almost damn those ears,
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers fools.
I'll tell thee more of this another time:
But fish not, with this melancholy bait,
For this fool-guzzle, this opinion.—
Come, good Lorenzo.—Fare ye well, awhile:
I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you, then, till dinner-time.
I must be one of those same dumb wise men,
For Gratiano never lets me speak.

Gra. Well, keep me company but two years more,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.

Ant. Farewell: I'll grow a talker for this gear.5

Gra. Thanks, if faith; for silence is only commendable
In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

[Exit Gratiano and Lorenzo.

Ant. It is that:—anything new;—

Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. His reasons are his two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them, they are not worth the search.

Ant. Well; tell me now, what lady is the same
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promised to tell me of?

Bass. 'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio,
How much I have disabled mine estate,
By something showing a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance:
Nor do I now make mean to be abridged
From such a noble rate; but my chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. To you, Antonio,
I owe the most, in money; and in love;

And from your love I have a warranty
To unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it
And if it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour, be assured.
My purse, my person, my extremest means.
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.

Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way with more advised watch.
To find the other forth; and by adventuring both,
I oft found both. I urge this childhood proof.
Because what follows is pure innocence.
I owe you much, and, like a wasteful youth,
That which I owe is lost; but if you please.
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt.
As I will watch the aim, or to find both,
Or bring your latter hazard back again,
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time,
To wind about my love with circumstance;
And, out of doubt, you do me now more wrong,
In making question of my uttermost.

Antonio, I have made waste of all I have:
Then, do but say to me what I should do.
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest' unto it: therefore, speak.

Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, and, fairer than that word.
Of wondrous virtues: sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages.
Her name is Portia; nothing undervalued
To Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia.
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors; and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Which makes her seat of Belmont Colsos' strand,
And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O, my Antonio! had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thrift,
That I should questionless be fortunate.

Ant. Thou know'st, that all my fortunes are at sea
Neither have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present sum: therefore, go forth;
Try what my credit can in Venice do;
That shall be rack'd, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
Where money is, and I no question make,
To have it of my trust, or for my sake.

[Exit Bass.

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is a-warey of this great world.

Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are.
And yet, for aught I see, they are as sick with too much, as they that starve with nothing: it is no mean happiness, therefore, to be seated in the mean:
superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences, and well pronounced.
Ner. They would be better, if well followed.
Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood; but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree: such a hare is madness, the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel, the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband.
—O me! the word choose! I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will of a dead father.
—Is not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?
Ner. Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations: therefore, the lottery, that he hath devised in these three caskets of gold, silver, and lead (whereof who chooses his meaning, chooses you) will, no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly, but one whom you shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?
Por. I pray thee, over-thine them, and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection.
Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.
Por. Ay, that's a colt, indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great approbation of his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself. I am much afraid, my lady his mother played false with a smith.
Ner. Then, is there the county Palatine.
Por. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say, "An you will not have me, choose!" He hears merry tales, and smiles not: I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unnamable sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death's head with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. God defend me from these two! Ner. How say you by the French lord, monsieur le Bon?
Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker; but, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's: a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine: he is every man in no man; if a throttle sing, he falls straight a capping: he will fence with his own shadow. If I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him; for if he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.
Ner. What say you, then, to Faulconbridge, the young baron of England?
Por. You know, I say nothing to him, for he understands me not, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor penny-worth in the English. He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show? How oddly he is suited! I think, he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour every where.
Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?
Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was able. I think, the Frenchman became his surety; and sealed under for another.
Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony's nephew?
Por. Very wildly in the morning, when he is sober and most wildly in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast. And the worst fall that ever fell, I hope, I shall make shift to go without him.
Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.
Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket: for, if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do anything, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.
Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords: they have acquainted me with their determinations; which is indeed, to return to their homes, and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets.
Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylla, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will. I am glad this parcel of woeers are so reasonable; for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.
Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your father's time, a Venetian, a scholar, and a soldier, that came thither in company of the marquis of Montferrat?
Por. Yes, yes; it was Bassanio: as I think, so was he called.
Ner. True, madam: he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.
Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise. — How now? what news?

Enter a Servant.
Serv. The four strangers seek for you. madam, to take their leave: and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco, who brings word, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.
Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good heart, as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrieve me than wive me. Come, Nerissa—Sirrah, go before. — Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the door.

Scene III. — Venice. A public Place.

Enter Bassanio and Shylock.

Shy. Three thousand ducats. — well.
Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.
Shy. For three months. — well.
Bass. For which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.
Shy. Antonio shall become bound, — well.
Bass. May you steel me? Will you please me? Shall I know your answer?
Shy. Three thousand ducats for three months, and Antonio bound.
Bass. Your answer to that.
Shy. Antonio is a good man.

1 reason: in f. e. The quarto, as in the text. 2 The rest of the sentence is from the quarto. 3 Knight and Dyce print those three words as the first, and the rest of the speech as the last line of a couplet.
Scene III. The Merchant of Venice.

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

Shy. Ho! no, no, no, no.—my meaning, in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand me, that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. He hath an argosy bound to Tripoli, another to the Indies: I understand moreover, upon the last, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath squander'd abroad; but ships are but boards, sailors but men: there be land-rats, and water-rats, land-thieves, and water-thieves! I mean, pirates: and then, there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient: three thousand ducats.—I think, I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Shy. I will be assured; I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethink me. May I speak with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with us.

Shy. Yes, to smell pork; to eat of the habituation which your prophet, the Nazarite, conjured the devil into. I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following: but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto?—Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is signior Antonio.

Shy. [Aside.] How like a fawning publican he looks! I hate him for he is a Christian; But more, for that, in low simplicity, He lends out money gratis, and brings down The rate of usance here with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation; and he rails, Even there where merchants most do congregate, On me, my bags, and my well-won thrift, Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe, If I forgive him!

Bass. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store, And, by the near guess of my memory, I cannot instantly raise up the gross Of full three thousand ducats. What of that? Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe, Will furnish me. But soft! how many months Do you desire?—Rest you fair, good signior!

Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylock, albeit I neither lend nor borrow, By taking, nor by giving of excess, Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend, I'll break a custom. Are you yet possess'd, How much he would?

Shy. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot.—three months; you told me so. Well then, your bond; and let me see—But hear you: Methought, you said, you neither lend nor borrow Upon advantage.

Ant. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep, This Jacob from our holy Abraham was As his wise mother wrought in his behalf,) The third possessor; ay, he was the third. Ant. And what of him? did he take interest? Shy. No, not take interest; not, as you would say, Directly interest; mark what Jacob did. When Laban and himself were compromis'd, That all the eanalings which were strack'd, and pied, Should fall as Jacob's hire, the ewes, being rank, In end of autumn turned to the rams; And when the work of generation was Between these woolly breeders in the act, The skilful shepherd peed'd me certain wands And, in the doing of the deed of kind, He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes, Who, then conceiving, did in eating time Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. This was a way to thrive, and he was blest; And thrust is blessing, if men steal it not.

Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob serv'd for. A thing not in his power to bring to pass, But sway'd, and fashion'd by the hand of heaven, Was this inferred? to make interest good? Or is your gold and silver, ewes and rams?

Shy. I cannot tell: I make it breed as fast.— But note me, signior.

Ant. Mark you this, Bassanio. The devil can cite scripture for his purpose. An evil soul, producing holy witness, Is like a villain with a smiling cheek, A goodly apple rotten at the heart, O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

Shy. Th'o' three thousand ducats:—tis a good round sum.

Three months from twelve, then let me see the rate.

Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be beholding to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft, On the Rialto, you have rated me About my monies and my usances: Still have I borne it with a patient shrug; For suffrance is a badge of all our tribe. You call'd me—misbeliever, cut-throat dog, And spit upon my Jewish gaberline, And all for use of that which is mine own. Well then, it now appears, you need my help: Go to, then; you come to me, and you say, "Shylock, we would have monies!" you say so; You, that did vow your rheum upon my beard, And foot me as you spurn a stranger cur Over your threshold: monies is your suit. What should I say to you? Should I not say, "Hath a dog money?" Is it possible, A cur can lend three thousand ducats? or Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key, With 'bated breath, and whispering humbleness, Say this:— "Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last; You spurn'd me such a day; another time You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies I'll lend you thus much monies!"

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again, To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too. If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not As to thy friend; for when did friendship take A breed for barren metal of his friend? But lend it rather to thine enemy; Who if he break, thou mayst' with better face Exact the penalty.

Shy. Why, look you, how you storm! I would be friends with you, and have your love, Forget the shames that you have staid'm me with, Supply your present wants, and take no doit Of usance for my monies, And you'll not hear me. This is kind I offer.

Ant. This were kindnes.

Shy. This kindness will I show

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond, and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Ant. Content, in faith: I'll seal to such a bond,
And say there is much kindness in thee, Jew.

Bass. You shall not seal to such a bond for me:
I'll rather dwell in my necessity.

Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it:
Within these two months, that's a month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shy. O, father Abraham! what these Christians are,
Whose own hard dealings teaches them suspect
The thoughts of others!—Pray you, tell me this;
If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the exactation of the forfeiture?
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beeces, or goats, I say,
To buy his favour I extend this friendship:
If he will take it, so; if not, a deed;
And, for my love, I pray you, wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond
Shy. Then meet me forthwith at the notary's
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will go and perse the ducate straight;
See to my house, left in the fearful guard
Of an unthriftine knave, and presently
I will be with you. [Exit

Ant.
The Hebrew will turn Christian; he grows kind.

Bass. I like no fair terms, and a villain's mind.

Ant. Come on: in this there can be no dismay,
My ships come home a month before the day. [Exeunt

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter the Prince of Morocco, and his followers; Portia, Nerissa, and other of her train. Flourish Cornets.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd liveriff of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Pharaoh's fire scarce thaws the icicles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his, or mine.
I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath fear'd the valiant: by my love, I swear.
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. I would not change this hue,
Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden's eyes:
Besides, the lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing;
But, if my father had not scanted me,
And hedg'd me by his wit, to yield myself
His wife who wins me by that means I told you,
Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair,
As any corse I have look'd on yet,
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you:
Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets,
To try my fortune. By this scimitar,—
That slew the Sophy, and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Soloyman,—I
Would out-stare the sternest eyes that look.
Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. But, alas the while!
If Hereclés and Lichas play at dice,
Which is the better man? the greater blow
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Aileides beaten by his page;—
And so may I, blind fortune leading me.
Miss that which one unworthy may attain,
And die with grieving.

Por. You must take your chance,
And either not attempt to choose at all,
Or swear before you choose, if you choose wrong,
Never to speak to lady afterward,
In way of marriage: therefore, be advis'd.

Mor. Nay will not. Come, bring me unto my chances.

Por. First, forward to the temple: after dinner
Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then. [Cornets

To make me blee, or cursed'st among men! [Exeunt

SCENE II.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Launcelot Gobbo.

Laun. Certainly, my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew, my master. The fiend is at mine elbow, and tempts me, saying to me, "Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot, or good Gobbo, or good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away." My conscience says,—"No; take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo; or, as aforesaid, "honest Launcelot Gobbo; do not run; seem running with thy heels." Well, the most contagious fiend bids me pack: "Via!" says the fiend; "away!" says the fiend; "fore the heavens, rouse up a brave mind," says the fiend, "and run." Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says wisely to me,—"My honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man's son,—or rather an honest woman's son;—for, indeed, my father did some snares, something grow to, he had a kind of taste;—well, my conscience says, "Launcelot, budge not." "Budge," says the fiend; "budge not," says my conscience. Conscience, say I, you counsel well; fiend, say I, you counsel well; to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who (God bless the mark!) is a kind of devil: and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saving your reverence, is the devil himself. Certainly, the Jew is the very devil incarnation; and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly counsel: I will run; fiend; my heels are at your commandment; I will run. [Going out in haste.

1 burnish'd: in f. e. 2 One of the quartos, and the folio reads: "de-stare." 3 old ed.: rage. Most have, however, adapted the change; also suggested by Theobald 4 courageous: in f. e. 5 This direction not in f. e.
Enter Old Gobbo, with a Basket.

Gob. Master, young man; you: I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. [Aside.] O heavens! this is my true begotten father, who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel-blind, knows me not:—I will try confusions' with him.

Gob. Master, young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. Turn up on your right hand at the next turning; but at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indifferently to the Jew's house.

Gob. By God's stripes, it will be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him, or no?

Laun. Talk you of young master Launcelot?—[Aside.]

Mark me now: now will I raise the waters. [To him.] Talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son; his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man; and, God be thanked, well to live.

Laun. Well, let his father be what a will, we talk of young master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship's friend, and Launcelot, sir.

Laun. But I pray you, ergo, old man, ergo, I beseech you, talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, an't please your mastership.

Laun. Ergo, master Launcelot. Talk not of master Launcelot, father: for the young gentleman (according to fates and destinies, and such odd sayings, the sisters three, and such branches of learning), is, indeed, deceased; or, as you would say, in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry, God forbid! the boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

Laun. [Aside.] Do I look like a cudge, or a hovel-post, a staff, or a prop?—[To him.] Do you know me, father?

Gob. Alack the day: I know you not, young gentleman. But, I pray you, tell me, is my boy, (God rest his soul!) alive, or dead?

Laun. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind: I know you not.

Laun. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing me: it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son. [Kneels.] Give me your blessing: truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long, a man's son may, but in the end truth will out.

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up. I am sure you are not Launcelot, my boy.

Laun. Pray, let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think you are my son.

Laun. I know not what I shall think of that; but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and, I am sure, Margery, your wife, is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery, indeed: I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine only flesh and blood. Lord! worshipp'd might he be! what a beard hast thou got: thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my filly-horse has on his tail.

Laun. [Rising.] It should seem, then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward: I am sure he had more hair of his tail, than I have of my face, when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord! how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a prospect

How agree you now?

Laun. Well, well; but, for mine own part, as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest till I have run some ground. My master's a very Jew: give him a present; give him a halter: I am famish'd in his service: you may tell every finger I have with my ribs.

Gob. Father, I am glad you are come: give me your present to one master Bassano, who, indeed, gives rare new livres. If I serve not him, I will run as far as God has any ground.—O rare fortune! here comes the man;—to him, father; for I am a Jew, if I serve the Jew any longer.

Enter Bassano, with Leonardo, and Followers.

Bass. You may do so;—but let it be so hasten, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. See these letters delivered; put the livres to making, and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exit Laun. To him, father. [A Servant.

Gob. God bless your worship!

Bass. Gramercy. Wouldst thou aught with me!

Gob. Here's my son, sir, a poor boy,——

Laun. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man, that would, sir,—as my father shall specify.

Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve——

Laun. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and have a desire,—as my father shall specify.

Bass. His master and he (saving your worship's reverence), are scarce enter-courting.

Laun. To be brief, the very truth is, that the Jew having done me wrong, doth cause me,—as my father, being, I hope, an old man, shall fructify unto you.

Gob. I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship; and my suit is,——

Laun. In very brief, the suit is impertinent to myself, as your lordship shall know by this, honest old man; and, though I say it, though old man, yet, poor man, my father.

Bass. One speak for both.—What would you?

Laun. Serve you, sir.

Bass. God that is the very defect of the matter, sir.

Bass. I know thee well: thou hast obtained thy suit. Shylock, thy master, spoke with me this day, and hath prefer'd thee; if it be preferment, To leave a rich Jew's service, to become The follower of so poor a gentleman.

Laun. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir; you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speakest it well.—Go, father, with thy take leave of thy old master, and inquire My lodging out.—Give him a lively [To his followers. More guarded than his fellows' sake: see it done.

Laun. Father, in.—I cannot get a service.—no; I have ne'er a tongue in my head.—Well; [Looking on his palm.] if any man in Italy have a fairer table, which doth offer to swear upon a book,—I shall have good fortune.—Go to; here's a simple line of life! here's a small trifle of wives: alas! fifteen wives is nothing: eleven widows, and nine maids, is a simple coming in for one man; and then, to scape drowning thrice, and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed: here are simple 'scapes! Well, if fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this gear.—Father, come; I'll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling of an eye. [Exit Launcelot and Old Gobbo.

Bass. I pray thee, good Leonardo, think on this.

4 One of the quartos reads: "conclusions."
5 Saxena.
6 f. e.; still, same as thill, or shaft-horse.
7 Not in f. e.
8 A common Italian present Some argue from this and other similar references, that Shakespeare visited Italy.
9 Laced, or ornamented.
Disguise us at my lodging, and return
All in an hour.
Gra. We have not made good preparation.
Salar. We have not spoken as yet of torch-bearers.
Salan. 'Tis vile, unless it may be quaintly order'd,
And better, in my mind, not undertook.
Lor. 'Tis now but four o'clock: we have two hours
To furnish us.—

Enter Launcelot, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

Lawn. An it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify.

[Exeunt.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith, 'tis a fair hand;
And whiter than the paper it writ on
Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love-news, in faith.

Lawn. By your leave, sir.
Lor. Whither goest thou?
Lawn. Marry, sir, to bid my old master, the Jew, to sup to-night with my new master, the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this.—Tell gentle Jessica,
I will not fail her:—speak it privately;
Go.—Gentlemen, [Exit Launcelot.

Will you prepare you for this masque to-night?
I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Salar. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Salan. And so will I.
Lor. Meet me, and Gratiano,
At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Salar. 'Tis good we do so. [Exit Salar. and Salan.
Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all. She hath directed,
How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with;
What page's suit she hath in readiness.
If o'er the Jew her father come to heaven,
It will be for his gentle daughter's sake;
And never dare misfortune cross her foot,
Unless she do it under this excuse,
That she is issue to a faithless Jew.
Come, go with me: perseve this, as thou goest.

Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before Shylock's House.
Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge,
The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio.—
What, Jessica!—Thou shalt not garmandize,
As thou hast done with me!—What, Jessica?—
And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out
—Why, Jessica, I say!

Lawn. Your worship was wont to tell me, that I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you? What is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica.

There are my keys.—But wherefore should I go?
I am not bid for love: they flatter me:
But yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon
The prodigal Christian.—Jessica, my girl,
Look to my house:—I am right leath to go,
There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,
For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Lawn. I beseech you, sir, go: my young master doth expect your reproach.

Shy. So do I his.

Lawn. And they have conspired together:—I will not say, you shall see a masque; but if you do, then SCENE VII.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

It was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on black Monday last, at six o'clock the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon.

[Jessica:

Shy. What! are there masques? — Hear you me,
Lock up your doors; and when you hear the drum,
And the vile squealing of the wry-neck'd fife,
Clamber not up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the public street
To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces,
But stop your house's ears, I mean my casements;
Let not the sound of shallow lippery enter
My sober house. — By Jacob's staff, I swear,
I have no mind of feasting forth to-night;
But I will go. — Go you before me, sirrah;
Say, I will come.

Laun. I will go before, sir. — Mistress, look out at window, for all this;

There will come a Christian by,
Will he worth a Jewess' eye. [Exit Laun.

Shy. What says that soul of Hagar's offspring? ha!

Jes. His words were, farewell, mistress; nothing else.

Shy. The patch is kind enough; but a huge heed,
Snail-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day
More than the wight that droves hive not with me;
Therefore part with him, and part with him
To one that I would have him help to waste
His borrow'd purse. — Well, Jessica, go in:
Perhaps I will return immediately.
Do, as I bid you; shut doors after you:
Safe bind, safe find,
A proverb never stale in thrifty mind. [Exit.

Jes. Farewell: and if my fortune be not crost,
I have a father, you a daughter, lost. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Enter Gratiano and Salario, masked.

Gra. This is the pent-house, under which Lorenzo
Desir'd us to make stand.

Salar. His hour is almost past.

Gra. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour,
For lovers ever run before the clock.

Salar. O! ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly
To seal love's bonds new-made, than they are wont
To keep obliged faith unforfeited!

Gra. This never holds, who riseth from a feast,
With that keen appetite that he sits down?
Where is the horse that doth untread again
His tedious measures, with the unabated fire
That he did pace them first? All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd.
How like a yonder, or a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embrac'd by the strumpet wind!
How like a prodigal doth she return,
With over-weather'd ribs, and ragged sails,
'Jean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!

Enter Lorenzo.

Salar. Here comes Lorenzo: — more of this hereafter.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
Not I, but my affairs have made you wait:
When you shall please to play the thieves for wives,
I'll watch as long for you then. — Approach;
Here dwells my father Jew. — Ho! who's within?

Jes. Who are you? I' ll tell me for more certainty,
Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love.

Jes. Lorenzo, certain; and thy love, indeed.

For whom love I so much? And now who knows,
But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours?

Lor. Heaven, and thy thoughts are witness that

Jes. Here, catch this casket: it is worth the pains.
I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me,
For I am much asham'd of my exchange;
But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch bearer.

Jes. What! must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscure'd.

Lor. So are you, sweet,
Even in the garnish of a lovely boy.
But come at once;
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are stay'd for at Bassanio's feast.

Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight.

[Exit from above.

Gra. Now, by my hood, a Gentile, and no Jew.

Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge of her,
And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true she is, as she hath prov'd herself;
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

[Enter Jessica, to them below.

What, art thou come? — On, gentlemen; away!
Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

[Exit with Jessica and Salario.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who's there?

Gra. Signior Antonio?

Ant. Fie, fie, Gratiano! where are all the rest?
'T is nine o'clock; our friends all stay for you.
No masque to-night: the wind is come about,
Bassanio presently will go aboard:
I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

Gra. I am glad on't: I desire no more delight,
Than to be under sail, and gone to-night.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Portia, with the Prince of Morocco, and both their trains.

Por. Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince. — [Curtains
Now make your choice. [drawn aside.

Mor. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears —
"Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire;
The second, silver, which this promise carries: —
"Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves;
This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt: —
"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.
How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Por. The one of them contains my picture, prince.
If you choose that, then I am yours withal.

Mor. Some god direct my judgment! — Let me see.
I will survey th' inscriptions back again:
What says this leaden casket?

1 Stow says, Black Monday got its name from the following occurrence: On Easter-Monday, April 14, 1369, Edward III., with his host before the city of Paris, and the day was full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold that many men died of their horses' backs, with the cold.
2 Fast bind, fast find: in f. e.
3 This direction not in f. e.
"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath!"
Must give.—For what? for lead? hazard for lead?
This casket threatens: men, that hazard all,
Do it in hope of fair advantages:
A golden ducat, no showers of dross;
I'll then nor give, nor hazard, ought for lead.
What says the silver, with her virgin hue?
"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves."
As much as he deserves?—Pause there, Morocco,
And weigh thy value with an even hand.
If thou be'st rated by thy estimation,
Thou dost deserve enough; and yet enough
May not extend so far as to the lady;
And yet to be afraid of my deserving
Were but a weak disabling of myself.
As much as I deserve?—Why, that's the lady:
I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes,
In graces, and in qualities of breeding:
But more than these in love I do deserve her.
What if I star'd no farther, but chose here?—
Let's see once more this saying grav'd in gold:
"Who chooseth me shall gain what men desire."
Why, that's the lady: all the world desires her:
From the four corners of the earth they come,
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
The Hyrcanian deserts, and the vastly wilds
Of wide Arabia, are as through-fares now,
For princes to come view fair Portia:
The war-like kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia.
One of these three contains her heavenly picture.
Is't like, that lead contains her? 'T were damnation,
To think so base a thought: it was too gross
To rib her cencloth in the obscure grave.
Or shall I think in silver she's immur'd,
Being ten times undervalued to tried gold?
O sinful thought! Never so rich a gem
Was set in worse than gold. They have in England
A coin, that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold, but that's inculp'd upon;
But here an angel in a golden bed
Lies all within.—Deliver me the key:
Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may!
Por. There, take it, prince; and if my form lie there,
Then I am yours. [He opens the golden casket.
Por. O hell! what have we here?
A carrion death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll. I'll read the writing.
"All that glisters is not gold:
Often have you heard that told:
Many a man his life hath sold,
But my outside to behold:
Gilded tombs do worms infold.
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscriv'd:
Fare you well; your suit is cold."
Cold, indeed, and labour lost:
Then, farewell, heat; and, welcome, frost.—
Portia, adieu. I have too grief'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part. [Exit.
Por. A gentle ridicance.—Draw the curtains: go.
[Curtains drawn.
Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exit.

SCENE VIII.—Venice. A Street.

Salar. Why man, I saw Bassanio under sail.
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship, I'm sure, Lorenzo is not.
Salan. The villain Jew with outcries rais'd the duke,
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand,
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.
Besides, Antonio certifi'd the duke,
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.
Salan. I never heard a passion so contus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
"My daughter!—O my ducats!—O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian?—O my Christian ducats!
Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!
A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats.
Of double ducats, stol'n from me by my daughter!
And jewels too! two rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter!—Justice! find the girl!
She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats!"
Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,
Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.
Salan. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.
Salar. Marry, well remember'd.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday;
Who told me, in the narrow seas, that part
The French and English, there miscarri'd
A vessel of our country, richly fraught.
I thought upon Antonio when he told me,
And wish'd in silence that it were not his.
Salan. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear;
Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.
Salar. A kinder gentleman treats not the earth.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part.
Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd—"Do not so;
Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio,
But stay the very riping of the time:
And for the Jew's bond, which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your mind of love.
Be merry: and apply your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there."
And even there, his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand: and so they parted.
Salan. I think, he only loves the world for him.
I pray thee, let us go, and find him out,
And quicken his embrac'd heaviness
With some delight or other.
Salar. Do we so. [Exit.

SCENE IX.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Nerissa, with a Scrivour.
Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee; draw the curtains straight.
The prince of Arragon hath taken his oath,
And comes to his election presently.

Enter the prince of Arragon, Portia, and their train Flourish cornets. Curtains withdrawn.
Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince:
If you choose that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemniz'd;
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.
Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things
SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Salanio and Salarino.

Sal. Now, what news on the Rialto?

Sal. Why, yet it lives there unchecked, that Antonio hath a ship of rich laden wreck'd on the narrow seas; the Goodwinds, I think they call the place: a very dangerous flat, and fatal, where the cares and many a tall ship lie buried, as they say, if my gossip, report, be an honest woman of her word.

Sal. I would she were as lying a gossip in that, as ever knapped ginger, or made her neighbours believe she went for the death of a third husband. But it is true, without any ship of prolixity, or crossing the plain high-way of talk, that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio,—O, that I had a title good enough to keep his name company!—

Sal. Come, the full stop.

Sal. Ha!—what say'st thou?—Why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Sal. I would it might prove the end of his losses.

Sal. Let me say amen betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer; for he comes in the likeness of a Jew.—

Enter Shylock.

Shy. How now, Shylock? what news among the merchants?

Shy. You know, none so well, none so well as you of my daughter's flight.

Shy. That's certain: I, for my part, knew the tailor that made the wings she flew withal.
Salan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fledg’d; and then, it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damned for it.

Salar. That’s certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!

Salar. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods, than there is between red wine and vendish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio ave had any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto;—a beggar, that was wont to come so snug upon the mart.—Let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer;—let him look to his bond;
he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy;
—let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: what’s that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorner of my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what’s his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes?
hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility? revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? why, revenge. The villainy you Teach me, I will execute; and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house, and desires to speak with you both.

Salar. We have been up and down to seek him.

Salan. Here comes another of the tribe: a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew.

[Exeunt Salan. Salar, and Servant.

Enter Tubal.

Shy. How now, Tubal? what news from Genoa?
Hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot answer.

Shy. Why there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort. The urse never fell upon our nation till now: I never felt it till now:—two thousand ducats in that: and other precious, precious jewels.—I would, my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she be hearsed at my foot, and the ducats in her coff’n?
No news of them?—Why, so;—and I know not what’s spent in the search: Why then—loss upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief, and no satisfaction, no revenge; nor ill luck stirring, but what lights o’ my shoulders; no sighs, but o’ my breathing; no tears, but o’ my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill luck too. Antonio as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. — hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thank God! I thank God! Is it true? Is it true?
Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal!—Good news, good news! ha! ha!—Where? in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats.*

Shy. Thou stick’st a dagger in me. I shall never see my gold again. Four(score) ducats at a sitting?
fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio’s creditors to my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it. I’ll plague him; I’ll begin him: I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring, that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Out upon her! Thou tortur’st me, Tubal: it was my torquise;* I had it of Leah, when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that’s true, that’s very true. Go, Tubal, seek me an officer; bespeak him a fortnight before.
I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit; for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I will.
Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue: go, good
Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia’s House.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, Nerissa, and their Attendants.

Por. I pray you tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong,
I lose your company: therefore, forbear a while.
There’s something tells me, (but it is not love,)
I would not lose you, and you know yourself,
Hate counsels not in such a quality.
But lest you should not understand me well,
And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought,
I would detain you here some month or two,
Before you venture for me. I could teach you,
How to choose right, but then I am forsworn;
So will I never be: so may you miss me;
But if you do, you’ll make me wish a sin,
That I had been forsworn. Beshrew your eyes,
They have o’er-look’d* me, and divided me;
One half of me is yours, the other half yours.—
Mine own. I would say; but if mine, then yours,
And so all yours! O! these naughty times
Put bars between the owners and their rights;
And so, though yours, not yours.—Prove it so,
Let fortune go to hell for it,—not I.
I speak too long; but ’tis to pause* the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election.

Bas. Let me choose:

Por. For, as I am, I live upon the rack.

Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio? then confess
What treason there is mingled with your love.

Bass. None. but that ugly treason of mistrust,
Which makes me fear thy enjoyment of my love.

* that used: in f. e. 2 It was a popular superstition, that this stone 3 doth move when there is any peril prepared to him who weareth it. 4 Penton’s Secret Wonders of Nature, 1566. 2 Charmed. 4 points: in f. e.
There may as well be amity and life
'Twixt snow and fire, as treason and my love.'

Por. Ay, but, I fear, you speak upon the rack,
Where none enforced do speak any thing.

Bass. Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth.

Por. Well then, confess, and live.

Bass. Confess, and love,
Had been the very sum of my confession.

Doth teach me answers for deliverance! [drawn aside.]

But let me to my fortune and the caskets. [Curtainus]

Por. Away then. I am lock'd in one of them:

If you do love me, you will find me out.—
Nerissa, and the rest, stand all aloof.—
Let music sound while he doth make his choice;
Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end,
Fading in music: that the comparison
May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream,
And watery death-bed for him. He may win,
And what is music then? then music is Even as the flourish when true subjects bow
To their assumed monarch: I stand for sacrifice,
The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives,
With bleared visages, come forth to view
The issue of th' exploit. Go, Hercules!
"Live thou, I live:—with much, much more dismay
I view the fight, than thou that mak'st the fray.

A Song, the whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.

Tell me, where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begat, how nourished?
Reply, reply.
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing feel; and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies
Let us all ring fancy's bell;
I'll begin it,—Ding, dong, bell.
All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass. So may the outward shows be least themselves:
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
In law, what pleas so tainted and corrupt,
But, being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil? In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
There is no vice so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on his outward parts.
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules, and frowning Mars,
Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk:
And these assume but valour's exultant,
To render them seduced. Look on beauty,
And you shall see 'tis purchased by the weight;
Which therein works a miracle in nature,
Making them lightest that wear most of it:
So are those crisp'd snaky golden locks,
Which make such wanton gambols with the wind,

Upon supposed fairness, often known
To be the down of a second head,
The scull that broke them, in the splendour
Thus ornament is but the guilting shore
To a most dangerous sea, the beauteous scarf
Veiling an Indian: beauty, in a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wisest. Therefore, thou gaudy gold Hard food for Midas. I will none of thee.
Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drone!
'Twixt man and man: but thou, thou meagre lead
Which rather threat'st men than dost promise aught,
Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence,
And here choose I. Joy be the consequence!

Por. How all the other passions flock to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair,
And shudder'd fear, and green-eyed jealousy.
O love! be moderate; allay thy cesty;
In measure rain thy joy: repute this excess:
I feel too much thy blessing; make it less,
For fear I surfeit!

Bass. Wherefound I here? [He opens the leaden casket]
Fair Portia's counterfeit! What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Or whether, riding on the balls of mine,
Seem they in motion? Here are sever'd lips,
Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar
Should sunder such sweet friends. Here, in her hairs,
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh t' entrap the hearts of men.
Faster than gnats in cobwebs; but her eyes!—
How could he see to do them; having made one,
Methinks, it should have power to steal both his,
And leave itself unfinish'd: yet look, how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprizing it, so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance.—Here's the scroll,
The continent and summary of my fortune.

"You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair, and choose as true!
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content, and seek no more.
If you be well pleased with this,
And hold your fortune for your bliss,
Turn you where your lady is,
And claim her with a loving kiss."

A gentle scroll.—Fair lady, by your leave;
I come by note, to give, and to receive. [Kissing her]

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause, and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing, in a doubt
Whether those peals of praise be his or no;
So, thrice fair lady, stand l, even so,
As doubtful whether what I see be true,
Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.

Por. You see me, Lord Bassanio, where I stand.

Such as I am: though, for myself alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet for you
I would be trebled twenty times myself:
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times more rite.
That only to stand high in your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of me
Is sum of nothing: which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschoold, unpractis'd:
Happy in this, she is not yet so old.

---

1 This direction not in f. e. 2 guiled: in f. e. 3 f. e. have: "Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word. 4 unfinish'd: in f. e. Sceven. suggested the same change. So the quartus; the folio: "You see, my lord Bassanio."
But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all, in that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself, and what is mine, to you, and yours
Is now converted: but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen of myself: and even now, but now;
This house, these servants, and this name myself,
Are yours, my lord. I give them with this ring,
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it presage the ruin of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaim on you. [Giving it.]

Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words:
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins;
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As after some oration, fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the buzzing pleased multitude;
Where every something, being blent together,
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy,
Express'd, and not express'd. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence:
O! then be bold to say, Bassanio's dead.

Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That have stood by, and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry, good joy. Good joy, my lord, and lady!

Gra. My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady!
I wish you all the joy that you can wish,
For, I am sure, you can wish none from me;
And, when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thank your lordship, you have got me one.

My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid;
You lov'd, I lov'd; for intercession
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls;
For woeing here, until I sweat again,
And swearing, till my very tongue was dry
With oaths of love; at last, if promise last,
I got a promise of this fair one here,
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achiev'd her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa?

Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleas'd withal.

Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?

Gra. Yes, my faith, my lord. [marriage.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honour'd in your

Gra. We'll play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Por. What, and stake down?

Gra. No; we shall ne'er win at that sport, and stake down.—

But who comes here? Lorenzo, and his indevel? What! and my old Venetian friend, Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio.

Bass. Lorenzo, and Salerio, welcome hither,
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome.—By your leave
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. So do I, my lord:

They are entirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honour.—For my part, my lord,

My purpose was not to have seen you here.

But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did entreat me, past all saying nay,
To come with him along.

Sale. I did, my lord,
And I have reason for it. Signior Antonio
Commends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter.]

Bass. Ere I open this letter, I pray you, tell me how my good friend doth.

Sale. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind;
Not well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will show you his estate. [BASSANIO reads]

Gra. Nerissa, cheer your stranger; bid her welcome.
Your hand, Salerio; what's the news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know, he will be glad of our successes;
We are the jaques; we have won the fleece.

Sale I would you had won the fleece that he hath lost!—

Por. There are some shrewd contents in you same paper.

That steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse?—
With leave, Bassanio; I am half myself,
And I must freely have the half of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia!—

Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper. Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins—I was a gentleman:
And then I told you true, and yet, dear lady;
Rating myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing: for, indeed,
I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady;
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound,
Issuing life-blood.—But is it true, Salerio?
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?
From Tripolis, from Mexico, and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India?
And not one vessel 'scap'd the dreadful touch
Of merchant-marrying rocks?

Sale. Not one, my lord.

Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it. Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man.
He plies the duke at morning, and at night,
And doth impeach the freedom of the state,
If they deny him justice: twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all persuaded with him
But none can drive him from the envious plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.

Jes. When I was with him I have heard him swear
To Tubal and to Chus, his countrymen,
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh,
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him; and I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.
Scene IV.

The Merchant of Venice.

Por. Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble?

Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
The best condition'd and unwearied'st spirit,
In doing courtesies; and one in whom
The ancient Roman honour more appears,
Than any that draws breath in Italy.

Por. What sum owes he the Jew?

Bass. For me, three thousand ducats.

Por. Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond:
Double six thousand, and then creble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through my Bassanio's fault.
First, go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times over:
When it is paid, bring your true friend along.
My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day.
Did your friends welcome, show my merry cheer;
Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear.—
But let me hear the letter of your friend.

Bass. [Reads.] "Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit; and since in paying it it is impossible I should live, all debts are cleared between you and I, if I might but see you at my death. Notwithstanding, use your pleasure: if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter."

Por. O love! despatch all business, and begone.
Bass. Since I have your good leave to go away,
I will make haste; but till I come again,
No bed shall e'er be guilty of my stay,
Nor rest be interposed 'twixt us twain. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Shylock, Salanio, Antonio, and Bailor.

Shy. Bailor, look to him: tell not me of mercy.—
This is the fool that lent out money gratis.—
Bailor, look to him.

Ant. Hear me yet, good Shylock. I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond; I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond. Thou call'st me dog before thou hast'd a cause, But, since I am a dog, beware my fangs. The duke shall grant me justice.—I do wonder, Thou naughty bailor, that thou art so fond To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak. I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak: I'll have my bond, and therefore speak no more. I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool, To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield To Christian intercessors. Follow not; I'll have no speaking: I will have my bond.

[Exit Shylock.

Sal. It is the most impenetrable cur, That ever kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone: I'll follow him no more with boodless prayers. He seeks my life; his reason well I know. I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures Many that have at times made mean to me: Therefore he hates me.

Sal. I am sure, the duke Will never grant this forfeiture to hold.

Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law.
For the commodity that strangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much impeach the justice of the state;
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go;
These griefs and losses have so bated me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.—
Well, bailor, on.—Pray God, Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not. [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Balthazar.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But, if you knew to whom you show this honour.
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of my lord, your husband,
I know, you would be prounder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good.
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me think, that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed,
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty!
This comes too near the praising of myself,
Therefore, no more of it: hear other things.—
Lorenzo, I commit unto your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house,
Until my lord's return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breath'd a sacred vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord's return.
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you
Not to deny this imposition,
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart
I shall obey you in all fair commands.
Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.

Lor. Fair thoughts, and happy hours, attend on you! Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well-pleas'd
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.—

[Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo.

Now, Balthazar,
As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endeavour of a man,
In speed to Padua: see thou render this
Into my cousin's hand, doctor Bellario:
And look, what notes and garments he doth give thee

So the quarto, the folio : lends.
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed
Unto the Transect, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words,
But get thee gone: I shall be there before thee.

Enter. Madam. I go with all convenient speed. [Exit.
Por. Come on, Nerissa: I have work in hand.
That you yet know not of. We'll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Ner. Shall they see us?
Por. They shall, Nerissa: but in such a habit,
That they shall think we are accomplished
With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accoutred like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace;
And speak between the change of man and boy,
With a rec'd voice; and turn two mining steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth; and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying: they fell sick and died;
I could not do without: —then, I'll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd them.
And twenty of these puny lites I'll tell,
That men shall swear, I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. I have within my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Por. Why, shall we turn to men?

Ner. Fi! what a question's that,
If thou wert near a lewd interpreter.
But come: I'll tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us,
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Garden.

Enter Launce and Jessica.

Lor. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore, I promise you,
I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter: therefore, be of good cheer; for, truly, I think, you are damned.
There is but one hope in it that can do you any good,
and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Lor. Mary, you may partly hope that your father got you not; that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed: so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Lor. Truly, then, I fear you are damned both by tather and mother: thus when I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother. Well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband: he hath made me a Christian.

Lor. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians now before; c'en as many as could well live one by another. This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say:
here he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Launcelot if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo: Launcelot and I are out. He tells me flatly, there's no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter: and he says, you are no good member of the Commonwealth.
In converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Lor. I shall answer that better to the Commonwealth, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Lorn. It is much, that the Moor should be more than reason; but if she be less than an honest woman, she is, indeed, more than I took her for.

Lor. How every fool can play upon the word! I think, the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots.—Go in, sirrah: bid them prepare for dinner.

Lorn. That is done, sir: they have all stomachs.

Lor. Goodly lord, what a wit-snapper are you then, bid them prepare dinner.

Lorn. That is done too, sir; only, cover is the word.

Lor. Will you cover then, sir?

Lorn. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion? Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray thee, understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Lorn. For the table, sir, it shall be served in, for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humours and conceits shall govern.

[Exit Launce.]

Lor. O, dear discretion, how his words are suited!
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words: and I do know
A many fools, that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a trickey word
Deity the matter. How cheer'st thou, Jessica?
And now, good sweet, say thy opinion;
How dost thou like the lord Bassanio's wife?

Jes. Past all expressing. It is very meet,
The lord Bassanio live an upright life,
For, having such a blessing in his lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;
And, if on earth he do not mean it, then,
In reason he should never come to heaven.
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match
And on the wager lay two earthly women;
And Portia one, there must be something else
Paw'n'd with the other, for the poor rude world
Hath not her fellow.

Lor. Even such a husband
Hast thou of me, as she is for a wife.

Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion, too, of that.

Lor. I will anon; first, let us go to dinner.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you, while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for table talk; Then, howsoever thou speakest, 'mong other things
I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I'll set you forth. [Exit.

1 I could not help it. 2 So one of the quartos; the folio and f. e., read in place of "then, in." "it is"
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke; the Magnificoes; Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Salario, Salano, and others.

Duke. What, is Antonio here?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace.

Duke. I am sorry for thee; thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Ant. I have heard,
Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify
His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietness of spirit,
The very tyranny and rage of his

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Salan. He's ready at the door. He comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.—

Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too,
That thou but lead'st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then, 'tis thought,
Thou 'lt show thy mercy and remorse, more strange
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exact'st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh,
Thou wilt not only lose the forfeit,
But, touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moiety of the principal;
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Enow to press a royal merchant down,
And pluck commiseration of his state
From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborn Turks and Tartars, never train'd
To offices of tender courtesy.
We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.

Shy. I have possess'd your grace of what I purpose;
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom.
You'll ask me, why I rather choose to have
A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats? I'll not answer that:
But, say, it is my humour: is it answer'd?
What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats
To have it banish'd? What, are you answer'd yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe sings in the nose,
Cannot contain their urine for affection;
Masters of passion sway it to the mood
Of what it likes, or loathes. Now, for your answer:
As there is no firm reason to be render'd,
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig;

1 Hated. 2 The old copies have "loose." 3 The old copies have "sways." Knight reads the passage thus:

: for affection

Weeder: in f. e. Bollen means swollen. 4 in f. e. You may as well use question with the wolf.

Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

ACT IV.

Exe thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.

Ant. I am a tainted weaver of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me.
You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio.

Than to live still, and write mine epitaph.

Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.

Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?

Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario gretts your grace.

[Presenting a letter.]

Bass. Why dost thou what thy knife so earnestly?

[Shylock whets his knife.]

Shy. To cut the forfeit from that bankrupt there.

Grat. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul. harsh Jew,
Thou mak'st thy knife keen; but no metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?

Shy. No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

Grat. O, be thou damned, inexorable dog,
And for thy life let justice be achieved!
Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men: thy currish spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet,
And whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam,
Lufus'd itself in thee; for thy desires
Are wojthy, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous.

Shy. Till thou canst rall the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To careless ruin.—I stand here for law.

Duke. This letter from Bellario doth commend
A young and learned doctor to our court.—

Where is he?

Ner. He attendeth here hard by,
To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.

Duke. With all my heart:—some three or four of you,
Go give him courteous conduct to this place.—

Mean time, the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

[Clk reads.] "Your grace shall understand, that at the receipt of your letter I am very sick: but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome; his name is Balthazar. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio, the merchant:
we turned o'er many books together: he is furnish'd with my opinion; which, better'd with his own learning, the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of years be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation, for I never knew so young a body with so old a head.
I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
whose trial shall better publish his commendation:"

Duke. You hear the learned Bellario, what he writes:

And here, I take it, is the doctor come.—

Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws.

Give me your hand. Came you from old Bellario?

Por. I did, my lord.

Duke. You are welcome: take your place.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?

Por. I am informed thoroughly of the cause.—

Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?

Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth.

Por. Is your name Shylock?

Shy. Shylock is my name.

Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you, as you do proceed. —

You stand within his danger; do you not? [To Antonio.
Ant. Ay, so he says.

Por. Do you confess the bond?

Ant. I do.

Por. Then must the Jew be merciful.

Shy. On what compulsion must I? tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not strained,
It dropeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown:
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty.
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this sceptred sway:
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself.
And earthly power doth then show likest God's.
When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,—

That in the course of justice none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much,
To mitigate the justice of thy plea,
Which if thou follow, this strict court of Venice
Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant there.

Shy. My deeds upon my head. I crave the law:
The penalty and forfeit of my bond.

Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?

Bass. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court;
Yea, twice the sum: if that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times o'er;
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart.
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth: and, I beseech you
Wrest once the law to your authority:
To do a great right, do a little wrong,
And curb this cruel devil of his will.

Por. It must not be. There is no power in Venice.
Can alter a decree established:
'Twill be recorded for a precedent,
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. It cannot be.

Shy. A Daniel come to judgment! yea, a Daniel!

O, wise young judge, how do I honour thee!

Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond.

Shy. Here 'tis, most reverend doctor; here it is.

[Showing it.]

Por. Shylock, there's three thy money offered thee.

Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven.

Shall I lay perjury upon my soul?
No, not for Venice.

Por. Why, this bond is forfeit,
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Nearest the merchant's heart.—Be merciful:
Take thrice thy money; bid me tear the bond.

Shy. When it is paid according to the tenor. —

It doth appear you are a worthy judge;
You know the law; your exposition
Hath been most sound: I charge you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Proceed to judgment. By my soul I swear,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me. I stay here on my bond.

Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court
To give the judgment.

Por. Why, then, thus it is:
You must prepare your bosom for his knife
Shy. O, noble judge! O, excellent young man!
Por. For the intent and purpose of the law;
Hath full relation to the penalty.

Shy. 'Tis very true. O, wise and upright judge!
How much more elder art thou than thy looks!
Por. Therefore, lay bare your bosom.

Shy. Ay, his breast;
So says the bond:—doth it not, noble judge?

Nearest his heart: those are the very words.
Por. It is so. Are there balance here to weigh
The flesh?

Shy. I have them ready. [Producing scales!]
Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,
To stop his wounds, lest he die to bleed to death.

Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond?
Por. It is not so express'd; but what of that?
'T were good you do so much for charity.
Shy. I cannot find it: 'tis not in the bond.
Por. You', merchant, have you any thing to say?

Ant. But little: I am arm'd, and well prepar'd.—
Give me your hand, Bassanio: fare you well.
Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you,
For herein fortune shows herself more kind
Than her custom: it is still her use
To let the wretched man out-live his wealth,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow,
An age of poverty; from which lingering penance
Of such misery doth she cut me off.

Commend me to your honourable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say, how I lov'd you, speak me fair in death;
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a lover.
Repent not you that you shall lose your friend,
And he repents not that he pays your debt;
For, if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I'll pay it instantly with all my heart.

Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life:
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all,
Here to this devil, to deliver you.

Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for that,
If she were by to hear you make the offer.

Gra. I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love:
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some power to change this cursed Jew.

Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unquiet house.

Shy. These be the Christian husbands! I have a daughter:
Would any of the stock of Barabbas
Had been her husband, rather than a Christian!
We tride time: I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine:
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.
Shy. Most rightful judge!

Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast:
The law allows it, and the court awards it.

Shy. Most learned judge!—A sentence! come, prepare!
[Showing the scales again;]

Por. Tarry a little: there is something else.—
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are, a pound of flesh:
Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;
But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are by the laws of Venice confiscate
Unto the state of Venice.

Gra. O upright judge!—Mark, Jew:—O learned judge!

Shy. Is that the law?
Por. Thyself shalt see the act;
For, as thou urgest justice, be assur'd;
Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desirest.

Gra. O learned judge!—Mark, Jew:—a learned judge!

Shy. I take his offer then: pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.

Bass. Here is the money.

Por. Soft! The Jew shall have all justice:—soft!—no haste:
He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Gra. O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge!

Por. Therefore, prepare thee to cut off the flesh.
Shed thou no blood: nor cut thou less, nor more,
But just a pound of flesh: if thou tak'st more,
Or less, than a just pound,—be it so much
As makes it light, or heavy, in the balance,
Or the division of the twenty part
Of one poor scruple; nay, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou dost, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew!
Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.

Por. Why doth the Jew pause? Take thy forfeit.

Shy. Give me my principal, and let me go.

Bass. I have it ready for thee: here it is.

Por. He hath refus'd it in the open court:
He shall have merely justice, and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel, still say I; a second Daniel!—
I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.

Shy. Shall I not have barely my principality?

Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeit.
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.

Shy. Why then the devil give him good of it.
I'Il stay no longer question.

Por. Tarry, Jew:
The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be prov'd against an alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts,
He seek the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize one half his goods: the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state;
And the offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice.
In which predicament, I say, thou stand'st;
For it appears by manifest proceeding,
That, indirectly, and directly too,
Thou hast contriv'd against the very life
Of the defendant, and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me rehears'd.

Down, therefore, and beg mercy of the duke.

Gra. Beg, that thou may'st have leave to hang Thyself.
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord;
Therefore, thou must be hang'd at the state's charge.
Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it.
For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's:
The other half comes to the general state,
Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.
Por. Ay, for the state; not for Antonio.
Shy. Nay; take my life and all; pardon not that:
You take my house, when you do take the prop
That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live.
Por. What mercy can you render him, Antonio?
Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else, for God's sake!
Ant. So please my lord the duke, and all the court,
To quit the fine for one half of his goods,
I am content, so he will let me have
The other half in use, to render it,
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That lately stole his daughter:
Two things provided more.—that, for this favour,
He presently become a Christian;
The other, that he do record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd,
Unto his son Lorenzo, and his daughter.
Duke. He shall do this, or else I do recant
The pardon, that I late pronounced here.
Por. Art thou contented, Jew? what dost thou say?
Shy. I am content.
Por. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. I pray you, give me leave to go from hence.
I am not well. Send the deed after me,
And I will sign it.
Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.
Gra. In christening thou shalt have two godfathers:
Had I been judge, thou should'st have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.[Exit Shylock.
Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.
Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon:
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet I presently set forth.
Duke. I am sorry, that your leisure serves you not.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman,
For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.
[Exeunt Duke, Magnificoes, and train.
Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cove your courteous pains withal.
Ant. And stand indebted, ever and above, in love and service to you evermore.
Por. He is well paid, that is well-satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein do account myself well paid:
My mind was never yet more mercenary,
I pray you, know me, when we meet again:
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.
Bass. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you farther:
Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute,
Not as a fine. Grant me two things, I pray you;
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.
Por. You press me far, and therefore I will yield
Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for your sake,
And, for your love, I'll take this ring from you.—
Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more.
And you in love shall not deny me this.
Bass. This ring, good sir?—alas, it is a trifle;
I will not shame myself to give you this.
Por. I will have nothing else but only this;
And now, methinks, I have a mind to it.
Bass. There's more depends on this, than on th' value.
• The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation;
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.
Por. I see, sir, you are liberal in offers:
You taught me first to beg, and now, methinks,
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.
Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife;
And when she put it on she made me vow,
That I should neither sell, nor give, nor lose it.
Por. That sense serves many men to save their gifts
An if your wife be not a mad woman.
And know how well I have deserv'd this ring,
She would not hold out enemy for ever,
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you.
[Exeunt Portia and Nerissa.
Ant. My Lord Bassanio, let him have the ring.
Let his deservings, and my love withal,
Be valued 'gainst your wife's commandment.
Bass. Go, Gratiano; run and overtake him,
Give him the ring, and bring him if thou canst.
Unto Antonio's house.—Away! make haste.
[Exit Gratiano.
Come, you and I will thither presently,
And in the morning early will we both

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street.
Enter Portia and Nerissa.
Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this deed,
And let him sign it. We'll away to-night.
And be a day before our husbands home.
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.
[Exeunt Gratiano running.
Gra. Fair sir, you are well o'er-taken.
My lord Bassano, upon more advice.
Hath sent you here this ring, and doth entreat
Your company at dinner.
Por. That cannot be.
His ring I do accept most thankfully.
And so, I pray you, tell him: furthermore,
I pray you, show my youth old Shylock's house
Gra. That will I do.
Ner. Sir, I would speak with you.—
I'll see if I can get my husband's ring. [To Portia.
Which I did make him swear to keep for ever.
Por. Thou may'st, I warrant. We shall have old swearing;
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and oustwear them too.
Away! make haste: thou know'st where I will tarry
Ner. Come, good sir; will you show me to this house?
[Exeunt.
My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you
Within the house, your mistress is at hand;
And bring your music forth into the air.

[Exit Stephano.]

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here we will sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears: soft stillness, and the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.

Sit, Jessica: look, how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patterns of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-souled cherubims;
Such harmony is in immortal souls;
But, whilst this muddy gesture of decay,
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

[Enter Musicians.]

Come, ho! and wake Diana with a hymn:
With sweetest touches pierce your mistresses' ear,
And draw her home with music.

[Music]

[Enter Portia and Nerissa, at a distance.]

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shone, we did not see the candle
Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be: and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Music! hark!

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.
Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect:
Methinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.
Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam
Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended: and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wen.
How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise, and true perfection!—
Peace! now the moon sleeps with Endymion,
And would not be awak'd!

Lor. That is the voice,
Lor. Madam, they are not yet;
But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa: Give order to my servants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence:—
Nor you, Lorenzo; Jessica, nor you.

Lor. Your husband is at hand; I hear his trumpet.
We are no tattle-tales, madam; fear you not.
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband,
And never be Bassanio so for me:
But God sort all:—You are welcome home, my lord.

Bass. I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my friend:
This is the man, this is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to him,
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you.

Ant. No more than I am well acquainted of.

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore, I scant this breathing courtesy.

Gra. [To Nerissa.] By yonder moon, I swear, you do me wrong;
In faith, I gave it to the judge’s clerk:
Would he be gelt that had it, for my part,
Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! What’s the matter?

Gra. About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give to me; whose posy was
For all the world, like cutlers’ poetry
Upon a knife, “Love me, and leave me not.”

Ner. What talk you of the posy, or the value?
You swore to me, when I did give it you,
That you would wear it till your hour of death,
And that it should lie with you in your grave:
Though not for me, yet for your velenent oaths,
You should have been respective, and have kept it.
Gave it a judge’s clerk! no, God’s my judge,
The clerk will ne’er wear hair on’s face, that had it.

Gra. He will, an if he live to be a man.

Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man.

Gra. Now, by this hand, I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy; a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself, the judge’s clerk;
A prating boy, that begg’d it as a fee;
I could not for my heart deny it him.

Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife’s first gift;
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And so riveted with faith unto your flesh.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands:
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave
Nor pluck it from his finger for the wealth
That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief:
An’t were to me, I should be mad at it.

Bass. [Aside.] Why, I was best to cut my left hand
And swear I lost the ring defending it.

Gra. My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg’d it, and, indeed,
Deserv’d it too; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg’d mine;
And neither man, nor master, would take aught
But the two rings.

Por. What ring, gave you, my lord?
Not that, I hope, which you received of me.

Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault,
I would deny it; but you see, my finger
Hath not the ring upon it: it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth.
By heaven, I will ne’er come in your bed
Until I see the ring.

Ner. Nor I in yours,
Till I again see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
When naught would be accepted but the ring.
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring.
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleased to have defended it
With any terms of zeal, wanted the moder
To urge the thing held as a ceremony?
Nerissa teaches me what to believe;
I’ll die for’t, but some woman had the ring.

Bass. No, by mine honour, madam, by my soul
No woman had it; but a civil doctor,
Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg’d the ring, the which I did deny him,
And suffer’d him to go displeas’d away,
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?
I was enforce’d to send it after him;
I was beset with shame and courtesy;
My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmear it. Pardon me, good lady,
For, by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think, you would have begg’d
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

Por. Let not that doctor e’er come near my house.
Since he hath got the jewel that I lov’d,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will become as liberal as you:
I’ll not deny him any thing I have;
No, not my body, nor my husband’s bed.
Know him shall, I am well sure of it:
Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus;
If you do not, if I be left alone,
Now, by mine honour, which is yet mine own,
I’ll have that doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his clerk; therefore, be well advis’d
How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Gra. Well, do you so: let not me take him then;
For, if I do, I’ll mar the young clerk’s pen.
Ant. I am th’ unhappy subject of these quarrels.
Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.
Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And in the hearing of these many friends
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself.—
Por. Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubly sees himself;
In each eye, one—swear by your double self,
And there’s an oath of credit.
Bass. Nay, but hear me.
Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear,
I never more will break an oath with thee.
Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth,
Which but for him that had your husband’s ring,
Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again,
My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.
Por. Then, you shall be his surety. Give him this,
And bid him keep it better than the other.
Ant. Here, lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring.
Bass. By heaven! it is the same I gave the doctor.
Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio,
For by this ring the doctor lay with me.
Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano.
For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor’s clerk,
In lieu of this last night did lie with me.
Gra. Why, this is like the mending of highways
In summer, when’ th’ ways are fair enough.
What! are we cuckolds, ere we have deserved it?
Por. Speak not so grossly.—You are all amaz’d:
Here is a letter, read it at your leisure;
It comes from Padua, from Bellario:
There you shall find, that Portia was the doctor:
Nerissa there, her clerk. Lorenzo, here,
Shall witness I set forth as soon as you,
And even but now return’d: I have not yet
Enter’d my house.—Antonio, you are welcome;
And I have better news in store for you,
Than you expect: unseal this letter soon;
There you shall find, three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly.
You shall not know by what strange accident
I chanced on this letter.
Ant. I am dumb.
Bass. Were you the doctor; and I knew you not?
Gra. Were you the clerk, that is to make me cuckold?
Ner. Ay; but the clerk that never means to do it,
Unless he live until he be a man.
Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow.
When I am absent, then, lie with my wife.
Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life and living.
For here I read for certain that my ships
Are safely come to road.
Por. How now, Lorenzo?
My clerk hath some good comforts, too, for you.
Ner. Ay, and I’ll give them him without a fee.—
There do I give to you and Jessica,
From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
After his death, of all he dies possess’d of.
Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
Of starved people.
Por. It is almost morning,
And yet, I am sure, you are not satisfied
Of these events at full. Let us go in;
And charge us there upon intergatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.
Gra. Let it be so: the first intergatory,
That my Nerissa shall be sworn on, is,
Whether till the next night she had rather stay,
Or go to bed now, being two hours to day?
But were the day come, I should wish it dark,
Till I were couching with the doctor’s clerk.
We’ll, while I live, I’ll fear no other thing
So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa’s ring. Exeunt.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Orchard, near Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion: he bequeathed me by will, but a poor thousand crowns; and, as thou say'st, charged my brother on his blessing to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept: for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth, for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up. [Adam retires.]

Enter Oliver.

Oli. Now, sir! what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make anything.

Oli. What mar you then, sir?

Orl. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

Oli. Marry, sir, be better employed, and be naught awhile.

Orl. Shall I keep your hogs, and eat husks with them? What prodigious portion have I spent that I should come to such penury?

Oli. Know you where you are, sir?

Orl. O! sir, very well: here, in your orchard.

Oli. Know you before whom, sir?

Orl. Ay, better than he I am before know, sir. I know, you are my eldest brother; and, in the gentle condition of blood, you should so know me. The courtesy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first-born; but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt us. I have as much of my father in me, as you, albeit, I confess, your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Oli. What, boy!

Orl. Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

Oli. Wilt thou lay hands on me, villain?

Orl. I am no villain: I am the youngest son of sir Rowland de Bois; he was my father, and he is thrice a villain, that says, such a father begot villains. Wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other had pulled out thy tongue for saying so. [Shaking him.] Thou hast railed on thyself.

Adam. [Coming forward.] Sweet masters, be patient for your father's remembrance, be at accord.

Oli. Let me go, I say.

Orl. I will not, till I please: you shall hear me. My father charged you in his will to give me good education: you have trained me like a peasant, obscuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities: the spirit of my father grows strong in me, and I will no longer endure it; therefore, allow me such ex-

Ch. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come to-morrow, I'll give him your payment: if ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. And so, God keep your worship!

Exe. Farewell good Charles.—Now will I stir this gamester. I hope, I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he: yet he's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned; full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved, and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. But it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains, but that I hinder the boy thither, which now I'll go about.

SCENE II.—A Lawn before the Duke's Palace.

Enter Rosalind and Cell.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry. Ros. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of; and would you yet P were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein, I see, thou lovest me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hast been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine: so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously tempered, as mine is to thee.

Ros. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know, my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection: by mine honour, I will: and when I break that oath let me turn monster. Therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports. Let me see; what think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I pray thee, do, to make sport withal: but love no man in good earnest; nor no further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou mayst in honour come off again.

Ros. What shall be our sport then?

Cel. Let us sit, and mock the good housewife. Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally. Ros. I would, we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced, and the bountiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. 'Tis true, for those that she makes fair, she

1 This is not in f. 2 This word is not in f. e. 3 I, was added by Pope scarce makes honest; and those that she makes honest, she makes very ill-favoured.

Ros. Nay, now thou goest from fortune's office to nature's: fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No: when nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by fortune fall into the fire?—Though nature hath given us wit to float at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature, when fortune makes nature's natural the better off of nature's wit.

Cel. Peradventure, this is not fortune's work neither, but nature's; who, perceiving our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, hath sent this natural for our whetstone: for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits.—How now, wit? whither wander you?

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your father.

Cel. Were you made the messenger?

Touch. No, by mine honour; but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath fool?

Touch. Of a certain knight, that swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was taught: now, I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good, and yet was not the knight forsworn.

Cel. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry: now unmuzzle your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now; stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knave.

Cel. By our beards, if we had them, thou art.

Touch. By my knavery, if I had it, then I were; but if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn: no more was this knight, swearing by his honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away before ever he saw those pancakes, or that mustard.

Cel. Prythee, who is it that thou mean'st?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Ros'. My father's love is enough to honour him enough. Speak no more of him: you'll be whipped for taxation, one of these days.

Touch. The more pity, that fools may not speak wisely, what wise men do foolishly.

Cel. By my troth, thou say'st true; for since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little foolery naticwise men have makes a great show. Here comes monsieur Le Beau.

Enter Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-cram'd.

Cel. All the better: we shall be the more marketable.

Bon jour, monsieur Le Beau: what's the news?

Le Beau. Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

Cel. Spot? Of what colour?

Le Beau. What colour, madam? How shall I answer you?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Touch. Or as the destinies decree.

Cel. Well said: that was laid on with a trowel.

Touch. Nay, if I keep not my rank,—

Ros. Thou losest thy old smell.

Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies: I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning: and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end, for the best is yet to do: and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Cel. Well,—the beginning, that is dead and buried.

Le Beau. There comes an old man, and his three sons.

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence:

Ros. With bills on their necks.—"Be it known unto all men by these presents,"

Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, and so the third. Yonder they lie, the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ros. Alas!

Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?

Touch. Thus men may grow wiser every day! it is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promise thee.

Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking?—Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming: let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on: since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam.

Cel. Alas! he is too young: yet he looks successfully.

Duke F. How now, daughter, and cousin! are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you there is such odds in the men! In pity of the challenger's youth, I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated: speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hither, good monsieur Le Beau.

Duke F. Do so: I'll not be by. [Duke goes apart.]

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princes call for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger: I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth.

Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years. You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with our eyes, or knew yourself with our judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety, and give over this attempt.

Ros. Do, young sir: your reputation shall not therefore be misprised. We will make it our suit to the duke, that the wrestling might not go forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts, wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But let your eyes, and gentle wishes, go with me to my trial; wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shame that was never disgraceful; if killed, but one deed that is willing to be so. I shall do my friends no wrong, for have none to lament me; the world no injury, for in it I have nothing; only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.

Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

Cel. And mine, to eke out here.

Ros. Fare you well. Pray heaven, I be deceived in you!

Cel. Your heart's desires be with you.

Cha. Come; where is this young gallant, that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Orl. Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.

Duke F. You shall try but one fall.

Cha. No, I warrant your grace, you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.

Orl. You mean to mock me after; you should not have mocked me before; but come your ways.

Ros. Now, Hercules be thy speed, young man!

Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg. [CHARLES and ORLANDO wrestle.]

Ros. O, excellent young man!

Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. [CHARLES is thrown. Shout.]

Duke F. No more, no more.

Orl. Yes, I beseech your grace: I am not yet well breathed.

Duke F. How dost thou, Charles?

Le Beau. He cannot speak, my lord.

Duke F. Bear him away. [CHARLES is borne out.]

What is thy name, young man?

Orl. Orlando, my liege: the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Bois.

Duke F. I would, thou hadst been son to some man else.

The world esteem'd thy father honourable, but I did find him still mine enemy; thou shouldst have better pleas'd me with this deed, Hadst thou descended from another house. But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth. I would thou hadst told me of another father.

Cel. Were I my father, coz, would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be sir Rowland's son, His youngest son, and would not change that calling, To be adopted heir to Frederick.

Ros. My father lov'd sir Rowland as his soul, And all the world was of my father's mind. Had I before known this young man his son, I should have given him tears unto entreaties, Ere he should thus have ventur'd.

Cel. Gentle cousin, Let us go thank him, and encourage him: My father's rough and envious disposition Sticks me at heart. —Sir, you have well deserv'd:

If you do keep your promises in love But justly, as you have exceeded all promise. Your mistress shall be happy.

Ros. Gentleman, [Giving him a chain]

Wear this for me, one out of suits with fortune, That could give more, but that her hand lacks means, Shall we go, coz?

Cel. Ay.—Fare you well, fair gentleman.

Orl. Can I not say. I thank you? My better parts Are all thrown down, and that which here stands up Is but a quintain, a mere lifeless block.

Ros. He calls us back. My pride fell with my fortunes I'll ask him what he would. —Did you call, sir?—

Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown More than your enemies.

Cel. Will you go, coz?

Ros. Have with you.—Fare you well.

Orl. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?

I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.

Re-enter Le Beau.

O, poor Orlando! thou art overthrown.

Or, Charles, or something weaker, masters thee. [Le Beau. Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you To leave this place. Albeit you have deserv'd High commendation, true applause, and love. Yet such is now the duke's condition, That he misconstrues all that you have done. The duke is luminous: what is he, indeed, More suits you to conceive, than me to speak of.

Orl. I thank you, sir; and, pray you, tell me this: Which of the two was daughter of the duke? That here was at the wrestling?

Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners; But yet, indeed, the shorter is his daughter: The other is daughter to the banish'd duke, And here detain'd by her usurping uncle, To keep his daughter company: whose loves Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters. But I can tell you, that of late this duke Hath taken displeasure against his gentle niece, Grounded upon no other argument, But that the people praise her for her virtues, And pity her for her good father's sake; And, on my life, his malice against the lady Will suddenly break forth. —Sir, fare you well: Hereafter, in a better world than this, I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

Orl. I rest much bounden to you: fare you well. [Exit Le Beau.]

Thus must I from the smoke into the smoother: From tyrant duke, unto a tyrant brother. — But heavenly Rosalind!

[Exit]

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace. Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. Why, cousin; why, Rosalind. —Cupid hath mercy! —Not a word?

Ros. Not one to throw at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon curs; throw some of them at me: come, lame me with reasons.

Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up, when the one should be lamed with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your father?
Ros. No, some of it for my father's child. O, how full of briars is this working-day world!

Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee at holiday footery: if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.

Ros. I could shake them off my coat: these burs are in my heart.

Cel. Hem them away.

Ros. I would try, if I could cry hem, and have him.

Cel. Come, come; wrestle with thy affections.

Ros. O! they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.

Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall.—But, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest. Is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old sir Rowland's youngest son?

Ros. The duke my father lov'd his father dearly.

Cel. Doth it therefore ensue, that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chase, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.

Ros. No, faith, hate him not, for my sake.

Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve well?

Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him because I do.—

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Look, here comes the duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Duke F. Mistress, dispatch you with your fastest haste, And get you from our court.

Ros. Me, uncle? You, cousin:
Within these ten days if that thou be'st found So near our public court as twenty miles, Thou diest for it.

Ros. I do beseech your grace, Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me. If with myself I hold intelligence, Or have acquaintance with mine own desires, If that I do not dream, or be not frantic, (As I do trust I am not) then, dear uncle, Never so much as in a thought unborn Did I offend your highness.

Duke F. Thus do all traitors: If their purgation did consist in words, They are as innocent as grace itself. Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.

Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor, Tell me, whereon the likelihood depends.

Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter; there's enough.

Ros. So was I when your highness took his dukedom; So was I when your highness banish'd him. Treason is not inherited, my lord; Or if we did derive it from our friends, What's that to me? my father was no traitor. Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much, To think my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.

Duke F. Ay, Celia: we stay'd her for your sake; Else had she with her father rang'd along.

Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay: It was your pleasure, and your own remorse. I was too young that time to value her, But now I know her. If she be a traitor, Why so am I; we still have slept together, Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, eat together;

And whereas 'er we went, like Juno's swans, Still we went coupled, and inseparable.

Duke F. She is too subtle for thee; and her smooth, Her very silence, and her patience, Speak to the people, and they pity her.

Thou art a fool; she robs thee of thy name; And thou wilt show more bright, and seem more virtuous When she is gone. Then, open not thy lips: Firm and irreproachable is my doom Which I have pass'd upon her. She is banish'd.

Cel. Pronounce that sentence, then, on me, my liege I cannot live out of her company.

Duke F. Thou are a fool.—You, niece, provide yourself, If you out-stay the time, upon mine honour, And in the greatness of my word, you die.

[Exeunt Duke Frederick and Lords]

Cel. O, my poor Rosalind! whither wilt thou go? Will thou change fathers? I will give thee mine, I charge thee, be not thou more grieved than I am, Ros. I have more cause.

Cel. Thou host not, cousin, Pr'ythee, be cheerful: know'st thou not, the duke Hath banish'd me, his daughter?

Ros. What he hath not.

Cel. No? hath not? Rosalind lacks, then, the love, Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one. Shall we be sunder'd? shall we part, sweet girl? No: let my father seek another heir. Therefore, devise with me how we may fly, Whither to go, and what to bear with us: And do not seek to take your change upon you, To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out; For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale, Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.

Ros. Why, whither shall we go?

Cel. In the forest of Arden.

Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us, Molls as we are, to travel forth so far! Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.

Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire, And with a kind of rags to smirch my face. The like do you: so shall we pass along, And never stir assailants.

Ros. Were it not better, Because that I am more than common tall. That I did suit me all points like a man? A gallant out-curtles a crown on my head.

Cel. I'll use my axe upon my thigh, A boar-spear in my hand; and, in my heart, Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will, We'll have a swashing and a martial outside, As many other mannish cowards have, That do outface it with their semblances.

Cel. What shall I call thee, when thou art a man?

Ros. I'll have no worse name than Jove's own page, And therefore look you call me Ganymede. But what will you be call'd?

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state:

No longer Celia, but Alienor.

Ros. But, cousin, what if we essay'd to steal The clownish fool out of your father's court? Would he not be a comfort to our travel? Cel. He'll go along over the wide world with me; Leave me alone to woo him. Let's away, And get our jewels and our wealth together, Devise the fittest time, and safest way, To hide us from pursuit that will be made After my flight. Now go we in content To liberty, and not to banishment.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke, Senior, Amiens, and other Lords, like Foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates, and brothers in exile, Hath not old custom made this life more sweet, Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods More free from peril than the tedious court? Here feel we not the penalty of Adam, The seasons' difference, or the icy fang, And churchil chiding of the winter's wind, Which when it bites, and blows upon my body, Even till I shrink with cold, I smile, and say, This is no slarter: these are counsellors That feelingly persuade me what I am. Sweet are the uses of adversity, Which like the toad, ugly and venomous, Wears yet a precious jewel in his head: And this our life, exempt from public haunt, Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.

Ami. I would not change it. Happy is your grace, That can translate the stubbornness of fortune Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison? And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools, Being native burghers of this desert city, Should, in their own confines, with forked heads? Have their round haunches gored.

1 Lord. Indeed, my lord, The melancholy Jaques grieves at that:
And, in that kind, swears you do more usurp Than doth your brother that hath banished you. To-day, my lord of Amiens and myself Did steal behind him, as he lay along Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brauls along this wood: To the which place a poor sequester'd stag That from the hunter's aim had taken a hurt, Did come to languish: and, indeed, my lord, The wretched animal had forth such groans, That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat Almost to bursting: and the big round tears Cours'd one another down his inoffensive nose In pitious chase: and thus the hairy fool, Much marked of the melancholy Jaques, Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears.

Duke S. But what said Jaques? Did he not moralize this espectacle?

1 Lord. O! yes, into a thousand similes. First, for his weeping in the needless stream: "Poor deer," quoth he, "thou mak'st a testament As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more To that which hath too much." Then, being there alone, Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends; "Tis right," quoth he; "thus misery doth part The flux of company," Anon, a careless herd, Full of the pasture, jumps along by him, And never stays to greet him: "Ay," quoth Jaques, "Sweep on, you fat and greedy citizens; * 'Tis just the fashion: wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there?"

Thus most invincibly he pierceth through The body of the country, city, court. Yea, and of this our life, swearing, that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse, To fright the animals, and kill them up In their assign'd and native dwelling place.

Duke S. And did you leave him in this contemplation? 2 Lord. We did, my lord, weeping and commenting Upon the sobbing deer.

Duke S. Show me the place. I love to cope him in these sullen fits, For then he's full of matter.

2 Lord. I'll bring you to him straight. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them? It cannot be: some villains of my court Are of consent and suffrance in this.

1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her. The ladies, her attendants of her chamber, Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress.

2 Lord. My lord, the roynish clown, at whom so oft Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. Hesperia, the princess' gentlewoman, Confesses that she secretly o'er-heard Your daughter and her cousin much commend The parts and graces of the wrestler, That did but lately foil the sinewy Charles; And she believes, wherever they are gone That youth is surely in their company.

Duke F. Send to his brother: fetch that gallant hither;
If he be absent bring his brother to me, I'll make him find him. Do this suddenly, And let not search and inquisition fail To bring again these foolish runaways. [Exeunt]

SCENE III.—Before Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who's there?

Adam. What, my young master?—O, my gentle master! O, my sweet master! O, you memory Of old Sir Rowland! why, what make you here? Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you? And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant? Why would you be so fond to overcome The bony priser of the humorist's duke? Your praise is come too swiftly home before you. Know you not, master, to some kind of men Their graces serve them but as enemies? No more do yours: your virtues, gentle master, Are sanctified and holy trairors to you. O, what a world is this, when what is comely Envenoms him that bears it! Orl. Why, what's the matter?

Adam. O, unhappy youth! Come not within these doors: beneath this roof The enemy of all your graces lives. * Your brother—(no, no brother; yet the son—

1 as in f. e. * Fenton, in 1569, tells us "there is found in heads of old and great teals, a stone which they call borax or stoten: it is most commonly found in the head of a be-fed." —Knight. * Barbed arrows. * had: in f. e. * Scoury * Foolish * within: in f. e. *
Yet not the son—I will not call him son—
Of him I was about to call his father.]

rath heard your praises, and this night be means
To burn the lodging where you use to lie,
And you within it: if he fail of that,
He will have other means to cut you off:
I overheard him, and his practices.

This is no place: this house is but a butchery:
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.

Ori. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me go?
Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here.

Ori. What! wouldst thou have me go and beg my food,

Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road.
This I must do, or know not what to do,
Yet this I will not do, do how I can.
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted, proud, and bloody brother.

Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I saw'd under your father;
Which I did store, to be my foster-nurse
When service should in my old links lie lame,
And unregarded age in corners drown.
Take that: and He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently eaters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold:
All this I give you. Let me be your servant:
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellions liquors in my blood;
Nor did not with unashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility:
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frothy, but kindly. Let me go with you:
I'll do the service of a younger man
In all your business and necessities.

Ori. O, good old man! how well in thee appears
The constant favour of the antique world.
When service sweat for duty, not for meed!
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion,
And having that, do choke their service up.
Even with the having: it is not so with thee.
But, poor old man, thou pruned a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield,
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.
But come thy ways: we'll go along together,
And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
We'll light upon some settled low content.

Adam. Master, go on, and I will follow thee
To the last gasp with truth and loyalty.
From seventeen years, till now almost fourscore,
Here I lived 1, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek,
But at fourscore it is too late a week:
Yet fortune cannot recompense me better,
Than to die well, and not my master's debtor. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter ROSALIND for Ganymede, CELIA for Aliena. and Cloen, alias TOUCHSTONE.

Ros. O Jupiter! how weary are my spirits!

Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.

Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man's apparel, and tooy else like a woman: but I must comfort the weather vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show itself courageous to petticoat: therefore, courage, good

Aliena.

Cel. I pray you, bear with me: I can go no farther.

Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you, than bear you: yet I should bear no cross, if I did bear you, for, I think, you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the forest of Arden.

Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden: the more fool I:
When I was at home I was in a better place, but trafflers must be content.

Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone.—Look you: who comes here? a young man, and an old, in solemn talk

Enter CORIN and SILVVS.

Cor. That is the way to make her scorn you still.

Sil. O Corin, that thou knew'st how I do love her!

Cor. I partly guess, for I have lov'd ere now.

Sil. No, Corin: being old, thou canst not guess,

Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover
As ever sigh'd upon a midnight pillow:

But if thy love were ever like to mine,

As sure I think did never man love so,

How many actions most ridiculous

Hast thou been drawn to by thy fancy?

Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.

Sil. O! thou didst then ne'er love so heartily.

If thou remember'st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into,

Thou hast not lov'd:

Or if thou hast not spake, as I do now,

Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress' praise,

Thou hast not lov'd:

Or if thou hast not broke from company,

Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,

Thou hast not lov'd.

O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe! [Exit SILVVS.

Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound,
I have by hard adventure found mine own.

Touch. And I mine. I remember, when I was in love I broke my sword upon a stone, and bid him take that for coming a-night to Jane Smìle: and I remember the kissing of her batter: and the cow's dugs that her pretty chapp'd hands had milked: and I remember the wooing of a peasant instead of her; from whom I took two cads, and, giving her them again, said with weeping tears, "Wear these for my sake." We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly

Ros. Thou speakest wiser than thou art 'ware of.

Touch. Nay, I shall ne'er be 'ware of mine own wit, till I break my chins against it.

Ros. Love, love! this shepherd's passion
Is much upon my fashion.

Touch. And mine: but

It grows something stale with me,

And begins to fail with me.

Cel. I pray you, one of you question yond' man,

If he for gold will give us any food:
I faint almost to death.

Touch. Holla, you clowns!

Ros. Peace, fool: he's not thy kinsman.

Cor. Who calls?

Touch. Your betters, sir.

Cor. Else are they very wretched.

Ros. Peace, I say.—

Good even to you, friend.

Cor. And to you, gentle sir; and to you all.

Ros. I pray thee, shepherd, if that love, or gold,
SCENE VII.

Can in this desert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may rest ourselves, and feed,
Here's a young maid with travel much oppress'd,
And fainst for succour.

Cor. Fair sir, I pity her,
And wish, for her sake more than for mine own,
My fortunes were more able to relieve her;
But I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze:
My master is of churlish disposition,
And little recks to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality.
Besides, his coat, his flocks, and bounds of feed,
Are now on sale: and at our sheepcote now,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on; but what is, come see,
And in my voice most welcome shall you be.

Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?
Cor. That young swain that you saw here but crete,
That little cares for buying any thing.

Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty,
Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock,
And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.

Cel. And we will mend thy wages. I like this place,
And willingly could waste my time in it.

Cor. Assuredly, the thing is to be sold.
Go with me: if you like, upon report,
The soil, the profit, and this kind of life,
I will your very faithful feeder be,
And buy it with your gold right suddenly.  [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Amiens, Jaques, and others.

song.

Ami. Under the Greenwood tree,
Who loves to lie with me,
And tune his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see no enemy,
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more! I pray thee, more.
Ami. It will make you melancholy, monsieur Jaques.
Jaq. I thank it. More! I pray thee, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs.
More! I pray thee, more.

Ami. My voice is ragged; I know I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, more; another stanza. Call you
'sem stanzas?

Ami. What you will, monsieur Jaques.
Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?

Ami. More at your request, than to please myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I'll thank you: but that they call compliment is like the encounter of two dog-apes: and when a man thanks me heartily, metu-locks, I have given him a penny, and he renders me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing: and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Ami. Well, I'll lend the song—Sirs, cover the while:
the duke will drink under this tree.—He hath been all this day to look you.

Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him.
He is too disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks, and make no boast of them. Come, warble; come.

SOng.

Who dares ambition shun, [All together here
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats,
And pleads with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see, &c.

Jaq. I'll give you a verse to this note, that I made yesterday in despite of my invention.

Ami. And I'll sing it.

Jaq. Thus it goes:—
If it do come to pass,
That any man turn ass,
Leaving his wealth and ease,
A stubborn will to please,
Dude, dude, dude, dude:—
Here shall he see, gross fools as he,
As he will come to me.

Ami. What's that dude? dude?

Jaq. 'Tis a Greek invocation to call fools into a circle. I'll go sleep if I can: if I cannot, I'll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.

Ami. And I'll go seek the duke: his banquet is prepared. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no farther: 'O! I die for food. Here lie I down, and measure out my grave.
Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little. If this uncouth forest yield any thing savage,
I will either be food for it, or bring it for food to thee.
Thy conscience is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake be comforted; hold death awhile at the arm's end. I will here be with thee presently, and if I bring thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die; but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Well said! thou look'st cheerily: and I'll be with thee quickly. —Yet thou liest in the bleak air: come, I will bear thee to some shelter, and thou shalt not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same.

A Table set out. Enter Duke, Senior, Amiens,
Lords, and others.

Duke S. I think he be transform'd into a beast,
For I can no where find him like a man.

1 Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone hence
Here was he merry, hearing of a song.

Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical,
We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.—
Go, seek him: tell him, I would speak with him.

Enter Jaques.

1 Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach.

Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life is this,
That your poor friends must woo your company!
What, you look merry.

Jaq. A fool, a fool! —I met a fool i' the forest,
A moly fool; [a miserable world!]
As I do live by fool, I met a fool,
Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun,
And rail'd on lady Fortune in good terms,
In good set terms,—and yet a moly fool.

"Good-morrow, fool," quoteth 1: "No, sir," quoteth he,
"Call me not fool, till heaven hath sent me fortune.
And then he drew a dial from his poke,

1 Rough. 2 dude-dude. (come hither): says Hamner. 3 comfortable: in f. e.
Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jaq. Why, I have eat none yet

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be serv'd.

Jaq. Of what kind should this cock come of?

Duke S. Art thou thus bolder'd, man, by thy distress

Or else a rude despiser of good manners,

That in civility thou seem'st so empty.

Orl. You touch'd my vein at first: the thorny point

Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show

Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred.

And know some nurture. But forbear, I say:

He dies, that touches any of this fruit,

Till I and my affairs are answered.

Jaq. An you will not be answered with reason,

I must die.

Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness shall force,

More than your force move us to gentleness.

Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.

Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you

I thought, that all things had been savage here,

And therefore put I on the countenance

Of stern commandment. But whate'er you are,

That, in this desert inaccessible,

Under the shade of melancholy boughs,

Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time,

If ever you have look'd on better days,

If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church,

If ever sat at any good man's feast,

If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a tear,

And know what 'tis to pity and be pitied,

Let gentleness my strong enforcement be.

In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

Duke S. True is it that we have seen better days,

And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church,

And sat at good men's feasts, and wip'd our eyes

Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd;

And therefore sit you down in gentleness,

And take, upon command, what help we have,

That to your wanting may be minister'd.

Orl. Then, but forbear your food a little while,

Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,

And give it food. There is an old poor man,

Who after me hath many a weary step

Limp'd in pure love: till he be first suffi'd,

Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger,

I will not touch a bit.

Duke S. Go find him out,

And we will nothing waste till you return.

Orl. I thank ye; and be bless'd for your good comfort! [Exit]

Duke S. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappy

This wide and universal theatre

Presents more woful pageants, than the scene

Wherein we play in.

Jaq. All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players:

They have their exits and their entrances,

And one man in his time plays many parts,

His acts being seven ages. At first, the infant,

Mewing and puking in the nurse's arms.

Then, the whining school-boy, with his satchel,

And shining morning face, creeping like snail

Unwillingly to school. And then, the lover,

Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad

Made to his mistress' eye-brow. Then, a soldier,
Full of strange calls, and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then, the justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eye severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank, and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion;
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.
Duke S. Welcome. Set down your venerable burden,
And let him feed.

Adam. So had you need; I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.
Duke S. Welcome; fall to: I will not trouble you
As yet to question you about your fortunes.
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.
[Confers with Orlando.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.
Enter Duke Frederick, Oliver, Lords and Attendants.

Duke F. Not seen him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be:
But were I not the better part made merry,
I should not seek an absent argument.
Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it:
Find out thy brother, where he is;
Seek him with candle: bring him, dead or living,
Within this twelve month, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory.
Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands,
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth
Of what we think against thee.

Ol. O, that your highness knew my heart in this!
I never lov'd my brother in my life.
Duke F. More villain thou.—Well, push him out of doors;
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extend upon his house and lands.
Do this expediently, and turn him going.  [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Forest of Arden.
Enter Orlando, hanging a paper on a tree.

Orl. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love:
And thou, three-crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntsmen's manes that my full life doth sway.
Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll charactere,
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.
Run, run, Orlando: carve, on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she.  [Exit.

1 Not in f. o.  2 Weave together.  3 Expediency.  4 With a paper: in f. o.
Cor. Not a whit, Touchstone: those that are good manner at the court are as ridiculous in the country, as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at the court. You told me, you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands: that courtesy would be uncleanly,
if courtiers were shepherds.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our ewes, and their fells, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat?
and is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance, say; come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will feel the sooner: shallow again. A more sounder instance; come.

Cor. And they are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep; and would you have us kiss tar? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! Thou worms-meat, in respect of a good piece of flesh, indeed!—Learn of the wise, and perpend: civet is of a baser birth than tar;
the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You have too courteously a wit for me: I'll rest.

Touch. Wilt thou rest damned? God help thee, shallow man! God make incision in thee! thou art raw.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer: I earn that I eat, get that I wear; owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good content with my harm: and the greatest of my pride is, to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you: to bring the ewes and the rams together, and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle: to bawd to a bell-wether, and to betray a she-lamb of a twelvemonth, to a crooked-jointed, old,rickethly run, out of all reasonable match. If thou best not damned for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds: I cannot see else how thou shouldst scape.

Cor. Here comes young master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter Rosalind, reading a paper.

Ros. From the east to western Ind,
No jewel is like Rosalind.
Her worth, being mounted on the wind,
Through all the world bears Rosalind.
All the pictures, fairest lin'd,
Are but black to Rosalind.
Let no face be kept in mind,
But the fairest of Rosalind.

Touch. I'll rhyme you so, eight years together, diners, and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted: it is
'the right butter-women's rank' to market.

Ros. Out, fool!

Touch. For a taste:—

"If a hart go lack a hind,
Let him seek out Rosalind.
If the eat will after kind,
So, be sure, will Rosalind.
Winter's garments must be lin'd,
So must slender Rosalind.
Their that reap must sheaf and bind,
Then to cart with Rosalind.
Sweetest nut hath sourest rind,
Such a nut is Rosalind.
He that sweetest rose will find,
Must find love's prick, and Rosalind."

This is the very false gallop of verses: why do you infect yourself with them?

Ros. Peace! you dull fool: I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit.

Ros. I'll graff it with you, and then I shall graff it with a medlar: then it will be the earliest fruit? the country: for you'll be rotten e'er you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, reading a paper.

Ros. Peace!

Here comes my sister, reading: stand aside.

Cel. Why should this a desert be?
For it is unpeopled? No;

Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings show:
Some, how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age.

Some, of violated vows
'Twist the souls of friend and friend:
But upon the fairest boughs,
Or at each sentence' end,
Will I Rosalind write;

Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven would in little show.
Therefore heaven Nature charg'd,
That one body should be full'd
With all graces wide enlarg'd:
Nature presently distill'd
Helen's cheek, but not her heart,
Cleopatra's majesty,
Atalanta's better part,
Sad Lucretia's modesty.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heavenly nymph the dressing's,
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the touches dearest priz'd.

Heaven would that these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.

Ros. O, most gentle Jupiter!—what tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, "Have patience, good people!"

Cel. How now? back, friends.—Shepherd, go off a little:—go with him, sirrah.

Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippern. [Exit Corin and Touchstone

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?

Ros. O! yes, I heard them all and more too;
for some of them had in the then more feet than the verses would bear.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might bear the verses.

Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamey in the verse.

Cel. But didst thou hear without wondering, how thy name should be hanged and cut upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder, before you came: for look here what I found on a palm-tree: I was never so be-rhymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Trow you, who hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?
SCENE II.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

Ros. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think I must speak. Sweet, say on.

Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Cel. Do not look heir! [Aside to Celia.] I will speak to him like a saucy lackey, and under that habit play the knave with him. [To him.] Do you hear, forestier? Orl. Very well: what would you? Ros. I pray you, what is 't o'clock? Orl. You should ask me, what time o' day: there's no clock in the forest.

Ros. By no means, sir. Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.

Orl. I pray thee, who doth he trot withal?

Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a se'nnight, Time's

Ros. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it possible?

Ros. Nay, I pray thee, now, with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful! and yet again wonderful, and after that, out of all whooping!

Ros. How dost me think, though I am caparison'd like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? One inch of delay more is a Southsea of discovery; I pray thee, tell me, who is it quickly; and speak apace. I would thou couldst stammer, that thou might'st pour this concealed man out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouthed bottle; either too much at once, or none at all. I pray thee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.

Ros. Is he of God's making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a beard?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.

Ros. Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful. Let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando, that tripp'd up the wrestler's heels and your heart, both in an instant.

Ros. Nay, but the devil take mocking: speak sad brow, and true maid.

Cel. I'faith, coz, 'tis he.

Ros. Orlando?

Cel. Orlando.

Ros. Alas the day! what shall I do with my doublet and hose?—What did he, when thou saw'st him? What said he? How look'd he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee, and when shall thou see him again? Answer me in one word.

Cel. You must borrow me Garagonatu's mouth first: 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say, ay, and no, to these particulars is more than to answer in a catechism.

Ros. But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?

Cel. It is as easy to count atomies, as to resolve the propositions of a lover: but take a-taste of my finding him, and relish it with good observance. I found him under a tree, like a dropped acorn.

Ros. It may well be call'd Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit.

Cel. Give me audience, good madam.

Ros. Proceed.

Cel. There lay he strop'd along, like a wounded knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry, holla! to thy tongue, I pray thee: it curvets unseasonably. He was furnish'd like a hunter.

Ros. O ominous! he comes to kill my heart.

Cel. I would sing my song without a burden: thou bring'st me out of tune.

1 Serious. 2 Rabbin's giant, who swallowed five pilgrims in a salad. common with pictures on cloth, hung around rooms like tapestry.

3 Puttest me out. 4 In the style of the most maxims painted on pace is so ard that it seems the length of seven years.

Orl. Who ambles Time withal?

Ros. With a priest that lacks Latin, and a rich man that hath not the gout; for the one sleeps easily, because he cannot study; and the other lives merrily, because he feels no pain: the one lacking the burden of lean and wasteful learning, the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury. These Time ambles withal.

Orl. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallowes; for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon here.

Orl. Who stands he still withal?

Ros. With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term and term, and then they perceive not how time moves.

Orl. Where dwell you, pretty youth?

Ros. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place?

Ros. As the coney, that you see dwell where she is kindled.

Orl. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many: but, indeed, an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many lectures against it: and I thank God, I am not a woman, to be touched with so many giddy offences, as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal.

Orl. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?

Ros. There were none principal: they were all like one another, as half-pence are; every one fault seeming monstrous, till his fellow fault came to match it.

Orl. I p'rythee, recount some of them.

Ros. No; I will not cast away my physic, but on those that are sick. There is a man banits the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hanges odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, defying the name of Rosalind: if I could meet that fancy-monster I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Orl. I am he that is so love-shaked. I pray you, tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon you: ne taught me how to know a man in love: in which eage of rushes, I am sure, you are not prisoner.

Orl. What were his marks?

Ros. A lean cheek, which you have not: a blue eye, and sunken, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not: a beard neglected, which you have not:—but I pardon you for that; for, simply, your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue. —Then, your hose should be unarded, your bonnet unbent, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. But you are no such man: you are rather point-device in your accoutrements; as loving yourself, than seeming the lover of any other.

Orl. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe i love.

Ros. Me believe it? you may as soon make her that you love believe it: which, I warrant, she is apter to do, than to confess she doth: that is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their conscience. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Orl. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

Orl. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how I feel in love.

Ros. Love is merely a madness, and, I tell you, de serves as well a dark house, and a whisp, as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured, is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Yet I profess curing it by counsel.

Orl. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes, one; and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress, and I set him every day to woo me: at which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking; proud, fantastical, apish, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something, and for no passion truly any thing. As boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour: would now like him, now loathe him; then entertain him, then forswear him; now weep for him, then spit at him; that I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love, to a loving humour of madness; which was, to forswear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook, merely monastic. And thus I cured him; and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound shepherd's heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in't.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. I would cure you, if you would but call me Rosalind, and come every day to my cote, and woo me.

Orl. Now, by the faith of my love, I will. Tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I'll show it you; and, by the way, you shall tell me where in the forest you live. Will you go?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind.—Come, sister, will you go?

SCENE III.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques behind, observing them.

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Jaq. [Aside.] O knowledge ill-inhabited! worse than love in a thatched house!

Touch. When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room.—Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what poetical is. Is it honest in deed, and word? Is it a true thing?

Touch. No, truly, for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry, and what they swear in poetry, it may be said, as lovers they do feign.
Aud. Do you wish, then, that the gods had made me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly; for thou swear'st to me, thou art honest: now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst reign.

Aud. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. No truly, unless thou wert hard-favoured; for honesty coupled to beauty is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

Jaq. [Aside.] A material fool.

Aud. Well, I am not fair, and therefore, I pray the gods, make me honest!

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul slut were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Aud. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy foulness: sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee: and to that end, I have been with sir Oliver Mar-text, the vicar of the next village, who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest, and to compile us.

Jaq. [Aside.] I would fain see this meeting.

Aud. Well, the gods give us joy.

Touch. Amen. A man might, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts. But what though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said,—many a man knows no end of his goods: right; many a man has good horns, and knows no end of them. Well, that is the dowry of his wife: it is none of his own getting. Are horns given to poor men alone?—No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the racer! Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a wall'd town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor; and by how much defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Here comes sir Oliver.—Sir Oliver Mar-text, you are well met: will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Oli. Is there none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on trust of any man.

Sir Oli. Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

Jaq. [coming forward.] Proceed, proceed: I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good Mr. What-ye-call't: how do you, sir? You are very well met: God'd you *for your last company. I am very glad to see you:—even a toy in hand here, sir.—Nay; pray, he cover'd.

Jaq. Will you be married, motley?

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, sir; the horse his curb, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as piggish hill, so wedlock would be nibbling.

Jaq. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they join wine and salt: then, one of you will prove a shrunk panel, and, like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. I am not in the mind, but I were better to be married of him than of another: for he is not like to marry me well, and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

Jaq. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey:

We must be married, or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good master Oliver! Not O sweet Oliver! O brave Oliver!

Leave me not behind thee:

But wendst away, beway, I say,

I will not to wedding bind thee.

[Exeunt Jaques, Touchstone, and Audrey.

Sir Oli. 'Tis no matter: ne'er a fantastical knave of them all shall flout me out of my calling. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Before a Cottage.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. Never talk to me: I will weep.

Cel. Do, I pray thee; but yet have the grace to consider, that tears do not become a man.

Ros. But have I not cause to weep?

Cel. As good cause as one would desire: therefore weep.

Ros. His very hair is of the disagreeable colour.

Cel. Something browner than Judas's. Marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.

Ros. I' faith, his hair is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour.

Ros. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.

Cel. He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana a nun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously the very ice of chastity is in them.

Ros. But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

Cel. Nay, certainly, there is no truth in him.

Ros. Do you think so?

Cel. Yes: I think he is not a pick-purse, nor a horse-stealer; but for his verity in love, I do think him as courageous as a covered goblet, or a worm-eaten nut.

Ros. Not true in love?

Cel. Yes, when he is in; but, I think he is not in.

Ros. You have heard him swear downright, he was.

Cel. Was is not: besides, the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confessors of false reckonings. He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.

Ros. I met the duke yesterday, and had much question with him. He asked me, of what parentage I was? I told him, of as good as he; so he laughed, and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Cel. O, that's a brave man! he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover: as a puny tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose. But all's brave, that youth mounts, and folly guides. Who comes here?

Enter Corin.

Cor. Mistress, and master, you have oft inquir'd After the shepherd that complain'd of love, Who saw sitting by me on the turf, Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess That was his mistress.

Cel. Well; and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play'd, Between the pale complexion of true love, And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain, Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you, If you will mark it.
Ros. O! come, let us remove: The sight of lovers feedeth those in love.—
Bring us to this sight, and you shall say
I'll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter SIILVVS and PHEBE.

Sil. Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe:
Say that you love me not: but say not so
In bitterness. The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the axe upon the huddled neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that kills, and lives by bloody drops?

Enter ROSALIND, CELIA, and CORIN, behind.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner:
Fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye:
'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable,
That eyes, that are the trait'st and softest things,
Whose shot their coward gates on atomies,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!
Now I dorown on thee with all my heart;
And, if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee;
Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down;
Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame!
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers.
Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee;
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and palpable impression
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

Sil. O! dear Phebe,
If ever, (as that ever may be near)
You meet in some fresh check the power of fancy,
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That love's keen arrows makes.

Phe. But till that time
Come not thou near me: and when that time comes Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not,
As till that time I shall not pity thee.

Ros. [Advancing.] And why, I pray you? Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and all at once,
Over the wretched? What though you have no beauty,
As, by my faith, I see no more in you
Than without candle may go dark to bed,
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?
Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?
I see no more in you, than in the ordinary
Of nature's sale-work.—O'd my little life!
I think she means to tangle my eyes too.
No, 'tis not your inky brows, your black-silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entangle my spirits to your worship.—
You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy south, puffing with wind and rain?
You are a thousand times a properer man,
Than she a woman: 'tis such tools as you,
That make the world full of ill-fav'our'd children.
'T is not her glass, but you, that flatters her;
And out of you she sees herself more proper,
Than any of her lineaments can show her.—
But, mistress, know yourself: down on your knees,
And thank heaven fasting for a good man's love;
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can: you are not for all markets,
Cry the man mercy; love him; take his offer:
Foul is most foul, being foul to be a soother.
So, take her to thee, shepherd.—Fare you well.

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you, chide a year together
I had rather hear you chide, than this man woo.

Ros. He's fallen in love with your fastness,
And she'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast
As she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll saue her with bitter words.—Why look you so upon me?

Phe. For no ill will I bear you.

Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,
For I am falsier than vows made in wine:
Besides, I like you not.—If you will know my house,
'Tis at the tuft of olives, here hard by.—
Will you go, sister?—Shepherd, ply her hard.—
Come, sister.—Shepherdess, look on him better,
And be not proud: though all the world could see,
None could be so abus'd in sight as he.

Come, to our flock. [Exit ROSALIND, CELIA, and CORIN.

Phe. Dead shepherd! now I find thy sight of might,
"Who ever loved, that lov'd not at first sight?"

Sil. Sweet Phebe!—

Phe. Ha! what say'st thou, Silvius?

Sil. Sweet Phebe, pity me.

Phe. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.

Sil. Wherever sorrow is, relief would be:
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd.

Phe. Thou hast my love: is not that neighbourly?

Sil. I would have you.

Phe. Why, that were covetousness.

Silvius, the time was that I hated thee,
And yet it is not that I bear thee love;
But since that thou canst talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure, and I'll employ thee too;
But do not look for farther recompense,
Than thine own gladness that thou art employ'd

Sil. So holy, and so perfect is my love,
And I in such a poverty of grace,
That I shall think it a most plenteous crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reap'd: loose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.

Phe. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me ere while?

Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft;
And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That the old carlot once was master of.

Phe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him.
'Tis but a peevish boy:—yet he talks well:—
But what care I for words? yet words do well,
When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.
It is a pretty youth:—not very pretty:—
But, sure, he's proud, and yet his pride becomes him.
He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him
Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heal it up.
He is not very tall; yet for his years he's tall.
His leg is but so; and yet 'tis well:
There was a pretty redness in his lip;
A little riper, and more lusty red.
Than that mix'd in his cheek: 'twas just the difference
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled damask.
There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him; but for my part
I love him not, nor hate him not, and yet
I have more cause to hate him than to love him;
For what had he to do to chide at me?
He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And, now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me:
I marvel why I answer'd not again:

But that's all one; omittance is no quittance,
I'll write to him a very taunting letter,
And thou shalt hear it: wilt thou, Silvius?
Sil. Phebe, with all my heart.
Phe. I'll write it straight.
The matter's in my head, and in my heart:
I will be bitter with him, and passing short.
Go with me, Silvius.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I prythee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.
Ros. They say, you are a melancholy fellow.
Jaq. I am so: I do love it better than laughing.
Ros. Those that are in extremity of either are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunkards.
Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.
Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a post.
Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is imagination; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is polite; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sordid contemplation of my travels; which by often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad. I fear, you have sold your own lands, to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jaq. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad. I had rather have a fool to make me merry, than experience to make me sad. And to travel for it too!
Orl. Good day, and happiness, dear Rosalind.
Jaq. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.

Exit.

Ros. Farewell, monsieur traveller: look you lipe, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country; be out of love with your nativity, and almost chide God for making you that censure you are, or I will scarce think you have swam in a grotto. Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover? An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love! He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapped him o' the shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart-whole.

Orl. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight: I had as lief be wo'd of a snail.

Orl. Of a snail?

Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head, a better jointure, I think, than you make a woman. Besides, he brings his destiny with him.

Orl. What's that?
Ros. Why, horns; which such as you are fain to be beheld to your wives for; but he comes armed in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker, and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.
Orl. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me: for now I am in a holiday humour, and like enough to consent. What would you say to me now, an I were your very very Rosalind?

Orl. I would kiss before I spoke.

Ros. Nay, you were better speak first; and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers, lacking (God warn us!) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

Orl. How if the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should thank my honesty rather than my wit.

Orl. What, out of my suit?

Ros. Nay, out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit. Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person I say—I will not have you.
Orl. Then, in mine own person, I die.

Ros. No, 'tis, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, vicarium in a love-case. Troubles had his brains dashed out with a Greekian club; yet he did what he could to die before, and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drowned, and the foolish coroners of that age found it was—Hero of Sestos. But these are all lies men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind, for, I protest, her frown might kill me.

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a fly. But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on-disposition, and ask you what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me, Rosalind. [all.

Rosal. Yes, faith will I; Fridays, and Saturdays, and Orl. And wilt thou have me?

Rosal. Ay, and twenty such.

Orl. What say'st thou?

Rosal. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope so.

Rosal. Why, then, can one desire too much of a good thing?—Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry us—Give me your hand, Orlando.—What do you say, sister?

Orl. Pray thee, marry us.

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Rosal. You must begin,—"Will you, Orlando?"—

Cel. Go to.—Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Orl. I will.

Rosal. Ay, but when?

Orl. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Rosal. Then you must say,—"I take thee, Rosalind, for wife."

Orl. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Rosal. I might ask you for your commission; but,—

Orl. I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband. There's a girl, goes before the priest; and, certainly, a woman's thought runs before her actions.

Orl. So do all thoughts: they are winged.

Rosal. Now tell me, how long you would have her, after you have possessed her?

Orl. For ever, and a day.

Rosal. Say a day, without the ever. No, no, Orlando: men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hen; more clamorous than a parrot against rain; more new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are disposed to marry; I will laugh like a hyen, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Orl. But will my Rosalind do so?

Rosal. By my life, she will do as I do.

Orl. O! but she is wise.

Rosal. Or else she could not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder. Make the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and it will out at the key-hole: stop that, it will fly with the smoke out of the chimney.

Orl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say,—"Wit, whither wit?"

Rosal. Nay, you might keep that check for it, till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbour's bed.

Orl. And what wit could wit have to excuse that?

Rosal. Marry, to say,—she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O! that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's accusing, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

Orl. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

Rosal. Alas! dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours.

Orl. I must attend the duke at dinner: by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Rosal. Ay, go your ways, go your ways.—I knew what you would prove; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less: that flattering tongue of yours won me:—'tis but one cast away, and so,—come, death!—

Two o'clock is your hour?

Orl. Ay, sweet Rosalind.

Rosal. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise, or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most pathetic break-promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful. Therefore, beware my censure, and keep your promise.

Orl. With no less religion, than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: so, adieu.

Rosal. Well, time is the old justice that examineth all such offenders, and let time try you. Adieu!

[Exit ORLANDO.

Cel. You have simply misused our sex in your love-prate. We must have your doublet and hose plucked over your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

Rosal. O! coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how much fathom deep I am in love! But it cannot be sounded: my affection hath an unknown bottom, like the bay of Portugal.

Cel. Or rather, bottomless; that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out.

Rosal. No; that same wicked bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceived of spleen, and born of madness; that blind rashly, that abuses every one's eyes, because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love.—I'll tell thee, Alice, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando. I'll go find a shadow, and sigh till he come.

Cel. And I'll sleep.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Jaques and Lords, like Foresters.

Jaques. Which is he that killed the deer?

Lords. Sir, it was I.

Jaques. Let's present him to the duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head for a branch of victory.—Have you no song, forester, for this purpose?

Lords. Yes, sir.

Jaques. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

Song.

What shall he have that kill'd the deer?

His leader skin, and horns to wear.

Take thou no scorn to wear the horn;

It was a crest ere thou wast born.

Thy father's father wore it, and thy father bore it:

The horn, the horn, the busy horn,

Is not a thing to laugh to scorn.

[Then sing him home: the rest shall bear this burden.]

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.

Rosalind. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? And here much Orlando!

Cel. I warrant you, with pure love, and troubled brain,

He hath ta'en his bow and arrows, and gone forth—

To sleep. Look, who comes here.

[Enter SILVIO.

Silv. My errand is to you, fair youth.—

My gentle Phoebe did bid me give you this:

[Giving a letter. Was. sends it.
Scene III.

As You Like It.

Know not the contents; but as I guess,
By the stern brow and starched action,
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenour. Pardon me,
I am but as a guiltless messenger.

Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter,
And play the swaggerer: bear this, bear all.
She says, I am not fair: that I lack manners;
She calls me proud, and that she could not love me,
Were man as rare as Phœnix. Od's my will!
Her love is not the hare that I do hunt:
Why writes she so to me?—Well, shepherd, well;
This is a letter of your own device.

Sil. No, I protest: I know not the contents:

Phebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a fool,
And turn'd into the extremity of love.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand,
A freestone-col'd hand: I verily did think
That her old gloves were on, but 'twas her hands:
She has a housewife's hand: but that's no matter.
I say, she never did invent this letter;
This is a man's invention, and his hand.

Sil. Sure, it is hers.

Ros. Why, 'tis a boisterous and cruel style,
A style for challengers: why, she defies me,
Like Tame to Christian. Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant-rude invention,
Such Ethiop words, blacker in their effect
Than in their countenance.—Will you hear the letter?

Sil. So please you; for I never heard it yet,
Yet heard too much of Phebe's cruelty.

Ros. She Phebes me. Mark how the tyrant writes,
"Art thou god to shepherd turn'd,
That a maiden's heart hath burn'd?"—

Can a woman rail thus?

Sil. Call you this railing?

Ros. 'Why, thy godhead laid apart,
Warr'st thou with a woman's heart?"

Did you ever hear such railing?

"Whiles the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no vengeance to me."

Meaning me, a beast—

"If the scorn of your bright eye
Have power to raise such love in mine,
Alack! in me what strange effect
Would they work in mild aspect?
Whiles you bid me, I did love;
How then might your prayers move?
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me:
And by him seal up thy mind;
Whether that thy youth and kind
Will the faithful offer take
Of me, and all that I can make;
Or else by him my love deny,
And then I'll study how to die."

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Cel. Alas, poor shepherd!

Ros. Do you pity him? no; he deserves no pity.—
Wilt thou love such a woman?—What, to make thee an instrument, and play false strains upon thee? not to be endured!—Well, go thy way to her, (for I see, love hath made thee a tame snare) and say this to her—that if she love me, I charge her to love thee; if she will not, I will never have her, unless thou entreat for her.—If you be a true lover, hence, and not

Where in the purlicus of this forest stands
A sheepcote, fairest about with olive-trees?

Cel. West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom:
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place.
But at this hour the house doth keep itself;
Theor's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then should I know you by description;
Such garments, and such years:—"The boy is air,
Of female favour, and bestows himself
Like a ripe sister: the woman low,
And browner than her brother? Are not you
The owner of the house I did inquire for?
Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say, we are.

Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both;
And to that youth, he calls his Rosalind,
He sends this bloody napkin. Are you he?

Ros. I am. What must we understand by this?

Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkerchief was stain'd.

Cel. It is hers. I pray you, tell it.

Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a promise to return again
Within an hour; and, pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,
Lo, what befell! he threw his eye aside,
And, mark, what object did present itself!
Under an old oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity,
A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
With who her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlik'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush; under which bush's shade
A lioness, with elders all drawn dry,
Lay couching, head on ground, with catlike watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast,
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead.
This seen, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.

Cel. O! I have heard him speak of that same brother:
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd amongst men.

Oli. And well he might so do,
For well I know he was unnatural.

Ros. But, to Orlando.—Did he leave him there,
Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness?

Oli. Twice did he turn his back, and purpos'd so;
But kindness, nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him: in which hurtling
From miserable slumber I awak'd.

Cel. Are you his brother?

Ros. Was it you he rescu'd?

Cel. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him?

Oli. 'T was I; but 't is not I. I do not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.

Ros. But, for the bloody napkin?

Oli. By and by.

When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recoumends had most kindly bath'd.
As, how I came into that desert place,
In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,
Who gave me fresh array, and entertainment,
Committing me unto my brother's love:
Who led me instantly unto his cave,
There stripp'd himself; and here, upon his arm,
The lioness had torn some flesh away,
Which all this while had bled; and now he fainted,
And cried in fainting upon Rosalind.
Brief, I recover'd him, bound up his wound;
And, after some small space, being strong at heart,
He sent me hither, stranger as I am,
To tell this story, that you might excuse
His broken promise; and to give this napkin,
Dyed in his blood, unto the shepherd youth
That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

cel. Why, how now, Ganymede? sweet Ganymede?
[Rosalind swoons.

oli. Many will swoon when they do look on blood.
cel. There is more in it.—Cousin!—Ganymede!
oli. Look, he recovers.

ros. I would I were at home.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey: patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. 'Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

Touch. A most wicked sir Oliver, Audrey; a most vile Mar-text. But, Audrey; there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis; he hath no interest in me in the world. Here comes the man you mean.

Enter William.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown.

By my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for; we shall be quoting; we cannot hold.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William.

Will. And good even to you, sir.

Touch. Good even, gentle friend. Cover thy head, cover thy head; nay, pr'ythee, be covered. How old are you, friend?

Will. Five and twenty, sir.

Touch. A ripe age. Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Touch. A fair name. Wast born i' the forest here?

Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.

Touch. Thank God:—a good answer. Art rich?

Will. 'Faith, sir, so, so.

Touch. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good:—and yet it is not; it is but so so. Art thou wise?

Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou say'st well. I do now remember a saying; "The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool." The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand. Art thou learned?

Will. No, sir.

* Not in f. o.

Cel. We'll lead you thither.—
I pray you, will you take him by the arm?

Oli. Be of good cheer, youth.—You a man? You lack
A man's heart.

Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah! a body would think this was well counterfeit. I pray you, tell your brother how well I counterfeit. —Heigh ho! —

Oli. This was not counterfeit: there is too great testimony in your complexion, that it was a passion of earnest.

Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you.

Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.

Rhs. So I do; but, 'tis faith, I should have been a woman by right.

Cel. Come; you look paler and paler: pray you, draw homewards.—Good sir, go with us.

Oli. That will I, for I must bear answer back,

How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ros. I shall devise something. But, I pray you, commend my counterfeiting to him.—Will you go?

[Exeunt.]
SCENE III.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

207

Invite the duke, and all's contented followers.

Enter Rosalind.

Go you, and prepare Aliena; for, look you, Here comes my Rosalind.

Ros. God save you, brother.

Otl. And you, fair sister. [Exit.

Ros. O! my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf.

Otl. It is my arm.

Ros. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Ros. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

Otl. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to swoon, when he showed me your handkerchief?

Otl. Ay, and greater wonder than that.

Ros. O! I know where you are.—Nay, 'tis true; there was never anything so sudden, but the flight of two ravens, and Caesar's thraumal cat of—'I came, saw,' and 'overcame!' for your brother and my sister no sooner met, but they looked; no sooner looked, but they loved; no sooner loved, but they sighed: no sooner sighed, but they asked one another the reason: no sooner knew the reason, but they sought the remedy; and in these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage. They are in the very warmth of love, and they will together: clubs cannot part them.

Otl. They shall be married to-morrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptials. But, O! how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! By so much the more shall I to-morrow be at the height of heart-heaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for.

Ros. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

Otl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ros. I will weary you, then, no longer with idle talking. Know of me, then, (for now I speak to some purpose) that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit. I speak not this, that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch, I say, I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good, and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things. I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most profound in his art, and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her? I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any danger.

Otl. Speak'st thou in sober meanings?

Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician. Therefore, put you in your best array, bid your friends, for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall, and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Look: here comes a lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phe. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness, To shew the letter that I write to you.

Ros. I care not, if I have; it is my study To seem despitful and ungentle to you. You are there follow'd by a faithful shepherd:

Look upon him, love him: be worships you.

Phe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears; And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganymede.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service; And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy, All made of passion, and all made of wishes; All adoration, duty, and obedience; All humbleness, all patience, and impatience; All purity, all trial, all observance; And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Phe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Rosalind.

Orl. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Ros. Who do you speak to, 'why blame you me to love you?'

Orl. To her, that is not here, nor doth not hear.

Ros. Pray you, no more of this: 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon.—I will help you, [To Silvius] if I can:—I would love you, [To Phebe] if I could.—To-morrow meet me all together.—I will marry you, [To Phebe] if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow:—I will satisfy you, [To Orlando] if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow:—I will content you, [To Silvius] if what pleases you content you, and you shall be married to-morrow.—As you [To Orlando] love Rosalind, meet;—as you [To Silvius] love Phebe, meet; and as I love no woman, I'll meet.—So, fare you well; I have left you commands.

Sil. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phe. Nor I.

Orl. Nor I. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey: to-morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart, and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world. 2

Touch. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

1 Page. Well met, honest gentleman.

Touch. By my troth, well met. Come, sit; sit, and a song.

2 Page. We are for you; sit i' the middle.

1 Page. Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which is only the prologues to a bad voice?

2 Page. I' faith, I' faith; and both in a tune, like two gypsies on a horse.

Song.

It was a lover, and his loss,
With a key, and a hole, and a hole no more,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass.

In the spring time, the only pretty ring time.

When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding:

Sweet lovers love the spring.

1 observance: in f. e Malone also suggested the change. 2 To be married.
Between the acres of the rye,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nono,
These pretty country folks would lie,
In spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nono,
How that our life was but a flower,
In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nono,
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very unmeaning1.

1 Page. You are deceived, sir: we kept time; we ost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be wi' you; and God mend your voices.—Come, Audrey. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jacques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy can do all this that he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not, As those that fear to hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phebe.

Rosal. Patience, once more, whiles our compact is heard.—

[To the Duke.] You say, if I bring in your Rosalind,
You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give with her.

Rosal. [To Orlando.] And you say, you will have her, when I bring her?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Rosal. [To Phebe.] You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing?

Phebe. That will I, should I die the hour after.

Rosal. But if you do refuse to marry me,
You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Phebe. So is the bargain.

Rosal. [To Silvius.] You say, that you'll have Phebe,
If she will?

Silvius. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Rosal. I have promised to make all this matter even. Keep you your word, O duke! to give your daughter,—You yours, Orlando, to receive her daughter:—
Keep you your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me;
Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd:—
Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her,
If she refuse me—and from hence I go,
To make these doubts all even—even so.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd-boy
Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him,
Me thought he was a brother to your daughter:
But, my lord, this boy is forest-born,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies by his uncle,
Whom he reports to be a great magician,
Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jaq. There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the ark. Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all.

Jaq. Good my lord, bid him welcome. This is the motley-minded gentleman, that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier, he swears.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three ratiors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jaq. And how was that ta'en up?

Touch. 'Faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jaq. How the seventh cause?—Good my lord, like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God 'did' you, sir; I desire you of the like. I press in here, sir, among the rest of the country copulatives, to swear, and to forewarn, according as marriage binds, and blood breaks.—A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own: a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that that no man else will. Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor-house, as your pearl in your foul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such dulcet diseases.

Jaq. But, for the seventh cause; how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed.—Bear your body more seeming, Audrey.—As thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard; he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the "retort courteous." If I sent him word again, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the "quip modest." If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: this is called the "reply churlish." If again, it was not well cut, he would answer, I spake not true: this is called the "reproof valiant." If again, it was not well cut, he would say, I lied: this is the "counter-check quarrelsome;" and so to the "lie circumstantial," and the "lie direct."

Jaq. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no farther than the "lie circumstantial," nor he durst not give me the "lie direct;" and so we measured swords, and parted.

Jaq. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O sir, we quarrel in print, by the book, as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the retort courteous; the second, the quip modest; the third, the reply churlish; the fourth, the reproof valiant; the fifth, the counter-check quarrelsome; the sixth, the lie with circumstance; the seventh, the lie direct. All these you may avoid, but the lie direct; and you may avoid that too, with an if. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an if, as If you said so, then I said so: and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your if is the only peace-maker; much virtue in if.

Jaq. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing, and yet a fool.
Duke S. He uses his folly like a stalking-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, leading Rosalind in woman’s clothes; and Celia. Still Music.

Hym. Then is there mirth in heaven, When earthly things made even Alone together.

Good Duke, receive thy daughter, Hymen from heaven brought her; Yea, brought her hither. That thou mightst join her hand with his, Whose heart within her bosom is.

Ros. [To Duke S.] To you I give myself, for I am yours. To Orlando.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true, Why then, my love adieu!

Ros. [To Duke S.] I’ll have no father, if you be not he:—

[To Orlando.] I’ll have no husband, if you be not he:—

[To Phebe.] Nor ever wed woman, if you be not she.

Hym. Peace, ho! I bar confusion.

’Tis I must make conclusion Of these most strange events: Here’s eight that must take hands, To join in Hymen’s bands. If truth holds true contents.

[To Orlando and Rosalind.] You and you no credit shall part:—

[To Oliver and Celia.] You and you are—

[To Phebe.] You to his love must accord, Or have a woman to your lord:—

[To Touchstone and Audrey.] You and you are sure together, As the winter to foul weather. Whiles a wedlock-hymn we sing, Feed yourselves with questioning. That reason wonder may diminish, How thus we met, and thus we finish.

song.

Wedding is great Juno’s crown; O, blessed bond of board and bed! ’Tis Hymen peoples every town; High wedlock, then, be honoured: Honour, high honour, and renown, To Hymen, god in ev’ry town!

Duke S. O, my dear niece! welcome thou art to me: Even daughter, welcome in no less degree.

Phe. [To Silvius.] I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;

Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.

Enter Second Brother.

2 Bro. Let me have audience for a word or two. I am the second son of old Sir Rowland, That brings these tidings to this fair assembly.— Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day Men of great worth resorted to this forest, Address’d a mighty power, which were on foot; In his own conduct, purposely to take His brother here, and put him to the sword. And to the skirts of this wild wood he came, Where, meeting with an old religious man, After some question with him, was converted Both from his enterprise, and from the world; His crown bequeathing to his banish’d brother, And all their lands restor’d to them again, That were with him exiled. This to be true, I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man Thou offer’st fairly to thy brothers’ wedding: To one, his lands withheld; and to the other, A land itself at large, a potent dukedom. First, in this forest, let us do those ends That here were well begun, and well begot; And after, every of this happy number, That have endure’d shrill days and nights with us, Shall share the good of our returned fortune, According to the measure of their estates. Meantime, forget this new-fall’n dignity, And fall into our rustic revelry.— Play, music! and you brides and bridegrooms all, With measure heap’d in joy, to the measures fall.

Jag. Sir, by your patience.—If I heard you rightly. The duke hath put on a religious life, And thrown into neglect the pompous court? 2 Bro. He hath.

Jag. To him will I: out of these convertives There is much matter to be heard and learn’d.— You [To Duke S.] to your former honour I bequeath; Your patience, and your virtue, well deserve it:— You [To Orlando.] to a love, that your true faith doth merit:— You [To Oliver.] to your land, and love, and great allies:— You [To Silvius.] to a long and well deserved bed:— And you [To Touchstone.] to wrangling; for thy loving voyage Is but for two months victual’d.—So, to your pleasures I am for other than for dancing measures.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jag. To see no pastime, I:—what you would have, I’ll stay to know at your abandon’d cave. [Exit Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites. As we do trust they’ll end, in true delights.

EPILOGUE.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the Epilogue: but it is no more unhandsome, than to see the lord the Prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, ’tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushels, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in, then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play? I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is, to conjure you; and I’ll begin with the women. I charge you, O women! for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please you: and I charge you, O men! for the love you bear to women (as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them) that between you and the women, the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complacements that liked me, and breaths that I defied not: and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces or sweet breaths, will, for my kind offer, when I make courtsey, bid me farewell.

Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord; He cried upon it at the merest loss, And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent: Trust me, I take him for the better dog. Lord. Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet, I would esteem him worth a dozen such. But sup them well, and look unto them all: To-morrow I intend to hunt again. 1 Hun. I will, my lord. Lord. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe? 2 Hun. He breathes, my lord. Were he not warm'd with ale, This were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly. Lord. O, monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image! Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man. What think you, if he were convey'd to bed. Wrapp'd in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers A most delicious banquet by his bed; And brave attendants near him when he wakes, Would not the beggar then forget himself? 1 Hun. Carry him gently to my fairest chamber, And hang it round with all my wanton pictures; Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters. And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet: Procure me music ready when he wakes, To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound; And if he chance to speak, be ready straight, And, with a low submissive reverence, Say,—what is it your honour will command? Let one attend him with a silver bason, Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers, Another bear the ever, the third a diaper, And say,—will 't please your lordship cool your hands? Some one be ready with a costly suit, And ask him what apparel he will wear; Another tell him of his hounds and horse, And that his lady mourns at his disease, Persuade him that he hath been lunatic; When he says what he is,² say that he dreams, For he is nothing but a mighty lord.

1 A common word in the west of England, where it means to chastise, humble.—Gifford. ² Cessa, cease ³ f. e. t says Jeromey. 1 Han. My lord, I warrant you, we will play our part, as he shall think, by our true diligence, he is no less than what we say he is.

Lord. Take him up gently, and to bed with him, and each one to his office when he wakes.—

[Sly is borne out. A trumpet sounds.

Sirrah, go see what trumpet ‘tis that sounds;—

[Exit Servant.

Belike, some noble gentleman, that means, Travelling some journey, to repose him here.—

Re-enter Servant.

How now? who is ‘t? Serv. An ‘t please your honour, players That offer humble service to your lordship.

Lord. Bid them come near.

Enter five or six Players. * Now, fellows, you are welcome, Players. We thank your honour.

2 Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?

2 Play. So please your lordship to accept our duty.

Lord. With all my heart. —This fellow I remember, Since once he play’d a farmer’s eldest son; — T was whereof you were the gentlest man so well, I have forgot thy name; but, sure, that part Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform’d.

1 Play. I think, ‘t was Soto that your honour means.

Lord. ‘T is very true: thou didst it excellent.

Well, you are come to me in happy time, The rather for I have some sport in hand, Wherein your cunning can assist me much. There is a lord will hear you play to-night; But I am doubtful of your modesties, Lest, over-eying of his odd behaviour, (Fer yet his honour never heard a play) You break into some merry passion, And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs, If you should smile he grows impatient.

1 Play. Fear not, my lord: we can contain ourselves, Were he the veriest ant he in the world.

Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery, And give them friendly welcome every one; Let them want nothing that my house affords.—

[Enter and Players.

Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew, my page, To a servant, And shew him dress’d in all suits like a lady: That done, conduct him to the drunkard’s chamber; And call him madam, do him obeisance: Tell him from me, as he will win my love, He bear himself with honourable action, Such as he hath observ’d in noble ladies Unto their lords by them accomplished: Such duty to the drunkard let him do, With soft low tongue, and lowly courtesy; And say, —what is’t your honour will command, Wherein your lady, and your humble wife May show her duty, and make known her love? And then, with kind embracements, tempting kisses, And with declining head into his bosom, Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy’d To see her noble lord rest’d to health. Who for this seven years hath esteem’d him No better than a poor and leafless beggar. And if the boy have not a woman’s gift, To rain a shower of commanded tears, An onion will do well for such a shift, Which, in a napkin being close convey’d, Shall in despite enforce a watery eye.

See this dispatch’d with all the haste thou canst; Anon I’ll give thee more instructions. [Exit Servant

I know, the boy will well usurp the grace, Voice, gait, and action of a gentlewoman: I long to hear him call the drunkard husband, And how my men will stay themselves from laughter. When they do homage to this simple peasant, I’ll in to counsel them; haply, my presence May well abate their over-merry spicen, Which otherwise would grow into extremes. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber in the Lord’s House.

Sly is discovered, with Attendants; some with apparel others withaxon, ever, and appereancres. Enter Lord, dressed like a Servant.

Sly. For God’s sake, a pot of small ale.

1 Serv. Will ’t please your lordship drink a cup of sack?

2 Serv. Will ’t please your honour’s taste of these conserves?

3 Serv. What raiment will your honour wear to-day? Sly. I am Christopher Sly; call not me honour nor lordship: I neer drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserves, I will to my conserves of beef. Neer ask me what raiment I’ll wear, for I have no more doubled than backs, no more stockings then legs nor no more shoes than feet; nay, sometime, more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather.

[Honour!

Lord. Heaven cease this evil humour in your O! that a mighty man of such descent, Of such possessions, and so high esteem, Should be infused with so foul a spirit!

Sly. What! would you make me mad? Am not I Christophero Sly, old Sly’s son of Burton-heath, six years a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat alewife of Wincopt, if she know me no: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for Warwickshire ale, score me up for the lying’st knife in Christendom. What! I am not bestraught! Here’s—

1 Serv. O! this it is that makes your lady mourn.

2 Serv. O! this it is that makes your servants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your house.

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy, O, noble lord! bethink thee of thy birth; Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment, And banish hence these object lowly dreams. Look how thy servants do attend on thee, Each in his office ready at thy beck: Wilt thou have music? hark! Apollo plays, [Musick And twenty caged nightingales do sing: Or wilt thou sleep? we’ll have thee to a couch, Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed On purpose trimm’d up for Semiramis. Say thou wilt walk, we will bestrew the ground Or wilt thou ride, thy horses shall be trapp’d. Their harness studded all with gold and pearl. Dost thou love hawking? thou hast hawks will soar Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt? Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them, And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

1 Serv. Say thou wilt course, thy greyhounds are as swift
As breathed stags, ay, fleeter than the roe.

2 Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee straight Adonis painted by a running brook,
And Cytherea all in hedges hid,
Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. We'll show thee lo as she was a maid,
And how she was beguiled and surpris'd,
As lively painted as the deed was done.

3 Serv. Or Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds;
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord:
Thou hast a lady, far more beautiful
Than any woman in this waning age.

1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee,
Like eunous floods, &e'ran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world;
And yet she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord ? and have I such a lady?
Or do I dream? or have I dream'd till now?
I do not sleep: I see, I hear, I speak:
I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things.
Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed,
And not a tinker, nor Christopher Sly.
Well, bring the lady hither to our sight:
And once again, a pot o' the smallest ale.

2 Serv. Will 't please your mightiness to wash your hands?

[Servants present an ever, bason, and napkin.
O, how we joy to see your wits restor'd!
O, that once more, you knew but what you are!
These fifteen years you have been in a dream;
Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.
Sly. These fifteen years! by my fay, a goodly nap.
But did I never speak of all that time?
1 Serv. O! yes, my lord, but very idle words;
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say, ye were beaten out of door.
And rai upon the hostess of the house
And say you would present her at the leet,
Because she brought stone jugs, and not seal'd quart.
Sometimes you would call out for Cieley Hacket.
Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house. [maid,
3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house, nor no such Nor no such men, as you have reckon'd up,
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turf, and Henry Pimpnerell,
And twenty more such names and men as these,
Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends.

All. Amen.

Sly. I thank thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page, as a Lady, with Attendants.

Page. How fares my noble lord?

Sly. Marry, I tare welt; for here is cheer enough.

Where is my wife?

Page. Here, noble lord: what is thy will with her?

Sly. Are you my wife, and will not call me husband?

My men should call me lord: I am your good-man.

Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband;

I am your wife in all obedience.

Sly. I know it well.—What must I call her?

Lord. Madam.

Sly. Alice madam, or Joan madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else: so lords call ladies
Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd,

And slept about some fifteen year and more.

Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me,

Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Sly. 'Tis much.—Servants, leave me and her alone.

Madam, undress you, and come now to bed.

Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you

To pardon me yet for a night or two;

Or if not so, until the sun be set,

For your physicians have expressly charg'd,

In peril to incur your former malady,

That I should yet absent me from your bed.

I hope this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so, that I may hardly tarry so long:

but I would be loath to fall into my dreams again,

I will therefore tarry, in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Your honour's players, hearing your amendment,

Are come to play a pleasant comedy:

For so your doctors hold it very meet,

Seeing too much sadness hath conceiv'd your blood,

And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy:

Therefore, they thought it good you hear a play,

And frame your mind to mirth and Merriment,

Which bars a thousand harms and lengthens life.

Sly. Marry, I will; let them play it. Is not a commonty a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, my good lord: it is more pleasing stuff.

Sly. What, household stuff?

Page. It is a kind of history.

Sly. Well, we'll see 't. Come, madam wife, sit by my side,

We shall never be younger, and let the world slide.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Padua. A Public Place.

Enter Lucentio and Tranio.

Lu. Tranio, since, for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd for fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And, by my father's love and leave, arm'd
With his good will, and thy good company,
My trusty servant, well approv'd in all,
Here let us breathe, and haply institute

Court leet. 1 Sealed or stamped as full quart measure. 2 above in f. e. 4 And let the world slip: we shall never be younger in.
So pray, I say, a devil. Think'st thou, Hortensio, thou her father be very rich, any man is so very a fool to be married to hell? Hor. Tush, Gremio! though it pass your patience and mine, to endure her loud alarums, why, man, there be good fellows in the world, an a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough. Gre. I cannot tell, but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition—to be whipped at the high-cross every morning. Hor. 'Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apples. But, come; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained, till by helping Baptist's eldest daughter to a husband we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have't areset. Sweet Bianca!—Happy man be his doe! He that runs fastest gets the ring. How say you, signior Gremio? Gre. I am agreed: and 'would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing, that would thoroughly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and rid the house of her. Come on.

Exit Gremio and Hortensio.
I never thought it possible, or likely.
But see! while idly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness;
And now in plainness do confess to thee,
That art to me as secret, and as dear,
As Anna to the Queen of Carthage was,
Tranio, I burn, I pine: I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl.
Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst
Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

T. Master, it is no time to chide you now;
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love have touch’d you, nought remains but so,— Redeem to captian, quam quos minimi.¹

L. Gramercies, lad; go forward: this contents;
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel’s sound.

T. Master, you look’d so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark’d not what’s the pith of all.

L. O! yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agenor’s race,²
That made great Jove to humble him to her hand,
When with his knees he kiss’d the Cretan strand.

T. Saw you no more? mark’d you not, how her sister
Began to scold, and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might scarce endure the din?

L. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move,
And with her breath she did perfume the air:
Sacred, and sweet, was all I saw in her.

T. Nay, then, ’tis time to stir him from his trance.—
I pray, awake, sir; if you love the maid.
Bond thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands:
Her elder sister is so erust and shrewd,
That, till the father rid his hands of her,
Master, your love must live a maid at home;
And therefore has he closely mew’d her up,
Because she will not be annoy’d with suitors.

L. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father’s he!
But art thou not advis’d, he took some care
To get her cunning masters to instruct her?

T. Ay, marry am I, sir; and now’t is plotted.

L. I have it, Tranio.

T. Master, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.

L. Tell me thine first.

T. You will be schoolmaster.
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That’s your device.

L. It is: may it be done?

T. Not possible; for who shall bear your part,
And be in Padua, here, Vincentio’s son?
Keep house, and ply his book; welcome his friends:
Visit his countrypmen, and banquet them?

L. Basta; content thee; for I have it full.
We have not yet been seen in any house,
Nor can we be distinguish’d by our faces,
For man, or master: then, it follows thus:
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead.
Keep house, and port, and servants, as I should.
I will some other be; some Florentine.
Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Pisa.
’Tis hatch’d, and shall be so:—Tranio, at once
Uncase thee; take my colour’d hat and cloak:
When Biondello comes, he waits on thee,
But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.

T. So had you need. [They exchange habits.
Be brief, then, sir; stith your pleasure is,
And I am tied to be obedient;
For so your father charg’d me at our parting;

"Be serviceable to my son," quoth he,
Although, I think, 'twas in another sense,
I am content to be Lucentio,
Because so well I love Lucentio,

L. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves.
And let me be a slave, I’l achieve that maid
Whose sudden sight hath thrill’d my wondering eye.

Enter Biondello.

Here comes the rogue.—Sirrah, where have you been?

B. Where have I been? Nay, how now? where are you?
Master, has my fellow Tranio stoln your clothes,
Or you stoln his, or both? pray, what’s the news?

L. Sirrah, come hither: ’tis no time to jest,
And therefore frame your manners to the time.
Your fellow Tranio, here, to save my life,
Puts my apparel and my countenance on,
And for my escape have put on his;
In for a quarrel, since I came ashore,
I kill’d a man, and fear I was descried.
Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,
While I make way from hence to save my life.
You understand me?

B. I, sir? ne’er a whit.

L. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth:
Tranio is chang’d into Lucentio.

B. The better for him; ’twould I were so too!

T. So would I, faith, boy, to have the next wist after,
That Lucentio, indeed, had Baptista’s youngest daughter.
But, sirrah, not for my sake, but your master’s, I advise
You use your manners discreetly in all kind of companies:
When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio;
But in all places else, your master, Lucentio.

L. Tranio, let’s go.—
One thing more rests, that thyself execute;
To make one among these wooers: if thou ask me why,
Sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty.

---

Ent.

S. My lord, you nod; you do not mind the play
S. Yes, by saint Anne, do I. A good matter surely: comes there any more of it?

P. My lord, ’tis but begun.

---

Ent.

S. ’Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady; wouldn’t we done?

---

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Hortensio’s House

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

P. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
To see my friends in Padua; but, of all,
My best beloved and approved friend,
Hortensio; and, I trow, this is his house.—
Here, sirrah Grumio! knock. I say.

G. Knock, sir! whom should I knock? is there any man has rebused your worship?

P. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.

G. Knock you here, sir? why, sir, what am I, sir that I should knock you here, sir?

P. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate;
And rap me well, or I’ll knock your knave’s pate.

G. My master is grown quarrelsome. I should knock you first,
And then I know after who comes by the worst.

P. Will it not be?

G. Faith, sirrah, an you’ll not knock, I’ll wring it:
I’ll try how you can sol, fa, and sing it.

[He wrings Grumio by the ears]
Scene II.
TAMING OF THE SWEAR.

Gru. Help, masters, help! my master is mad.

[GRUMIO FALLS DOWN.

Enter Hortensio.

Hor. How now! what's the matter?—My old friend Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio!—How do you all at Verona?

Pet. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

Hor. Alas nastru casa ben venuto, molto honorato signor mio Petruchio.

Rise, Grumio, rise: we will compound this quarrel.

Gru. [Rising.] Nay, 'tis no matter, sir, what he leges in Latin.—If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service,—Look you, sir—he bid me knock him, and rap him soundly, sir:

Well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so;
Being, perhaps, (for aught I see) two and thirty,—a pip'm a Whom, 'twould to God, I had well knock'd at first, Then had not Grumio come by the worst.

Pet. A senseless villain!—Good Hortensio, I hage the rascal knock upon your gate, And cannot get him for my heart to do it.

Gru. Knock at the gate?—O heavens! Spake you not these words plain,—'Sirrah, knock me here; rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly?'

And come you now with knocking at the gate?

Pet. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you.

Hor. Petruchio, patience: I am Grumio's pledge. Why this? a heavy chance 'twixt him and you, Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio.

And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale Blows you to Padua, here, from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as scatters young men through the world,
To seek their fortunes farther than at home, Where small experience grows. But in a few, Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me: Antonio, my father, is deceased;
And I have thrust myself into this maze, Happly to wife, and thrive, as best I may.

Crowns in my purse I have, and goods at home, And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee, And wish thee to a shrewd ill-favoured wife? Thou 'dst thank me but a little for my counsel; And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich, And very rich:—but thou'rt too much my friend, And I'll not wish thee to her.

Pet. Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friends as we Few words suffice; and therefore, if thou know One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife.

(As wealth is burthen of my wooing dance)
Be she as soft as was Florentius' love,
As old as Sybil, and as curst and shrewd
As Socrates' Xantippe, or even worse,
She moves me not, or not removes, at least,
Affection's edge in me. Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatic seas,
I came to wive it wealthily in Padua;
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Gru. Nay, look you, sir, he tells you flatly what his mind is:— why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet, or an aiglet-baby; or an old trot with n'er a tooth in her head, though she have as many diseases as two and fifty horses. Why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal.

Hor. Petruchio, since we are stepp'd thus far in, I will continue that I broach'd in jest.

Pet. Petruchio, help thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous: Brought up, as best becomes a gentlewoman: Her only fault, and that is faults enough, Is, that she is intolerably curst, And shrewd, and froward; so beyond all measure, That were my state far worser than it is, I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Pet. Hortensio, peace! thou know'st not gold's effect.—

Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough, For I will board her, though she chide as loud As thunder, when the clouds in Autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola, An affable and courteous gentleman: Her name is Katharina Minola, Renown'd in Padua for her solding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her, And he knew my deceased father well. I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her; And therefore let me be thus bold with you, To give you over at this first encounter, Unless you will accompany me thither.

Gru. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humour lasts. 'O' my word, an she knew him as well as I do, she would think solding would do little good upon him. She may, perhaps, call him half a score knaves or so; why, that's nothing: an he begin once, he'll ball in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir,—an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it, that she shall have no more eyes to see within than a cat. You know him not, sir.

Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee, For in Baptista's keep my treasure is: He hath the jewel of my life in hold. His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca, And her withholds from me, and other more Suitors to her, and rivals in my love; Supposing it a thing impossible, For those defects I have before rehearsed, That ever Katharina will be woor'd: Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en, That none shall have access unto Bianca, Till Katharina the curst have got a husband.

Gru. Katharine the curst! A little for a maid of all titles the worst.
Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace, And offer me, disguised in sober robes, To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca; That so I may by this device, at least Have leave and leisure to make love to her, And unsuspected court her by herself.

Enter Gremio, and Luciento disguised, with books under his arm.

Gru. Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Master, master, look about you: who goes there? ha! Hor. Peace, Grumio; 'tis the rival of my love.
Petruchio, stand by a while.
Petruchio. A proper stripping, and an amorous! [They retire.

Gru. O! very well; I have perus'd the note. Hark you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound: All books of love, see that at any hand,
And see you read no other lectures to her.
You understand me.—Over and beside Signior Baptista’s liberality,
I’ll mend it with a largess.—Take your papers, too,
And let me have them very well perfum’d,
For she is sweeter than perfume itself,
To whom they go. What will you read to her?
Luc. Whate’er I read to her, I’ll plead for you,
As for my patron; stand you so assur’d,
As firmly as yourself were still in place:
Yea, and perhaps with more successful words
Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir.
Gr. Q, this learning, what a thing it is!
Gr. Q, this woodcock, what an ass it is!
Pet. Peace, sirrah!
Hor. Grumio, mum! —[Coming forward.] God save you, signior Gremio!
Gr. And you are well met, signior Hortensio.
Trew you, whither I am going?—To Baptista Minola.
I promise’d to inquire carefully
About a master for the fair Bianca;
And, by good fortune, I have lighted well
On this young man; for learning and behaviour,
Fit for her turn; well read in poetry,
And other books,—good ones, I warrant ye.
Hor. ’Tis well; and I have met a gentleman
Hath promise’d me to help me to another,
A fine musician to instruct our mistress:
So shall I no whit be behind in duty
To fair Bianca, so belov’d of me.
Gr. Belov’d of me, and that my deeds shall prove.
Gru. And that his bags shall prove.
Hor. Gremio, ’tis now time to vent our love.
Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I’ll tell you news indifferent good for either.
Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met,
Upon agreement from us to his liking,
Will undertake to woo curst Katharina:
Yes, and to marry her, if her dowry please.
Gr. So said, so done, is well.—
Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?
Pet. I know, she is an irksome, brawling scold:
If that be all, masters, I hear no harm.
Gr. No, say’st me so, friend? What countryman?
My father dead, my fortune lives for me;
And I do hope good days, and long, to see.
Gr. O! sir, such a life with such a wife were strange;
But if you have a stomach, to ‘t o’ God’s name:
You shall have me assisting you in all.
But will you woo this wild cat?
Pet. Will I live?
Gru. Will he woo her? ay, or I’ll hang her.
Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent? Think you, a little din can daunt mine ears?
Have I not in my time heard lions roar?
Have I not heard the sea, puff’d up with winds, rage like an angry boar, chafed with sweat?
Have I not heard great ordnance in the field,
And heaven’s artillery thunder in the skies?
Have I not in a pitched battle heard
Loud thunder from neighing steeds, and trumpets’ elang?
And do you tell me of all this to me,
That gives not half so great a blow to hear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer’s fire?
Dash! dash! fear boys with bogs.
Gru. For he fears none.
Hortensio, hark.
This gentleman is happily arriv’d,
My mind presumes, for his own good, and ours.
Hor. I promise’d we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoe’er.
Gru. And so we will, provided that he win her.
Hor. I would, I were as sure of a good dinner.
Enter Tranio, bravely apparel’d; and Biondello.
Tran. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be bold
Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way
To the house of signior Baptista Minola?
Bion. He that has the two fair daughters:—is’t he mean?
Tran. Even he, Biondello.
Gru. Hark you, sir: you mean not her to—
Tran. Perhaps, him and her, sir: what have you to do?
Pet. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray
Tran. I love no chiders, sir. —Biondello, let’s away.
Luc. Well begun, Tranio.
[Aside]
Hor. Sir, a word ere you go
Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea, or no?
Tran. An if I be, sir, is it any offence?
Gr. No; if without more words you will get you hence,
Tran. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me, as for you?
Gr. But so is not she.
Tran. For what reason, I beseech you?
Gr. For this reason, if you’ll know,
That she’s the choice love of signior Gremio.
Hor. That she’s the chosen of signior Hortensio.
Tran. Softly, my masters! if you be gentlemen,
Do me this right; hear me with patience.
Baptista is a noble gentleman,
To whom my father is not all unknown;
And were his daughter fairer than she is,
She may more suitors have, and me for one.
Fair Leda’s daughter had a thousand wooers;
Then, well one may more fair Bianca have,
And so she shall. Lucentio shall make one,
Though Paris came in hope to speed alone.
Gru. What! this gentleman will out-talk us all
Luc. Sir, give him head: I know, he’ll prove a jade.
Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?
Hor. Sir, let me be so bold as ask you.
Did you yet ever see Baptista’s daughter?
Tran. No, sir; but hear I do, that he hath two,
The one as famous for a scolding tongue,
As is the other for beauteous modesty.
Pet. Sir, sir, the first’s for me; let her go by.
Gru. Yea, leave that labour to great Heracleus.
And let it be more than Alectes’ twelve.
Pet. Sir, understand you this of me: insooth.
The youngest daughter, whom you hearten for
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
And will not promise her to any man,
Until the elder sister first be wed;
The younger then is free, and not before.
Tran. If it be so, sir, that you are the man
Must stand us all, and me among the rest;
And if you break the ice, and do this feat; Achieve the elder, set the younger free.
For our access, whose hap shall be to have her
Will not so graceless be to be ingrate.
Hor. Sir, you say well, and well you do conceive,
And since you do profess to be a suitor,
You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman,
To whom we all rest generally beholding.
Tran. Sir, I shall not slack: in sign whereof,
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in BAPTISTA'S HOUSE.

Enter Katharina and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself
To make a bondmaid, and a slave of me;
That I disdain; but for these other gards?
Unbind my hands, I'll put them off myself.
Yea, all my raiment, to my petition;
Or what you will command me will I do,
So well I know my duty to my elders.
Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee, tell
What thou lov'st best; see thou dissemble not.
Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive,
I ever yet beheld that special face
Which I could fancy more than any other.
Kath. Munion, thou hast. Is 't not Hortensio?
Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear,
I'll plead for you myself, but you shall have him.
Kath. O! then, belike, you fancy riches more:
You will have Gremio to keep you fair.
Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?
Nay then, you jest; and now I well perceive,
You have but jested with me all this while.
I pr'ythee, sister Kate, unloose my hands.

[Enter BAPTISTA.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this insolence?
Bianca stands aside—poor woman! she weeps.
Go play thy needle; meddle not with her.
For shame, thou holding of a devilish spirit,
Why dost thou wrong her that did ne'er wrong thee?
When did she cross thee with a bitter word?
Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I'll be reveng'd.

[Exeunt Katharina and Bianca.

Enter BAPTISTA.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this insolence?
Bian. [Holding her.] What! in my sight?—Bianca, get thee in.

Kath. What! will you not suffer me? Nay, now I see,
She is your treasure, she must have a husband;
I must dance barefoot on her wedding-day,
And for your love to her lapes in hell.
Talk not to me: I will go sit and weep,
Till I can find occasion of revenge.

[Exit Katharina.

Bap. Was ever gentlewoman thus grieved as I?
But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, with Lucentio in a mean habit: PETRU-chino, with Hortensio as a Musician; and Tranio, with Bonducelli bearing a lute and books.

Gremio, Good-morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good-morrow, neighbour Gremio. God save you, gentlemen!

Pet. And you, good sir. Pray, have you not a daughter,
Call’d Katharina, fair, and virtuous?
Bap. I have a daughter, sir, call’d Katharina.

Gre. You are too blunt: go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me, signior Gremio: give me leave—
I am a gentleman of Verona, sir,
That, hearing of her beauty, and her wit,
Her affability, and bashful modesty,

Gru. Bion. O, excellent motion! Fellows, let's be gone.

Hor. The motion's good indeed, and be it so.—

Petrequio, I shall be your ben venuto. [Exeunt.

Her woman's qualities, and mild behaviour
Am bold to show myself a forward guest
Within your house, to make mine eye the witness
Of that report which I so oft have heard.
And, for an entrance to my entertainment,
I do present you with a man of mine.

[Presenting HORTENSIO.

Cunning in music, and the mathematics,
To instruct her fully in those sciences,
Whereof, I know, she is not ignorant.
Accept of him, or else you do me wrong:
His name is Licio, born in Mantua.

Bap. You're welcome, sir, and he, for your good sake.
But for my daughter Katharine, this I know,
She is not for your turn; the more my grief.

Pet. I see, you do not mean to part with her.
Or else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not; I speak but as I find.
Whence are you, sir? what may I call your name?

Pet. Petruchio is my name, Antonio's son.
A man well known throughout all Italy.

Bap. I know him well: you are welcome for his sake.

Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray,
Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too.

Backare: you are marvellous forward.

Pet. O! pardon me, signior Gremio: I would fain be doing good.

Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your doing.

Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure of it.
To express the like kindness myself, that have been more kindly beholding to you than any, I freely give unto you this young scholar, [Presenting LUCENTIO] that hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematics. His name is Cambio; pray accept his service.

Bap. A thousand thanks, signior Gremio: welcome, good Cambio,—But, gentle sir, [To Tranio.] methinks, you walk like a stranger: may I be so bold to know
the cause of your coming?

Tra. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own
That, being a stranger in this city here,
Do make myself a suitor to your daughter,
Unto Bianca, fair, and virtuous.

Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me,
In the preferment of the eldest sister.
This liberty is all that I request—
That, upon knowledge of my parentage,
I may have welcome 'mongst the rest that woe,
And free access and favour as the rest:
And, toward the education of your daughters,
I here bestow a simple instrument,
And this small packet of Greek and Latin books.
If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name? of whence, I pray?

Tr. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio.

Bap. A mighty man of Pisa: by report
I know him well. You are very welcome, sir—

1 The Latin contains pass or pena. 2 goods: in f. e. 3 lordly. 4 wondrous: in f. e. 5 A word often used; it means stand back.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

ACT VI.

Take you [To Hor.] the lute, and you [To Luc.] the set of books;
You shall go see your pupils presently,
Holla, within!

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead these gentlemen
To my daughters; and tell them both,
These are their tutors: bid them use them well.

[Exit Servant, with Hortensio, Lucentio, and Biondello.]

We will go walk a little in the orchard,
And then to dinner. You are passing welcome.
And so I pray you all to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste,
And every day I cannot come to wo.
You knew my father well, and in him, me,
Left solely heir to all his lands and goods,
Which I have better'd rather than decreas'd:
Then, tell me,—if I get your daughter's love,
What dowry shall I have with her to wife?

Bap. After my death, the one half of my lands,
And in possession twenty thousand crowns.

Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survive me,
In all my lands and leases whatsoever.
Let specialties be therefore drawn between us,
That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd,
That is, her love; for that is all in all.

Pet. Why, that is nothing: for I tell you, father,
I am as peremptory, as she proud-minded;
And where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury.
Though little fire grows great with little wind,
Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all;
So I to her, and so she yields to me,
For I am rough, and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well may'st thou won, and happy be thy speed!
But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words.

Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for winds,
That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken.

Bap. How now, my friend! why dost thou look so pale?
Hor. Fo, fear, I promise you, if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician?
Hor. I think, she'll sooner prove a soldier:
Iron may hold with her, but never lutes.

Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute?
Hor. Why no, for she hath broke the lute to me.
I did but tell her she mistook her fires,
And bode'd her hand to teach her fingering.
When, with a most impatient, devilish spirit, [them:]
"Frets, call you these?" quoth she: "I'll tune with
And with that word she struck me on the head,
And through the instrument my pate made way;
And there I stood amazed for a while,
As on a pillow looking through the lute,
While she did call me rascal fiddler,
And twangling Jack, with twenty such vile terms,
As she had studied to misuse me so.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench!
I love her ten times more than c'er I did:
O, how I long to have some chat with her!
Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so discontented;
Proceed in patience with my younger daughter;
She's apt to learn, and thankful for good turns.—
Signior Petruchio, will you go with us,
Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you?

Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here,

[Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, and Hortensio.
And woo her with some spirit when she comes.
Say, that she rail; why, then I'll tell her plain,
She sings as sweetly as a nightingale.
Say, that she frown; I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew:
Say, she be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And say, she utterest piercing eloquence:
If she do bid me pack, I'll give her thanks,
As though she bid me stay by her a week:
If she deny to wed, I'll crave the day
When I shall ask the banns, and when be married.—
But here she comes; and now, Petruchio, speak.

Enter Katharina.

Good-morrow, Kate, for that's your name, I hear.

Kath. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:
They call me Katharine that do talk of me.

Pet. You lie, in faith; for you are call'd plain Kate,
And bonny Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst;
But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom;
Kate of Kate-hall, my super-dainty Kate.
For dainties are all eats; and therefore, Kate,
Take this of me, Kate of my consolation:—
Hearing thy mildness prais'd in every town,
Thy virtues spoke of, and thy beauty sounded,
Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs,
Myself am mov'd to woo thee for my wife.

Kath. Mov'd! in good time: let him that mov'd you hither,
Remove you hence. I knew you at the first,
You were a moveable.

Pet. Why, what's a moveable?

Kath. A joint-stool.

Pet. Thou hast hit it: come, sit on me.

Kath. Asses are made to bear, and so are you.

Pet. Women are made to bear, and so are you.

Kath. No such jade to bear you, if me you mean.

Pet. Alas, Good Kate! I will not burden thee;
For, knowing thee to be but young and light,—
Kath. Too light for such a swain as you to catch,
And yet as heavy as my weight should be.

Pet. Should be? should buzz.

Kath. Well ta'en, and like a buzzard.

Pet. O, slow-wing'd turtle! shall a buzzard take thee?

Kath. Ay, for a turtle, as he takes a buzzard.

Pet. Come, come, you wasp; you're not too faith, you are too angry.

Kath. If I be waspish, best beware my sting.

Pet. My remedy is, then, to pluck it out.

Kath. Ay, if the fool could find out where it lies.

Pet. Who knows not where a wasp does wear his sting?

In his tail.

Kath. In his tongue.

Pet. Whose tongue?

Kath. Yours, if you talk of tails; and so farewell.

Pet. What! with my tongue in your tail? nay, come again:

Good Kate, I am a gentleman.

Kath. That I'll try. [Striking him
Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike again.

Kath. So may you lose your arms:
If you strike me you are no gentleman,
And if no gentleman, why, then no arms.

Pet. A herald, Kate? O! put me in thy books.

Kath. What is your crest? a oxcomb?"
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Pet. A comely cook, so Kate will be my hen.
Kath. No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.
Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so sour.
Kath. It is my fashion when I see a crab.
Pet. Why, there’s no crab, and therefore look not sour.
Kath. There is, there is.
Pet. Then show it me.
Kath. Had I a glass I would.
Pet. What, you mean my face?
Kath. Well aim’d of such a young one.
Pet. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for you.
Kath. Yet you are wither’d.
Pet. ’Tis with cares.
Kath. I care not.
Pet. Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth, thou’rescape not so.
Kath. I chafe you, if I tarry: let me go.
Pet. No, not a whit: I find you passing gentle.
’T was told me, you were rough, and coy, and sullen.
And now I find report a very liar;
For thou art pleasant, gamose, passing courteous.
But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flowers.
Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will:
Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk:
But thou with mildness entertain’s thy wooers,
With gentle conference, soft and affable.
Why does the world report that Kate doth limp?
O, slanderous world! Kate, like the hazel-twigs,
Is straight, and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels.
O! let me see thee walk: thou dost not halt.
Kath. Go, fool, and whom thou keep’st command.
Pet. Did ever Dian so become a grove,
As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?
O! be thou Dian, and let her be Kate,
And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportful.
Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech?
Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.
Kath. A witty mother! witless else her son.
Pet. Am I not wise?
Kath. Yes; keep you warm.
Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed.
And therefore, setting all this chat aside,
Thus in plain terms—your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife: you dowry ‘greed on,
And, will you, till you, I will marry you.
Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;
For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well,
Thou must be married to no man but me:
For I am he, am born to tame you, Kate,
And bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate
Conformable, as other household Kates.
Here comes your father: never make denial;
Must and will have Katharine to my wife.
Exeunt Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio.
Bap. Now, sir, Petruchio, how speed you with your daughter?
Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?
It were impossible I should speed amiss.
Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine! in your dumps?
Kath. Call you me, daughter? now, I promise you,
You have show’d a tender fatherly regard,
To wish me wed to one half lunatic;
A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack,
That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.
Pet. Father, ’tis thus—yourself and all the world,
That talk’d of her, have talk’d amiss of her.
If she be curst, it is for policy,
For she’s not froward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the moon;
For patience she will prove a second Grissell,
And Roman Lucrece for her chastity;
And to conclude, we have ‘greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding-day.
Kath. I’ll see thee hang’d on Sunday first.
Gre. Petruchio: she says, she’ll see thee hang’d first.
Tra. Is this your speeding? nay then, good night our past.
Pet. Be patient, gentlemen; I choose her for myself
If she and I be pleas’d, what’s that to you?
’T is bargain’d ‘twixt us twain, being alone,
That she shall still be curst in company.
I tell you, ’tis incredible to believe
How much she loves me. O, the kindest Kate!
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love.
O! you are novices! ’tis a world to see;
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock° wretch can make the onrest shrew—
Give me thy hand, Kate: I will unto Venice,
To buy apparel ‘gainst the wedding-day.—
Provide the feast, father, and bid the guests,
I will be sure! my Katharine shall be fine.
Bap. I know not what to say; but give me your hands:
God send you joy! Petruchio, ’t is a match.
Gre. Tra. Amen, say we: we will be witnesses.
Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu.
I will to Venice; Sunday comes apace.
We will have rings, and things, and fine array;
And, kiss me, Kate, we will be married o’ Sunday.
[Exeunt Petruchio and Katharine, secretly.
Gre. Was ever match clapp’d up so suddenly?
Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant’s part,
And venture madly on a desperate mart.
Tra. ’T was a commodity lay fretting by you:
’T will bring you gain, or perish on the seas.
Bap. The gain I seek is quiet in the match.
Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch.—
But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter.
Now is the day we long have looked for:
I am your neighbour, and was suitor first.
Tra. And I am one, that love Bianca more
Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess.
Gre. Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I
Tra. Grey-beard, thy love doth freeze.
Gre. But thine doth fly
Slipper, stand back: ’tis age, that nourisheth.
Tra. But youth, in ladies’ eyes, that flourisheth Bap. Content you, gentlemen; I’ll compound this strife:
’Tis deeds must win the prize; and he, of both.
That can assure my daughter greatest dower,
Shall have my Bianca’s love.—
Say, signior Gremio, what can you assure her?
Gre. First, as you know, my house within the city
Is richly furnished with plate and gold:
Basons, and ewers, to have her dainty hands;
My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry:
In ivory coffers I have stuff’d my crowns;
In eypress chests my arras, counterpoints,
Costly apparel, tents, and canopies,
Nor set on f. 2 mor. in f. 0. ° A proverbial phrase, worth a world to see.
° Cowardly.
Fine linen, Turkey cushions boss'd with pearl,
Valancie of Venice gold in needle-work,
Powder and brass, and all things that belong
To house, or housekeeping: then, at my farm,
I have a hundred mitch-kine to the pair,
Six score fat oxen standing in my stalls,
And all things answerable to this portion.
Myself am struck in years. I must confess;
And if I die to-morrow this is hers,
If whilst I live she will be only mine.

Tra. That "only" came well in.—Sir, list to me:
I am my father's heir, and only son:
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
I'll leave her houses three or four as good,
Within rich Pisa walls, as any one
Old signior Gremio has in Padua;
Besides two thousand ducats by the year
Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure.
What, have I pinched you, signior Gremio?

Gre. Two thousand ducats by the year of land!
My land amounts not so much in all:
That she shall have: besides an argosy,
That now is lying in Marseilles' road—
What, have I chock'd you with an argosy?

Tra. Gremio, 'tis known, my father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two galliasses,
And twelve tight galleys: these I will assure her,
And twice as much, whate'er thou offer'st next.

Gre. Nay, I have offer'd all. I have no more:
And she can have no more than all I have:—

If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tra. Why, then, the maid is mine from all the world,
By your firm promise: Gremio is out-vied.

Bap. I must confess your offer is the best;
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own; else, you must pardon me:

If you should die before him, where's her dowry?

Tra. 'That's but a cavil: he is old, I young.
Gre. And may not young men die, as well as old?

Bap. Well, gentlemen.
I am thus resolv'd.—On Sunday next, you know,
My daughter Katharine is to be married:
Now, on the Sunday following shall Bianca
Be bride to you, if you make this assurance:
If not, to signior Gremio:
And so I take my leave, and thank you both. [Exit.

Gre. Adieu, good neighbour. Now I hear thee not:
Sirrah, young gamerster, your father were a fool
To give thee all, and, in his waning age,
Set foot under thy table. Tut, a toy!
An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy.

'Tis now I hove on the yard of ten;
Yet I have faced it with a card of ten;
'Tis in my head to do my master good:—
I see no reason, but suppose'd Lucentio
Must get a father, call'd—supposed Vincentio;
And that's a wonder: fathers, commonly,
Do get their children; but in this case of winning,
A child shall get a sire, if I fail not of my cunning.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A room in Baptista's house.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fiddler, fo'c'slar: you grow too forward, sir.
Have you so soon forgot the entertainment
Her sister Katharine welcome'd you withal?

Hor. Tut, wrangling pedant! I avouch, this is
The patrooness of heavenly harmony:
Then, give me leave to have prerogative;
And when in music we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous ass, that never read so far
To know the cause why music was ordain'd!
Was it not to refresh the mind of man,
After his studies, or his usual pain?
Then, give me leave to read Philosophy,
And whilst I pause serve in your harmony.

Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these brave of thine.

Bian. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong,
To strive for that which rests in my choice:
I am no breeching scholar in the schools;
I'll not be tied to hours, nor pointed times,
But learn my lessons as I please myself.
And, to cut off all strife, here sit we down:—
Take you your instrument, play you the whiles;
His lecture will be done, ere you have bade'd.

Hor. You'll leave his lecture when I am in tune?

[Hortensio retires.

Luc. That will be never:—tune your instrument.

Bian. Where left we last?

Luc. Here, madam:—

Hoc igitur Simois; his est Sigeia tellus;
Hic steterat Priami regia celsa semis.

1. An old proverbial expression. 2. wooing: in i.e. 3. But, wrangling pedant this is: in i.e. 4. Not in i.e.
And watch withal; for, but I be deceiv'd,
Our wise musician growth so amorous.

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art;
To teach you gamut in a briered sort,
More pleasant, pity, and effectual.

Bion. Why, I am past my gamut long ago.

Hor. Yet read the gamut of Hortensio.

Bion. [Reads.] Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
A re. to plead Hortensio's passion;
B mi. Bianca, take him for thy lord,
C faut. that loves with all affection;
D sol re. one cliff, two notes have I;
E la mi. show pity, or I die.

Call you this gamut? tut! I like it not:
Old fashions please me best: I am not so nice,
To change true rules for new inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books.
And help to dress your sister's chamber up:
You know, to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bion. Farewell, sweet masters; both I must be gone.

[Exeunt Bianca and Servant.

Luc. 'Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

Bion. But I have cause to pry into this pedant:
Methinks, he looks as though he were in love.—
Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble,
To cast thy wandering eyes on every state,
Seize thee that list: if once I find thee ranging,
Hortensio will be quit thee with by changing.

[Exit.}

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Baptista's House.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katharina, Bianca, Luciento, and Attendants.

Bap. Signior Luciento, this is the pointed day
That Katharine and Petruchio should be married,
And yet we hear not of our son-in-law.
What will be said? what mockery will it be,
To want the bridegroom, when the priest attends
To speak the ceremonious rites of marriage?
What says Luciento to this shame of ours?

Kath. No shame but mine; I must, forsooth, be fore'd
To give my hand, oppose 'gainst my heart,
Unto a mad-brain ridlesby, full of spleen:
Who would in haste, and means to wed at leisure.
I told you, I, he was a frantic fool,
Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour;
And to be noted for a merry man,
He'll woo a thousand, point the day of marriage,
Make friends, invite, yes, and proclaim the banes;
Yet never means to wed where he hath woor'd.
Now must the world point at poor Katharine,
And say,—'Lo, there is mad Petruchio's wife,
If it would please him come and marry her.'

Tran. Patience, good Katharine, and Baptista too.
Upon my life, Petruchio means but well,
Whatever fortune stays him from his word:
Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise
Though he be merry, yet withal he's honest.

Kath. Would Katharine had never seen him though!

[Exit, weeping, followed by Bianca, and others.

Bap. Go, girl; I cannot blame thee now to weep,
For such an injury would vex a very saint,
Much more a shrew of thy impatient humour.

Enter Biondello.

Bion. Master, master! news, and such old news! as you never heard of!

Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not news to hear of Petruchio's coming?

Bap. Is he come?

Bion. Why, no, sir.

Bap. What then?

Bion. He is coming.

Bap. When will he be here?

Bion. When he stands where I am, and sees yo there.

Tran. But, say, what is this new news?

Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming, in a new hat, and an old jerkin; a pair of old breeches, thrice turned; a pair of boots that have been candle-cases. One buckled, another laced; an old rusty sword taken out of the town armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points; his horse heaped with an old motly saddle, and stirrups of no kindred: besides, possessed with the gauders, and like to mosc in the chine; troubled with the lampass. infected with the fashions; full of wind-galls, sped with spavins, raved with the yellows, past cure of the fives, stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the botes; swayed in the back, and shoulder-shotten; ne'er--legged before, and with a half-checked bit, and a head stall of sheep's-leather; which, being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots; one girth six times pierced, and a woman's crupper of velure, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in studs, and here and there pieced with pack-thread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. O, sir! his lackey, for all the world caprisoned like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list; an old hat, and the amours of forty fancies; pricked in't for a feather; a monster, a very monster in apparel, and not like a Christian footboy, or a gentleman's lackey.

Tran. 'Tis some old humour pricks him to this fashion;
Yet oftentimes he goes but mean apparel'd.

Bap. I am glad he is come, howsoever he comes.

Bion. Why, sir, he comes not.

Bap. Didst thou not say, he comes?

Bion. Who? that Petruchio came?

Bap. Ay, that Petruchio came.

Bion. No, sir; I say, his horse comes, with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that's all one.

Bion. Nay, by St. Jamy,
I hold you a penny,
A horse and a man
Is more than one,
And yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Gremio, strangely apparel'd.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who is at home?

Bap. You are welcome, sir.

Pet. And yet I come not well

Bap. And yet you halt not.

Tran. Not so well apparel'd as I wish you were.

Pet. Were it much better, I should rush in thus.

But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride?

How does my father?—Gentles, methinks you brown
And wherefore gaze this goodly company.

* old, news, and such news in f. e. * Farcy * humours of: in f. e. * These words are not in f. e. * Not in f. e.
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy?

_Bap._ Why, sir, you know, this is your wedding-day:
First were we sad; fearing you would not come;
Now sadder, that you come so unprovided.
Fie! doth this habit, shame to your estate.
An eye-sore to our solemn festival.

_Tra._ And tell us what occasion of import
Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife,
And sent you hither so unlike yourself?

_Pet._ Tedium it were to tell, and harsh to hear:
Sufficeth, I come to keep my word,
Though in some part enforced to digress;
Which, at a more leisure time, I'll quaff o' the muscadine,
As you shall well be satisfied withal.

But, where is Kate? I stay too long from her;
The morning wears, 'tis time we were at church.

_Tra._ See not your bride in these unproper robes.
Go to my chamber: put on clothes of mine.

_Pet._ Not I, believe me: thus I'll visit her.

_Bap._ But thus, I trust, you will not marry her.

_Pet._ Good sooth, even thus; therefore, have done with words:

To me she's married, not unto my clothes.
Could I repair what she will wear in me,
As I can change these poor accoutrements.
'T were well for Kate, and better for myself.
But what a fool am I to chat with you,
When I should bid good-morrow to my bride,
And seal the title with a loving kiss!

[Exeunt Petrucho, Grumio, and Bianculla.

_Tra._ He hath some meaning in his mad attire,
We will persuade him, be it possible,
To put on better, ere he go to church.

_Bap._ I'll alter him, and see the event of this. [Exit. _Tra._ But, to our love's concerneth us to add
Her father's liking; which to bring to pass.
As I before imparted to your worship,
I am to get a man—a master he be,
It skills not much, we'll fit him to our turn,—
And he shall be Vincentio of Pisa,
And make assurance, here in Padua,
Of greater sums than I have promised.

So shall you quietly enjoy your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with consent.

_Luc._ Were it not that my fellow schoolmaster
Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly,
'T were good. methinks, to steal our marriage:
Which once perform'd, let all the world say no,
I'll keep mine own, despite of all the world.

_Tra._ That by degrees we mean to look into,
And watch our vantage in this business.
We'll over-reach the grey-beard, Grumio,
The narrow-prying father, Minola,
The quaint musician, amorous Licio;
All for my master's sake, Lucentio.

_Re-enter Grumio._

Signior Grumio, came you from the church?

_Gre._ As willingly, as ever I came from school.

_Tra._ And is the bride, and bridgroom, coming home?

_Gre._ A bridgroom say you? 'tis a groom indeed.
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find.

_Tra._ Outster than she? why, 'tis impossible.

_Gre._ Why, he's a devil, a devil, a very fiend.

_Tra._ Why, she's a devil, a devil, the devil's dam.

_Gre._ Tut! she's a lamb, a dove, a fool to him.
I'll tell you, sir, Lucentio: when the priest
Should ask,—if Katharine should be his wife,

"Ay, by gogs-wounds, quoth he; and swore so loud,
That, all-amaz'd, the priest let fall the book,
And, as he stoop'd again to take it up,
This mad-brain'd bridgroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest:
"Now take them up," quoth he, "if any list!"

_Tra._ What said the wench when he arose again?

_Gre._ Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd and swore,
As if the vicar meant to oceen him.

But after many ceremonies done.
He calls for wine:—"A health!" quoth he; as if He had been abroad, carousing to his mate,
At a more leisure time:—quaff'd off the muscadine,
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason,
But that his beard grew thin and hungry,
And seem'd to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck,
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack.
That, at the parting, all the church did echo;
And I, seeing this, came thence for very shame:
And after me, I know, the rout is coming;
Such a mad marriage never was before.
Hark, hark! I hear the minnstrs play.

[Music.

_Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista, Hortensio, Grumio, and Train._

_Pet._ Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains.
I know, you think to dine with me to-day,
And have prepar'd a great store of wedding cheer:
But, so it is, my haste doth call me hence,
And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

_Bap._ Is't possible you will away to-night?

_Pet._ I must away to-day, before night come.
Make it no wonder: if you knew my business,
You would entreat me rather go than stay—
And, I thank company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself.
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife:
Dine with my father, drink a health to me,
For I must hence; and farewell to you all.

_Tra._ Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

_Pet._ It may not be.

_Gre._ Let me entreat you.

_Pet._ It cannot be.

_Kath._ Let me entreat you.

_Pet._ I am content.

_Kath._ Are you content to stay?

_Pet._ I am content you shall entreat me stay,
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

_Kath._ Now, if you love me, stay.

_Pet._ Grumio, my horse!

_Gre._ Ay, sir, they be ready: the oats have eaten
the horses.

_Kath._ Nay, then,
Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day;
No, nor to-morrow, not till I please myself.
The door is open, sir, there lies your way;
You may be jogging whilst your boots are green:
For me, I'll not be gone, till I please myself.—
'T is like you 'll prove a jolly surly groom.
That take it on you at the first so roundly.

_Pet._ O, Kate! content thee: pr'ythee, be not angry.

_Kath._ I will be angry. What hast thou to do—
Father, be quiet; he shall stay my leisure.

_Gre._ Ay, marry, sir, now it begins to work.

_Kath._ Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner.
SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter GRUMIO.

GRUM. Fie, fie, on all tired jades, on all mad masters, and all foul ways! Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so royally beaten? was ever man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are coming after to warm themselves. Now, were not I a little pot, and soon hot, my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me; but I, with blowing the fire, shall warm myself, for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Holla, hoa! Curtis!

Enter CURTIS.

CURT. Who is that, calls so coldly?

GRUM. A piece of ice: if thou doubt it, thou may'st slide from my shoulder to my heel, with no greater run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis.

CURT. Is my master and his wife coming, Grumio?

GRUM. O! ay, Curtis, ay; and therefore fire, fire: cast on no water.

CURT. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported?

GRUM. She was, good Curtis, before this frost; but thou know'st, winter takes man, woman, and beast, for it hath tamed my old master, and my new mistress, and thyself, follow Curtis.

CURT. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast.

GRUM. Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot; and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand (she being now at hand) shall soon feel to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office?

CURT. I pr'ythee, good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

GRUM. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine; and, therefore, fire. Do thy duty, and have thy duty, for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

CURT. There's fire ready; and therefore, good Grumio, the news?

GRUM. Why, "Jack, boy! ho boy!" and as much news as thou wilt.

CURT. Come, you are so full of conniving.

GRUM. Why; therefore, fire: for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewed, cobwebs swept; the serving-men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the Jacks fair within, the Juls fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order?

CURT. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news?

GRUM. First, know, my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out.

CURT. How?

GRUM. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby hangs a tale.

CURT. Let's ha', good Grumio.

GRUM. Lend thine ear.

CURT. Here.

GRUM. There.

CURT. This 'tis to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

GRUM. And therefore 'tis called, a sensible tale: and this cuss was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: Imprimis, we came down a foull hill, my master riding behind my mistress.

CURT. Both of one horse?

GRUM. What's that to thee?

CURT. Why, a horse.

GRUM. Tell thou the tale:—but haddst thou not crossed me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard, in how miry a place; how she was bewildered: how he left her with the horse upon her; how he beat her because her horse stumbled; how she waded through the dirt to pluck him off me; how he swore; how she prayed, that never prayed before; how he cried; how the horses ran away; how her bridle was burst:—how I lost my crupper:—with many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

CURT. By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.

GRUM. Ay; and that thou and the proudest of you all shall find, when he comes home. But what talk I of this?—Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholans, Philip, Walter, Sugarsop, and the rest: let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their garters of an indifferent knot: let them curry with their left legs, and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail, till they kiss their hande. Are they all ready?

Curt. They are.
Gru. Call them forth.
Curt. Do you hear? ho! you must me master, to countenance my mistress.
Gru. Why, why, she hath a face of her own.
Curt. Who knows not that?
Gru. Thou, it seems, that callest for company to countenance her.
Curt. I call them forth to credit her.
Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter several Servants.
Nath. Welcome home, Grumio.
Phil. How now, Grumio?
Jos. What, Grumio!
Nich. Fellow Grumio!
Nath. How now, old lad?
Gru. Welcome, you:—how now, you:—what, you;
—follow you, and thus much for greeting. Now, my spuce companions, is all ready, and all things neat?
Nath. All things is ready. How near is our master?
Gru. E'en at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not.—Coek's passion, silence!—I hear my master.

[All servants frightened.]

Enter Petruchio and Katharina.
Pet. Where be these knives? What! no man at the door,
To hold my stirrup, nor to take my horse.
Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?—
All Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.
Pet. Here, sir! here! sir! here! sir! here, sir?
You logger-headed and unpollish'd grooms!
What, no attendance? no regard? no duty?—
Where is the foolish knife I sent before?
Gru. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.
Pet. You pensant swain! you whoreson malt-horse drudge!
Did not bid thee meet me in the park;
And bring along these rascal knives with thee?
Gru. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully made,
And Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' the heel;
There was no link to colour Peter's hat,
And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing:
There were none fine. But Adam, Ralph, and Gregory:
The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly;
Yet, as they are, here they are come to meet you.
Pet. Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in.—

[Exit some of the Servants.

"Where is the life that I late led?"—[Sings.
Where are those?—Sit down, Kate, and welcome.
Sond, sound, sound, sound!

Re-enter Servants, with supper.
Why, when, I say?—Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry;
Off with my boots, you rogues! you villains, when?
"It was the friar of orders grey, [Sings.
As he forth walked on his way:"—[Kicks him.
Out, you rogue! you pluck my foot awry;
Take that, and mend the plucking of the other.
Be merry, Kate;—some water, here; what, ho!—

Enter Servant, with water.
Where's my spaniel Trolius?—Sirrah, get you hence,
And bid by cousin Ferdinand come hither:—

[Exit Servant.

One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with.
Where are my slippers?—Shall I have some water?
[A bosom is presented to him.
Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily.—

You whoreson villain! will you let it fall? [Strikes him.
Kath. Patience, I pray you; 't was a fault unwilling.
Pet. A whoreson, beetleheaded, flap-ear'd knave!
[Meat served in.
Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomach.
Will you give thanks, sweet Kate, or else shall I?—
What's this? mutton?
1 Serv. Ay.
1 Serv. Who brought it?
I.
Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat.
What dogs are these!—Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser.
And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, trechers, cups, and all.

[Throws the meat, &c. all about.
You needless joltheads, and unmanner'd slaves!
What! do you grumble? I'll be with you straight.
Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet:
The meat was well, if you were so contented.
Pet. I tell thee, Kate, 't is burnt and dried away.
And I expressly am forbid to touch it,
For it engenders choler, planethe anger:
And better 't were, that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choicer,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh.
Be patient; to-morrow 't shall be mended,
And for this night we'll fast for company.
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridall chamber.

[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Curt.

Nath. Peter, didst ever see the like?
Pet. He kills her in her own humour

Re-enter CURTIS.
Gru. Where is he?
Curt. In her chamber.
Making a sermon of continency to her;
And rails, and swears, and rates, that she, poor soul,
Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak,
And sits as one new-risen from a dream.
Away, away! for he is coming hither. [Exeunt, running.

Re-enter Petruchio.
Pet. Thus have I politely begun my reign,
And 't is my hope to end successfully.
My falcon now is sharp, and passing empty;
And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd.
For then she never looks upon her lure.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her, as we watch those kits,
That hate, and beat, and will not be obedient.
She ate no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;
Last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not.
As with the meat, some undeserved fault
I'll find about the making of the bed,
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:—
Ay, and amid this hurly, I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her;
And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night:
And, if she chance to nod, I'll rail, and brawl,
And with the clamour keep her still awake.
This is the way to kill a wife with kindness;
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour,
He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak: 't is charity to shew.

[Exit.

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.
Tra. Is't possible, friend Licio, that mistress Bianca
SCENE II.

TAMING OF THE SREWE.

Doth fancy any other but Lucentio?

I tell you, sir, she bears me fair in hand.

Hor. Sir, to satisfy you in what I have said, Stand by, and mark the manner of his teaching.

[They stand aside.

Enter Bianca and Lucentio.

Luc. Now, mistress, profit you in what you read?

Bian. What, master, read you? first resolve me that.

Luc. I read that I profess, the Art to Love.

Bian. And may you prove, sir, master of your art!

Luc. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart.

[They retire.

Hor. [Coming forward.] Quick proceedings, marry! Now, tell me, I pray,

You that dost swear that your mistress Bianca
Lov’d none in the world so well as Lucentio.

Tra. O, despiteful love! unconsumated kind!—
I tell thee, Lucio, this is wonderful.

Hor. Mistake no more: I am not Lucio,
Nor a musician, as I seem to be.

But sure she doth seem to live in this disguise,
For such a one, as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion.

Know, sir, that I am call’d Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca;
And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness,
I will with you, if you be so contented,
Forswear Bianca and her love for ever.

Hor. See, how they kiss and court!—Signior Lucentio,
Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow
Never to woo her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter’d her withal.

Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Never to marry her, though she entreat.
Fie on her! see, how beastly she doth court him.

Hor. Would all the world, but he, had quite forsworn her!

For me, that I may surely keep mine oath,
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which hath as long lov’d me,
As I have lov’d this proud, disdainful hag.
And so farwell, signior Lucentio—

Kindness in women! not their beauteous looks,
Shall win my love:—and so I take my leave,
In resolution as I swore before.

[Exit Hortensio.—Lucentio and Bianca advance.

Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace,
As long’st to a lover’s blessed case!
Nay, I have ta’en you napping, gentle love
And have forsworn you, with Hortensio.

Bian. Tranio, you jest. But have you both forsworn me?

Tra. Mistress, we have.

Luc. Then we are rid of Lucio.

Tra. I faith, he’ll have a lusty widow now,
That shall be woo’d and wedded in a day.

Bian. God give him joy!

Tra. Ay, and he’ll take her.

Bian. He says so, Tranio.

Tra. ‘Faith, he is gone unto the taming-school.

Bian. The taming-school! what, is there such a place?

Tra. Ay, mistress, and Petruchio is the master; That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long, To tame a shrew, and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Bianello, running.

Bian. O master, master! I have watch’d so long That I’m dog-weary: but at last I spied An ancient ambler* coming down the hill, Will serve the turn.

Tra. What is he, Bianello?

Bian. Master, a mercatante,* or a pedant, I know not what: but formal in apparel, In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Luc. And what of him, Tranio?

Tra. If he be credulous, and trust my tale, I’ll make him glad to seem Vincentio, And give assurance to Baptista Minolla, As if he were the right Vincentio. Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exit Lucentio and Bianca.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir!

Tra. And you, sir: you are welcome.

Ped. Travel you far on, or are you at the farthest?

Tra. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two;
But then up farther, and as far as Rome, And so to Tripoly, if God lend me life.

Ped. What countryman, I pray?

Bian. Of Mantua.

Ped. Of Mantua, sir?—marry, God forbid!

And come to Padua, careless of your life?

Ped. My life, sir! how, I pray? for that goa hard

Tra. ’T is death for any one in Mantua

To come to Padua. Know you not the cause?

Your ships are stay’d at Venice; and the duke,
For private quarrels twist your duke and him,
Hath publish’d and proclaim’d it openly.

’T is marvel; but that you are but newly come,
You might have heard it else proclaim’d about.

Ped. Alas, sir! it is worse for me than so;
For I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy

This will I do, and this I will advise you.—

First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa I have often been;

Pisa, renowned for grave citizens.

Ped. Among them, knew you one Vincentio?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him,
A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Ped. He is my father. Sir, I must, sooth say,
In countenance somewhat doth resemble you.

Bian. [Aside.] As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

Tra. To save your life in this extremity,

This favour will I do for his sake,
And think it not the worst of all your fortunes.

That you are so like to Vincentio.

His name and credit shall you undertake,
And in my house you shall be friendly lodg’d.

Look, that you take upon you as you should:

You understand me, sir:—so shall you stay
Till you have done your business in the city.

If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O! sir, I do; and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good.

This, by the way, I let you understand:

My father is here look’d for every day,
To pass assurance of a dowry in marriage

’Tis met me and one Baptista’s daughter here:

In all these circumstances I’ll instruct you.

Go with me, to clothe you as becomes you. [Exit

SCENE III.—A Room in Petruchio's House.

Enter Katharina and Grumio.

Grumio. No, no, forsooth; I dare not, for my life.

Katharina. The more my wrong, the more his spite appears.

What, did he marry me to famish me?

Beggars, that come unto my father's door,

Upon entreaty, have a present alms;

If not, elsewhere they meet with charity.

But, I, who never knew how to entertain,

Nor never needed, that I should entertain,

Am starved for meat, giddy for lack of sleep;

With oaths kept waking, and with brawling fed.

And that which spites me more than all these wants,

He does it under name of perfect love;

As who should say, if I should sleep, or eat,

'Twere deadly sickness, or else present death.

I pray thee go, and get me some repast;

I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

Grumio. What say you to a neat's foot?

Katharina. 'Tis passing good: I pray thee let me have it.

Grumio. I fear, it is too choleric a meet.

How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil'd?

Katharina. I like it well: good Grumio fetch it me.

Grumio. I cannot tell; I fear, 'tis choleric.

What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard?

Katharina. A dish that I do love to feed upon.

Grumio. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.

Katharina. Why, then the beef; and let the mustard rest.

Grumio. Nay, that I will not: you shall have the mustard.

Or else you get no beef of Grumio.

Katharina. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt.

Grumio. Why then, the mustard without the beef.

Katharina. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave.

[Beats him.

That feed'st me with the very name of meat.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,

That triumph thus upon my misery!

Go: get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio with a dish of meat, and Hortensio.

Petruchio. How fares my Kate? What, sweeting, all amot?

Hortensio. Mistress, what cheer?

Petruchio. Faith, as cold as can be.

Here, love; thou seest how diligent I am,

To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee:

[Sets the dish on a table.

I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.

What! not a word? Nay then, thou lov'st it not,

And all my pains is sorted to no proof.—

Here, take away this dish.

Katharina.

I pray thee, let it stand.

Petruchio. The poorest service is repaid with thanks,

And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.

Katharina. I thank you, sir.

Hortensio. Signior Petruchio, fie! you are to blame.

Petruchio. Come, mistress Kate. I'll bear you company, [me—

Petruchio. Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st [To her.] Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!

Kate, eat apiece. And now, my honey love,

Wilt we return unto thy father's house,

And revel it as bravely as the best,

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,

With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and shings;

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery.

What! hast thou din'd? The tailor stays thy leisure,

To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Katharina. Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments;

[Enter Hubardasher.

Tailor. Lay forth the gown.—What news with you, sir?

Hubardasher. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.

Petruchio. Why, this was moulded on a pattering,

A velvet dish—fine! 'tis fresh and filthy.

Why, 'tis a cockle or a walnut shell,

A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap;

Away with it! come, let me have a bigger.

Katharina. I'll have no bigger: this doth fit the time.

And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.

Petruchio. When you are gentle, you shall have one too.

And not till then.

Hortensio. [Aside.] That will not be in haste.

Katharina. Why, sir, I trust, I may have leave to speak.

And I say well, I am no child, no babe:

Your betters have endur'd me say my mind,

And, if you cannot, best you stop your ears.

My tongue will tell the anger of my heart,

Or else my heart, concealing it, will break:

And, rather than it shall, I will be free,

Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Petruchio. Why, thou say'st true: it is a pultry cap.

A custard-essoin, 2 a bungle, a silken pie.

I love thee well, in that thou livest it not.

Katharina. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap.

And it I will have, or I will have none.

Petruchio. Thy gown? why, ay—come, tailor, let us see't

O, mercy, God!—what masking stuff is here?

What's this? a sleeve? 'tis like a demi-cannon:

What! up and down, e'en'd like an apple-tart?

Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and smear, and slash.

Like to a censer in a barber's shop.—

Why, what, o devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this?

Hortensio. [Aside.] I see, she's like to have neither cap nor gown.

Tait. You bid me make it orderly and well,

According to the fashion, and the time.

Petruchio. Marry, and did; but if you be remember'd

I did not bid you mar it to the time.

Go, hop me over every kennel home,

For you shall hop without my custom, sir.

I'll none of it: hence! make your best of it.

Katharina. I never saw a better-fashion'd gown,

More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable.

Belike, you mean to make a puppet of me.

Petruchio. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee.

Tait. She says, your worship means to make a puppet of her.

Petruchio. O, monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou thread,

Thou thinny,

Thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nail

Thou fea, thou nit, thou winter cricket thou!—

Bravy'd in mine own house with a skew of thread?

Away! thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant,

Or I shall be mete thee with thy yard,

As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou liv'st.

I tell thee, I, that thou hast mar'd her gown.

Tait. Your worship is deceiv'd: the gown is made

Just as my master had direction.

Grumio gave order how it should be done.

Grumio. I gave him no order; I gave him the stuff

Tait. But how did you desire it should be made?

Grumio. Marry, sir, with needle and thread.

Tait. But did you not request to have it cut?

Grumio. Thou hast faced many things

1 Drums.  2 Approbation.  3 The crust of a pie was so called.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE IV.—Padua. Before Baptista’s House.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant bootéd and dressed like Vincentio.

Tra. Sir, this is the house: please it you, that I call? Pet. Ay, what else? and, but I be deceived, Signior Baptista may remember me, Near twenty years ago, in Genoa, Where we were lodgers at the Pegasus.

Tra. ‘Tis well; and hold your own, in any case. With such austerity as longeth to a father.

Enter Bianelio.

Ped. I warrant you. But, sir, here comes your boy ‘T were good, he were school’d.

Tra. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Biemmeo, Now do your duty throughly, I advise you: Imagine ‘t were the right Vincentio. Bin. Tut! fear not me.

Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista? Bino. I told him, that your father was at Venice. And that you look’d for him this day in Padua. Tra. Thou’rt a tall fellow: hold thee that to drink. Here comes Baptista.—Set your countenance, sir.—

Enter Baptista and Lucentio.

Signior Baptista, you are happily met.— Sir, this is the gentleman I told you of.— I pray you, stand good father to me now, Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped. Soft, son!—

Sir, by your leave: having come to Padua To gather in some debts, my son, Lucentio, Made me acquainted with a weighty cause Of love between your daughter and himself: And, for the good report I hear of you, And for the love he beareth to your daughter, And she to him, to stay him not long, I am content, in a good father’s cares, To have him matehd; and, if you please to like Me, shall you find ready and willing With one consent to have her so bestow’d; For curious * I cannot be with you, Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say: Your plainness, and your shortness please me well. Right true it is, your son Lucentio, here, Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him, Or both dissemble deeply their affections: And, therefore, if you say no more than this, That like a father you will deal with him, And pass my daughter a sufficient dower, The match is made, and all is happily done: Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

Tra. I thank you, sir. Where, then, do you hold best, We be ailed, and such assurance taken, As shall with either part’s agreement stand?

Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for, you know, Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants. Besides, old Gremio is hearkening still, And, happily, we might be interrupted.

* Know * in f. o.  This word not in f. o. 3 This word not in f. o. + This word not in f. o. 4 Particular. * This word not in f. o. 5 This word not in f. o.
Tra. Then, at my lodging, an it like you:
There doth my father lie, and there this night
We'll pass the business privately and well.
Send for your daughter by your servant here;
My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently.
The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have it thin and slender pittance.
Bap. It likes me well.—Cambio, lie you home,
And bid Bianca make her ready straight;
And, if you will, tell what hath happened:
Lucentio's father is arrived in Padua,
And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.
Luc. I pray the gods she may with all my heart.
Tra. Daily not with the gods, but get thee gone.
Sennor Baptista, shall I lead the way?
Welcome: one mess is like to be your cheer.
Come, sir: we will better it in Pisa.
Bap. I follow you.

[Exeunt Tranio, Pedant, and Baptista.

Bion. Cambo!
Luc. What say'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
Luc. Biondello, what of that?
Bion. Faith, nothing; but he has left me here, behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.
Luc. I pray thee, moralize them.
Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe: talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son,
Luc. And what of him?
Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.
Luc. And then?

Bion. The old priest at St. Luke's church is at your command at all hours.
Luc. And what of all this?
Bion. I cannot tell: except1, while2 they are busied about a counterfeit assurance, take you assurance of her, cum privilegio ad imprimitum solam. To the church!—take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses.
If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say,
But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.
Luc. Hear'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adieu, sir.
My master hath appointed me to go to St. Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix.

[Exeunt.

Luc. I may, and will, if she be so contented:
Show will be pleas'd, then wherefore should I doubt?
Hap what hap may, I'll roundly go about her:
It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her.

SCENE V.—A public Road.

Enter Petrucho, Katharina, and Hortensio.

Pet. Come on, o' God's name: once more toward our father's.

Good lord! how bright and goodly shines the moon.
Kath. The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now.
Pet. I say, it is the moon that shines so bright.
Kath. I know, it is the sun that shines so bright.
Pet. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon, or star, or what I list,
Or else I journey to your father's house.—
Go one,3 and fetch our horses back again.—
Evermore cross'd, and cross'd; nothing but cross'd.
Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go.

Kath. Forward, I pray, since we have come so far,
And he it moon, or sun, or what you please.
An if you please to call it a rush candle,
Henceforth, I vow, it shall be so for me.

Pet. I say, it is the moon.

Kath. I know, it is the moon

Pet. Nay, then you lie: it is the blessed sun.
Kath. Then, God be bless'd, it is the blessed sun.
But sun it is not, when you say it is not,
And the moon changes, even as your mind.
What you will have it nam'd, even that it is;
And so it shall be still for Katharine.

Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways: the field is won.
Pet. Well, forward, forward! thus the bowl should run,
And not unlucky against the bias.—

But soft! what company is coming here?

[Enter Vincentio, in a travelling dress.

[To Vincentio.] Good-morrow, gentle mistress: where away?—

Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too,
Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman?—
Such war of white and red within her cheeks!
What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face?—
Fair lovely maid, once more good day to thee.—
Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake.

Hor. 'A will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.

Kath. Young budding virgin, fair, and fresh, and sweet,
Whither away, or where is thy abode?
Happy the parents of so fair a child;
Happier the man, whom favournable stars
Allot thee for his lovely bed-fellow!

Pet. Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not mad
This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.

Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes,
That have been so bedazzled with the sun,
That every thing I look on seemeth green.
Now I perceive thou art a reverent father;
Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking. [known

Pet. Do, good old grand sire: and, withal, make Whieh way thou travellest: if along with us,
We shall be joyful of thy company.

Vin. Fair sir, and you my merry mistress,
That with your strange encounter much amaz'd me.
My name is called Vincentio: my dwelling, Pisa,
And bound I am to Padua, there to visit
A son of mine, which long I have not seen.

Pet. What is his name?

Vin. Lucentio, gentle sir.

Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son.

And now by law, as well as reverend age,
I may entitle thee—my loving father:
The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman,
Thy son by this hath married. Wonder not,
Nor be not grieved: she is of good esteem,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth:
Beside, so qualified as may beseeem
The spouse of any noble gentleman.
Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to see thy honest son.
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous.

Vin. But is this true? or is it else your pleasure.
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake?

Hor. I do assure thee, father, so it is.

Enter on my side Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca;
Gremio walking on the other side.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir, for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home: therefore, leave us.

Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church of your back; and then come back to my master as soon as I can.

[Exit Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.]

Gre. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here’s the door; this is Lucentio’s house: My father’s bears more toward the market place; That ther I must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go. I think I shall command your welcome here, And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward. [Knocks.

Gre. They’re busy within; you were best knock louder.

Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Ped. What’s he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signor Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He’s within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What, if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself: he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, your son was belovéd in Padua.

Do you hear, sir? to leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you, tell signor Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest: his father is come from Pisa, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. Why, how now, gentleman? [To Vincentio.] why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man’s name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain. I believe, ’tis mean to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

[Re-enter Biondello.]

Bion. I have seen them in the church together: God send them good shipping! —But who is here? mine old master, Vincentio! now we are undone, and brought to nothing.

Vin. Come hither, crack-hemp. [Seeing Biondello.]

Bion. I hope I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come hither, you rogue. What, have you forgotten me?

Bion. Forgot you? no, sir: I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, diest thou never see thy master’s father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old, worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir: see where he looks out of the window.

Vinp. Is’t so, indeed? [Beats Biondello.]

Bion. Help, help, help! here’s a madman will murder me.

Ped. Help, son! help, signior Baptista!

Pet. Pr’ythee, Kate, let’s stand aside, and see the end of this controversy. [They retire.

[Re-enter Pedant, below: Baptista, Tranio, and Servants.]

Tra. Sir, what are you, that offer to beat my servant? Vin. What am I, sir? may, what are you, sir?—O, immortal Gods! O, fine villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a capistan hat!—O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what’s the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a noble ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you madman. Why, sir, what ’cerns it if you wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father? O, villain! he is a sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake, sir: you mistake, sir. Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name: I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, signor Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O! he hath murdered his master. —Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke’s name —O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer.

[Enter one, with an Officer.]

Carry this mad knave to the jail.—Father Baptista, I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the jail!

Gre. Stay, officer: he shall not go to prison

Bap. Talk not, signior Gremio. I say, he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, signor Baptista, lest you be caught in this business. I dare swear this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear, if thou darest.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tra. Then thou wilt best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be signor Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard! to the jail with him!

Vin. Thus strangers may be handled and abused.—O, monstrous villain!

[Re-enter Biondello with Lucentio, and Bianca.]

Bion. O, we are spoiled! and yonder he is; deus him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father. [Kneeling.

Vin. Lives my sweet son? [Biondello, Tranio, and Pedant run out Bian. Pardon, dear father, [Kneeling.]
Bap. How hast thou offended?—

Where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, Right son to the right Vincentio:
That have by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposes unclear'd thine eye.

Gre. Here's packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!
Vinc. Where is that damned villain, Tranio,
That fard'st and brav'd me in this matter so?

Bap. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio.
Luc. Love wrought these miracles. Bianca's love
Made me exchange my state with Tranio.
While he did bear my countenance in the town;
And happily I have arrived at the last
Unto the wished haven of my bliss,
What Tranio did, myself enforce'd him to:
Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Vinc. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to the jail.

Bap. [To Lucentio.] But do you hear, sir? Have you married my daughter without asking my good will?

Vinc. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you: go to:
but I will in, to be revenged for this villain. [Exit.

Bap. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery. [Exit.

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown. [Exit Luc. and Bian.

Gre. My cake is dough; but I'll in among the rest, out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. [Exit.

PETRUCHIO and KATHARINA adventure.

Kath. Husband, let's follow, to see the end of this ado.

Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will.

Kath. What, in the midst of the street?

Pet. What! art thou ashamed of me?

Kath. No, sir, God forbid; but ashamed to kiss.

Pet. Why, then, let's home again.—Come, sirrah, let's away.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss: now pray thee, love, stay.

Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate:
Better once than never, for never too late. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Lucentio's House.

A BANQUET set out; Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, Bianca, Petruchio, Katharina, Hortensio, and Widow. Tranio, Biondello, Gremio, and others, attending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree:
And time it is, when raging war is gone,
To smile at escapes and perils overwhelmed.
My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome,
While I with self-same kindness welcome thine.—
Brother Petruchio—sister Katharina.—
And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow;
Feast with the best, and welcome to my house:
My banquet is to close our stomachs up,
After our great good cheer. Pray you, sit down;
For now we sit to chat, as well as eat. [They sit at table.

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!

Bap. Padua affords this kindness, son Petruchio.

Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.

Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.

Wid. Then, never trust me, if I be afraid.

Pet. You are very sensible, and yet you miss my sense:
I mean, Hortensio is afraid of you.

Pet. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round

Kath. Mistress, how mean you that?

Pet. Thus I conceive by him.

Pet. Concedes by me!—How likes Hortensio that?

Hor. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.

Pet. Very well mended. Kiss him for that, good widow.

Kath. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round;—

I pray you, tell me what you mean by that.

Pet. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew
Measures my husband's sorrow by his wees:
And now you know my meaning.

Kath. A very mean meaning.

Pet. Right, I mean you

Kath. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her. Kate!

Hor. To her, widow!

Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down

Hor. That's my office.

Pet. Spoke like an officer:—Here's to thee, lad.

[Drinks to Hortensio.

Bap. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks?

Gre. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.

Bian. Head and butt? an hasty-witted body

Would say, your head and butt were head and horn.

Vinc. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awaken'd you?

Bian. Ay, but not frightened me: therefore, I'll sleep again.

Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have begun,
Have at you for a better jest or two.

Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush.
And then pursue me as you draw your bow.—
You are welcome all. [Exit Baptista, Katharina, and Widow.

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, signior Tranio,
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not;
Therefore, a health to all that shot and miss'd.

Tranio. O sir! Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.

Pet. A good swift simile, but something currish.

Tranio. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself:
'T is thought, your deer doth hold you at a bay.

Pet. He, Petruchio! Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio.

Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here?

Pet. 'A has a little gall'd me, I confess;
And, as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maun'd you two outright.

Bian. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio.

I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say no: and therefore, for assurance,
Let's each one send unto his several wife,
And he, whose wife is most obedient
To come at first when he doth send for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns!

Pet. Twenty crowns!

I'll venture so much of my hawk, or hound.
But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I.

Go, Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bion. I go. [Exit
Bap. Son, I will be your half, Bianca comes.

Luc. I'll have no half; I'll hear it all myself.

Re-enter Biondello.

How now! what news?

Bion. Sir, my mistress sends you word, that she is busy, and she cannot come.

Pet. How! she is busy, and she cannot come! Is that an answer?

Bion. Ay, and a kind one too:

Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

Pet. I hope better.

Hor. Sirrah, Biondello, go and entreat my wife to come to me forthwith. [Exit Biondello.

Pet. O ho! entreat her!

Nay, then she must needs come.

Hor. I am afraid, sir, Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter Biondello.

Now, where's my wife?

Bion. She says, you have some goodly jest in hand:

She will not come: she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worse and worse; she will not come? O vile! Intolerable, not to be endured!

Sirrah, Grumio, go to your mistress; say, I command her come to me. [Exit Grumio.

Hor. I know her answer.

Pet. What?

Hor. She will not.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter Katharina.

Bap. Now, by my holidame, here comes Katharina!

Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me?

Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?

Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.

Pet. Go, fetch them hither: if they deny to come,

Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands.

Away, I say, and bring them hither straight. [Exit Katharina.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.

Hor. And so it is. I wonder what it bodes.

Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet life,

An awful rule, and right supremacy;

And, to be short, what not that's sweet and happy.

Bap. Now fair belal thee, good Petrucho! The wager thou hast won; and I will add Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns; Another dowry to another daughter.

For she is chang'd, as she had never been.

Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet, And show more sign of her obedience, Her new-built virtue and obedience.

Re-enter Katharina, with Bianca and Widow. See, where she comes, and brings your froward wives As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.— Katharine, that cap of yours becomes you not; Off with that bauble, throw it under foot. [Katharina pulls off her cap, and throws it down.

Wid. Lord! let me never have a cause to sigh,
Till I be brought to such a silly pass.

Bian. Fie! what a foolish duty call you this?

Luc. I would, your duty were as foolish too; The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca, Cost me one hundred crowns since supper-time.

Bian. The more fool you for laying on my duty.

Pet. Katharine, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.

Wid. Come, come, you're mocking: we will have no telling.

Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not.

Pet. I say, she shall:—and first begin with her.

Kath. Fie, fie! unkind that threatening unkind brow.

And dart not scornful glances from those eyes, To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor: It bloys thy beauty, as frosts do bite the meads, Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds And in no sense is meet, or amiable.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled, Muddy, ill-looking, thick, bereft of beauty; And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty Will deign to sip, or touch one drop of it.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper, Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee, And for thy maintenance; commits his body To painful labour, both by sea and land, To watch the night in storms, the day in cold, Whilst thou liest warm at home, secure and safe: And craves no other tribute at thy hands, But love, fair looks, and true obedience, Too little payment for so great a debt.

Such duty as the subject owes the prince, Even such a woman oweth to her husband; And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour, And not obedient to his king's will governor: What is she but a foul contending rebel, And graceless traitor to her loving lord?— I am ashamed that women are so simple To offer war where they should kneel for peace, Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway, When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth Unapt to toil and trouble in the world, But that our soft conditions, and our hearts, Should well agree with our external parts? Come, come, you froward and unable worms, My mind hath been as big as one of yours, My heart as great, my reason, happy, more To bandy word for word, and brow for brow; But now I see our lances are but straws, Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare. That seeming most, which we indeed least are. Then, vail your stomachs, for it is no boot, And place your hands below your husband's foot; In token of which duty, if he please, My hand is ready, may it do him ease.

Pet. Why, there's a wench!—Come on, and kiss me, Kate.

Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad, for thou shalt ha'.

Vir. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.

Luc. But a harsh hearing, when women are froward.

Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed.—

We three are married, but you two are spsed.
'T was I won the wager, though you hit the white: [To Lucentio

And, being a winner, God give you good night.

[Exeunt Petruchio and Kath.

Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast t'amid a curtis shrew.

Luc. 'T is a wonder, by your leave, she will be t'amid so. [Exeunt.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

King of France.
Duke of Florence.
Bertram, Count of Rousillon.
Lafeu, an old Lord.
Parolles, a follower of Bertram.
French Envoy, serving with Bertram.
French Gentleman, also serving with Bertram.
Rinaldo, Steward to the Countess of Rousillon.
Clown, in her household.
A Page.

Countess of Rousillon, Mother to Bertram.
Helena, a Gentlewoman protected by the Countess.
A Widow of Florence.
Diana, Daughter to the Widow.
Violanta, Neighbours and Friends to the Widow.
Mariana.

SCENE, partly in France, and partly in Tuscany.

ACT I.

SCENE 1.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafue, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew; but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward,¹ evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam;—you, sir, a father. He that so generally is at all times good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process, but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father,—O, that had I how sad a passage 'tis—whose skill, almost as great as his honesty, had it stretched so far would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the ung's disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so.—Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent, indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him, admiringly and mourningly. He was skillful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious.—Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my overlooking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises: her dispositions she inherits, which make fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity; they are virtues and traits too: in her they are the better for their simplicity: she derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart, but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek.—No more of this, Helena: go to, no more; lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, than to have.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow, indeed; but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that?

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram; and succeed thy father

In manners, as in shape! thy blood, and virtue,
Contend for empire in thee; and thy goodness
Share with thy birth-right! Love all, trust a few,
Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy
Rather in power than use; and keep thy friend
Under thy own life's key: be check'd for silence,
But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will
That thee may furnish, and my prayers pluck down,
Fall on thy head!—Farewell, my lord:
'T is an unseason'd courtier: good my lord,
Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best
That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him!—
Farewell, Bertram. (Exit Counts.)

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Scene 1

Ber. [To Helena.] The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you! Be comfortable to your mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Hel. Farewell, pretty lady: you must hold the credit of your father.

[Exit Bertram and Lafeu.

Hel. O, were that all!—I think not on my father; and then the great tears grace his remembrance more than those I shed for him. What was he like? I have forgot him: my imagination carries no favour in it, but only Bertram's.

I am undone: there is no living, none, if Bertram be away. It were all one, that I should love a bright particular star, and think to wed it, he is so above me:

In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.

Th' ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
The hind that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. 'T was pretty, though a plague,
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In my heart's table; heart, too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter Parolles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake,
And yet I know him a notorious liar;
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these false evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's steed bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen.

Hel. And you, monarch.

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you;
let me ask you a question: man is enemy to virginity;
how may we barricade it against him.

Par. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant in the defence, yet is weak. Unfold to us some war-like resistance.

Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers, and blowers up!—Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up; marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin get, till virginity was first lost.
That you were made of is metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found: by being ever kept, it is ever lost. 'T is too cold a companion: away with 't.

Hel. I will stand for 't a little, though therefore I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in 't: 't is against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity is to accuse your mothers, which is most infallible disci-

Ae. He that hangs himself a virgin: virginity murders itself; and should be buried in highways, out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendness against nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is the most in-hhibited sin in the canon. Keep not: you cannot choose but lose by 't. Out with 't: within two years it will make itself two, which is a godly increase, and the principal itself not much the worse. Away with 't.

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: marry, ill: to like him that ne'er it likes. 'T is a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off with 't, while
't is vendible: answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courtier, wears her cap out of fashion;
richly suited, but unsuitable: just like the breech and the tooth-pick, which wear not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge, than in your check: and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears: it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 't is a withered pear: it was formerly better; marry, yet, 't is a withered pear. Will you do any thing with it?

Hel. Not with' my virginity yet.

There shall your master have a thousand loves,
A mother, and a mistress, and a friend,
A phoenix, captain, and an enemy,
A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign,
A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear;
His humble ambition, proud humility,
His jarring concord, and his discord dextrous.
His faith, his sweet disaster: with a world
Of pretty, fond, adventitious christendoms,
That blushing Cupid gossips. Now shall he—
I know not what he shall:—God send him well!—
The court's a learning-place:—and he is one—

Par. What one, 't faith?

Hel. That I wish well.—'T is pity—

Par. What's pity?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in 't.

Which might be felt; that we, the poorer born,
Whose baser stars do shut us up in wishes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And show what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks.

[Enter a Page.

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

Exit Page.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember thee,
I will think of thee at court.

[Exit Parolles.

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

Par. Under Mars.

Hel. I especially think, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars?

Hel. The wars have so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.

Par. Why think you so?

Hel. You go so much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety; but the composition that your valour and fear make in you is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the way well.

Par. I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer thee aetutely. I will return perfect courtier; in the which my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee.
All's Well that Ends Well.

ACT I.

Scene I. Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters; Lords and others attending.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by th' ears; have fought with equal fortune, and continue a braving war.

1 Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible: we here receive it A certainty, you'd from our cousin, Austria, With caution, that the Florentine will move us For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend prejudiceth the business, and would seem To have us make denial.

1 Lord. His love and wisdom, Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead For ampest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer, And Florence is denied before he comes: Yet, for our gentlemen, that mean to see The Tuscan service, freely have they leave To stand on either part.

2 Lord. It may well serve A nursery to our gentry, who are sick For breathing and exploit.

King. What's he comes here? Enter Bertram, Lafawne, and Parolles.

1 Lord. It is the count Rousillon, my good lord, Young Bertram.

King. Youth, thou best thy father's face; Frank nature, rather curious than in haste, Hath well composed thee. Thy father's moral parts May'st thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

King. I would I had that corporal soundness now, As when thy father, and myself, in friendship First tried our soldiership. He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Discipled of the bravest: he lasted long; But on us both did haggis age steal on, And wore us out of act. It much repairs me To talk of your good father. In his youth He had the wit, which I can well observe To-day in your young lords; but they may jest, Tilt their own scorn return to them unnoted, Ere they can hide their levity in honour: So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness Were in his pride, or sharpness; if they were, His equal had awak'd them: and his honour, Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak; and at this time His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him? He us'd as creatures of another place, And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks, Making them proud of his humility, In their poor praise he humbled. Such a man Might be a copy to these younger times, Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them now But goers backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir.

Lies richer in your thoughts, than on his tomb.

So in approbation lives not his epitaph, As in your royal speech.

King. 'Would I were with him! He would alway say,

(Methinks, I hear him now; his plausive words He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them, To grow there, and to bear.)—'Let me not live,'— Thus his good melancholy oft began, On the catastrophe and heel of pastime, When it was out, 'let me not live,' quoth he, After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses All but new things disdain: whose judgments are Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies Expire before their fashions. This he wish'd, I, after him, do after him wish too,

Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home, I quickly were dissolved from my live, To give some labourers room.

2 Lord. You are lov'd, sir, They, that least lend it you, shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know 't. How long is 't, count, Since the physician at your father's died? He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet:— Let me an arm;—the rest have worn me out With several applications: nature and sickness Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count; My son's no dearer.

Ber. Thank your majesty. [Exit.

Scene III. Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear; what say you of this gentlewoman?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; for then we wound our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: the complaints I have heard of you, I do not all believe: 'tis my slowness, that I do not; for I know you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaverys yours.

Clo. 'T is not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam; 't is not so well, that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned. But, if I may have your ladyship's good-will to go to the world, Isabel, the woman, and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. I do beg your good-will in this case.

1 Fortune nature brings: i. e. 2 The people of Sienna. 3 To be married.
Scene III.

All's Well that Ends Well

Count. In what case?

Clo. In Isabel's case, and mine own. Service is no heritage: and, I think, I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue of my body, for they say, barns are blessings.

Count. Tell me this reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh, and he must needs go that do the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you nd all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo. I am out of friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo. You are shallow, madam; 'e'en great friends; for the knaves come to do that for me, which I am a-ware of. He, that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop: if I be his cuckold, he's my drudge. He that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend; ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend. If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no tears in marriage; for young Charbon the puritan, and old Poyseam the papist, howsoever their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one: they may joll horns together, like any deer t' the herd.

Count. Will thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumnious knave?

Clo. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth, the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat,
Which men fall true shall find;
Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir: I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you? of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman, I would speak with her; Helen, I mean.

Clo. Was this fair face, quoth she, the cause?
Why the Grecians sacked Troy?
Four't love, done food, good sooth it was;
Was this King Priam's joy?
With that she sighed as she stood:
And gave this sentence then:
Among nine bad if one be good,
There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What! one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam, which is a purifying o' the song, and mending o' the sex. Would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tithe-woman if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth a' an we might have a good woman born—but one—every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out, ere he pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you?

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done!—Though honestly be not puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplis of humility over the black gown of a big heart.—I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither. [Exit.

Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her than is paid, and more shall be paid her than she 'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than, I think, she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself, her own words to her own ears. she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved her son: fortune, she said, was no godness, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates; love, no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level: Diana, no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, or ransom afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow, that e'er I heard virgin exclaim in; which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you withal, sithence in the loss that may happen it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharged this honestly: keep it to yourself. Many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe, nor misdoubt. Pray you, leave me: stall this in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care. I will speak with you farther, anon.

[Exit Steward.

Count. Even so it was with me, when I was young:
If ever we are nature's, these are ours; this thorn
Both to our rose of youth rightly belong;
Our blood to us, this to our blood is born:
It is the show and seal of nature's truth.
Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth.

Enter Helena.

By our remembrances of days foregone Search we out faults, for then we thought them none:
Her eye is sick on't: I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen.

I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother:
Why not a mother? When I said a mother,
Methought you saw a serpent: what's in mother,
That you start at? I say, I am your mother,
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwomb'd mine. 'Tis often seen,
Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds:
You ne'er oppressed me with a mother's groan,
Yet I express to you a mother's care—
God's mercy, maiden! does it curry thy blood,
To say, I am thy mother? What's the matter,
That this distemper'd messenger of wet,
The many-colour'd Iris, rounds thine eye?
Why, that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.
Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam;
The count Rousillon cannot be my brother;
I am from humble, he from honour'd name;
No note upon my parents, his all noble;
My master, my dear lord he is; and I
His servant live, and will his vassal die.
He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam; would you were
(As that my lord, your son, were not my brother)
Indeed, my mother! or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for, than I do for heaven,
So I were not his sister. Can't no other,
But, I your daughter, he must be my brother?

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law.

God shield, you mean it not! daughter, and mother,
So strive upon your pulse. What, pale again?

My fear hath catch'd your fondness; Now I see
The mystery of your loneliness, and find
Your salt tears head. Now to all sense 'tis gross,
You love my son; invention is shams'd
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say, thou dost not; therefore, tell me true;
But tell me then, 'tis so:—for, look, thy cheeks
Confess it, thy one to the other; and thine eyes
Sce it so grossly shown in thy behaviours,
That in their kind they speak it: only sin,
And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue,
That truth should be suspected. Speak, is 't so?
If it be so, you have wound a goodly clue;
If it be not, forswear 'tis: how'er, I charge thee,
As heaven shall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me.

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress.

Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about: my love hath 't a bond.
Whereof the world takes note. Come, come, disclose
The state of your affection, for your passions
Have to the full approach'd.

Hel. Then, I confess, [Kneeling;]

Here on my knee, before high heaven and you,
That before you, and next unto high heaven,
I love your son.—[Rising;]

My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love:
Be not offended, for it hurts not him,
That he is lov'd of me. I follow him not
By any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him,
Yet never know how that desert should be.
I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet, in this captious and intemate sieve,
I still pour in the waters of my love,
And lack not to lose still. Thus, Indian-like,
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love,
For loving where you do: but, if yourself,
Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth,
Did ever, in so true a flame of loving,
Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dion
Was both herself and love, O! then give pity
To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose
But lend and give where she is sure to lose:
That seeks not to find that her search implies,
But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly,
To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true

Hel. I will tell truth, by grace itself I swear.
You know, my father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading
And manifold experience had collected
For general sovereignty; and that he will'd me
In heedfull'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were
More than they were in note. Amongst the rest,
There is a remedy approv'd, set down
To cure the desperate languishings whereof
The king is render'd lost.

Count. This was your motive
For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord, your son, made me to think of this;
Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king,
Had, from the conversation of my thoughts,
Haply been absent then.

Count. But think you, Helen,
If you should tender your supposed aid,
He would receive it? He and his physicians
Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him,
They, that they cannot help. How shall they credit
A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools,
Embowell'd of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself?

Hel. There's something in 't,
More than my father's skill, which was the greatest
Of his profession, that his good receipt
Shall, for my legacy, be sanctified
By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would your honour
But give me leave to try success, I'd venture
The well-lost life of mine on his grace's cure,
By such a day, and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe 't?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and
love,
Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings
To those of mine in court. I'll stay at home,
And pray God's blessing unto thy attempt
Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this,
What I can help thee to thou shalt not miss. [Erect}
After well-enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confess he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords:
Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy
(Those 'batled, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy) see, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it: when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud. I say, farewell.

2 Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!
King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them.
They say, our French lack language to deny,
If they demand: beware of being captives,
Before you serve.

[Exeunt.]

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell.—Come hither to me.

[The King retires to a couch.

1 Lord. O, my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!
Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.

2 Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!

Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.
Ber. I am commanded here, and kept a coil with;
"Too young," and "the next year," and "'tis too early."
Par. An thy mind stand to't, boy, steal away bravely.
Ber. I shall stay here the forehorse to a snook,
Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,
Till honour be bought up, and no sword worn,
But one to dance with. By heaven! I'll steal away.

1 Lord. There's honour in the theft.
Par. Commit it, count.

2 Lord. I am your necessary: and so farewell.
Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured brody.

1 Lord. Farewell, captain.

2 Lord. Sweet monisseur Parolles!

Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.
Good sparks, and lustrous, a word, good metals:—you shall find in the regiment of the Spinii, one captain Spurio, with his eicatire, an emblem of war, here on his sinister check: it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live, and observe his reports of me.

2 Lord. We shall, noble captain.

[Exeunt Lords.

Par. Mars dote on you for his novices!—What will you do?

Ber. Stay; the king—

[Seeing him rise.
Par. Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you have restrained yourself within the limits of too cold an adien: be more expressive to them; for they wear themselves in the cap of the time: there do muster true gait, eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed. After them, and take a more dilated farewell.

[Exit Parolles.

Par. And I will do so.

[Exit.

Worthy fellows, and let us prove most sinewy

[Enter Bertram and Parolles.

Laf. Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tides.

King. I will see thee to stand up.
Laf. Then here a man stands, that has brought his pardon.

[Kneeling.

King. I would I had so; I had broke thy pate,
And ask'd thee mercy for't.
Laf. Good faith, across. But, my good lord, 'tis thus
Will you be e'er'd at your infirmity?
King. No.
Laf. O! will you eat no grapes, my royal fox?
Yes, but you will, ay, noddle grapes, an if My royal fox could reach them. I have seen
A medicine that's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quick'en a rock, and make you dance encany
With spritely fire and motion; whose simple touch
Is powerful to uprais'e king Pepin, nay,
To give great Charlemaine a pen in's hand,
To write to her a love-line.

King. What her is this?
Laf. Why, doctor she. My lord, there's one arriv'd,
If you will see her—now, by my faith and honour,
If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one, that in her sex, her years, profession.
Wisdom, and constancy, hath amaz'd me more
Than I dare blame my weakness. Will you see her,
(For that is her demand) and know her business?
That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now, good Lafue,
Bring in the admiration, that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wond'ring how thou took'st it.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you,
And not be all day neither.

[Exit LAUFEU.

King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter LAUFEU, with HELENA.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. This haste hath wings, indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

This is his majesty, say your mind to him:
A traitor you do look like; but such traitors
His majesty seldom fears. I am Cresaid's uncle.
That dare leave two together. Fare you well.

[Exit King.

Hel. Ay, my good lord. Gerard de Narbon was my father:
In what he did profess well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him
Knowing him, is enough. On 's bed of death
Many receipts he gave me: chiefly one
Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,
And of his old experience 'th' only darling,
He bad me store up as a triple eye,
Safer than mine own two, more dear. I have so;
And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd
With that malignant cause, wherein the honour
Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,
I come to tender it, and my appliance,
With all bound humbless.

King. We thank you, maiden
But may not be so credulous of eure:
When our most learned doctors leave us, and
The congregated college have concluded
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her inanisde estate, I say, we must not
So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malady
To enturies; or to disserve so
Our great self and our credit, to esteem
A senseless help, when help past sense we deem.

Hel. My duty, then, shall pay me for my pains
I will no more enforce mine office on you;
Humby entreating from your royal thoughts
A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful.

Then thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give
As one near death to those that wish him live;
But what at full I know thou know'st no part,
I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I can do, can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest against remedy.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister:
So holy writ in babes hath judgment shown,
When judges have been babes. Great floods have flown
From simple sources; and great seas have dried.

When miracles have by the greatest been denied.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits,
Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits.¹

King. I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind maid.

Thy pains, not us'd, must by thyself be paid;
Proferies, not took, reap thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is bair'd.
It is not so with him that all things knows,
As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows;
But most it is presumption in us, when
The help of heaven we count the act of men.

Dear sir, to my endeavours give consent;
Of heaven, not me, make an experiment.
I am not an impostor, that proclaim
Myself against the level of mine aim;
But know I think, and think I know most sure,
My art is not past power, nor you past cure.

King. Art thou so confident? Within what space
Hast thou my cure?

Hel. The greatest grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring
Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring;
Ere twice in murr and occidental dam
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp;
Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass,
What is infrom from your sound parts shall fly,
Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence,
What dar'st thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence,
A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame,
Traduce'd by obloquy; my maiden's name
Sear'd otherwise; no worse of worst extended,
With vileness torture let my life be ended. [Speak,
King. Methinks, in thee some blessed spirit doth
His powerful sound within an organ weak;
And what impossibility would slay
In common sense, sense saves another way.
Thy life is dear; for all, that life can rate
Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate;
Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, honour,² all
That happiness in² prime can happy call:
Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate
Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate.
Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try,
That ministers thine own death, if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unjustly let me die;
And well deserv'd. Not helping, death's my fee;
But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre, and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand

What husband in thy power I will command:
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state;
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the premises observ'd;
Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd;
So make the choice of thy own time, for I,
Thy resolv'd patient, on thee still rely.

More should I question thee, and more I must,
Though more to know could not be more to trust,
From whence thou canst, how tend on; but rest,
Unquestion'd we conclude, and unclouded blest.—
Give me some help here, ho!—If thou proceed
As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir: I shall now put you to the height
Of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed, and lowly taught
My knowledges is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special,
When you put off that with such contempt?

But to the court!

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any

Villains, he may easily put it off at court: he cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and

Say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and Indeed, such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court.

But, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer, that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber's chair, that fits all buttocks: the pin-buttock, the quack-buttock, the brawn-buttock, or any buttock.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your tass'fata punk, as Tib's rush² for Tom's forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the cuekold to his horn, as a scolding queen to a wrangling knife, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke, to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size, that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it. Here it is, and all that belongs to't: ask me, if I am a courtier; it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could. I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer.

I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir!—there's a simple putting off—

More, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.
Scene III.

All's well that ends well.

Count. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clown. O Lord, sir!—Nay, put me to 't, I warrant you.

Count. Do you cry, "O Lord, sir," at your whipping, and spare not me? Indeed, your "O Lord, sir," is very sequent to your whispering: you would answer very well to a whispering, if you were but bound to't.

Clown. I ne'er had worse luck in my life, in my "O Lord, sir." I see, things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time, to entertain it so merrily with a fool.

Clown. O Lord, sir!—why, there 't serves well again.

Count. An end, sir: to your business. Give Helen this, and urge her to a present answer back: Command me to your kinsmen, and my son. This is not much.

Clown. Not much commendation to them.

Count. Not much employment for you; you understand me?

Clown. Most truly: I am there before my legs.

Count. Hasten you again. [Exit severally.

Scene III.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter Bertram, Lafew, and Parolles.

Laf. They say, miracles are past: and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Hence is it, that we make trifles of terrors, ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.

Par. Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder, that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Laf. To be relinquished of the artists,——

Par. So I say; both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows,——

Par. Right; so I say.

Laf. That gave him out incurable,——

Par. Why, there 'tis; so say I too.

Laf. Not to be helped,—

Par. Right; as 'twere a man assured of an——

Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.

Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.

Laf. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.

Par. It is, indeed; if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in,—what do you call there?——

Laf. In showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.

Par. That's it I would have said; the very same.

Laf. Why, your dolphin is not lustier: 'tis me, I speak in respect——

Par. Nay, 'tis strange; 'tis very strange, that is the o'ershoot and the tedious of it; and he is of a most facious spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the——

Laf. Very hand of heaven.

Par. Ay, so I say.

Laf. In a most weak——

Par. And debile minister, great power, great transcendency: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made, than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—

Laf. Generally thankful.

Enter King, Helena, and Attendants.

Par. I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.

Laf. Lustick, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head.

Why, he's able to lead her a coranto. —

Par. Mort du vinaigre! Is not this Helen?

Laf. Fore God, I think so.

King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.—

[Exit an Attendant.

Sirs, my preserver, by thy patient's side;

And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense

Thou hast repeal'd, a second time receive

The confirmation of my promis'd gift

Which but attends thy naming.

Enter several Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful parcel

Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing,

O'er whom both sovereigns' power and father's voice

I have to use: thy frank election make,

Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress—

Fall, when love please!—marry, each, but one.

Laf. I'd give bay curtail, and his furniture,

My mouth no more were broken than these boys,

And with'st as little heard.

King. Peruse them well:

Not one of those but had a noble father.

Hel. Gentlemen,

Heaven hath through me restor'd the king to health.

All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest,

That, I protest, I simply am a maid.—

Please it your majesty, I have done already:

The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me,

"We blush, that thou shouldst choose; but, be refresh'd—

Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever:

We'll ne'er come there again."

King. Make choice, and see:

Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me.

Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly,

And to imperial Love, that god most high,

Do my sighs steam—Sir, will you hear my suit?——

1 Lord. And grant it.

Hel. Thanks, sir: all the rest is mute

Laf. I had rather be in this choice, and throw ames ace for my life.

Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,

Before I speak, too threateningly replies:

Love make your fortunes twenty times above

Her that so wishes, and her humble love!

2 Lord. No better, if you please.

Hel. My wish receive,

Which great Love grant! and so I take my leave.

Laf. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped, or I would send them to the Turk to make enuchs of.

Hel. [To 3 Lord.] Be not afraid that I your hand should take:

I'll never do you wrong for your own sake:

Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed

Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!

Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her: sure, they are bastards to the English; the French never got them.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good.

To make yourself a son out of my blood.

4 Lord. Fair one, I think not so.

Laf. There's one grape yet:—I am sure, thy father drank wine. But if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen: I have known thee already. [I give Hel. [To Bertram.] I dare not say I take you; but

Common. [The word came in use from Holland, about 1600.]

1 A lively dance. 2 sovereigns: in f. c. 3 Except one 4 A locked horse. 5 I had lost no more teeth. 6 writ: in f. c. 7 Both axes: an expression for ill luck.
Me, and my service, ever whilst I live,
Into your guiding power.—This is the man

King. Why then, young Bertram, take her; she's thy wife. [Bertram draws back.]

Ber. My wife, my liege! I shall beeseech your highness,
In such a business give me leave to use
The help of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram, what she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord;
But never hope to know why I should marry her.

King. Thou know'st, she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down
Must answer for your raising? I know her well:
She had her breeding at my father's charge.

A poor physician's daughter my wife?—Disdain
Rather corrupt me ever!

King. 'Tis only title thou disdain'st in her, the which
I can build up. Strange is it, that our bloods,
Of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty. If she be
All that is virtuous, (save what thou dislik'st,
A poor physician's daughter thou dislik'st)
Of virtue for the name; but do not so:
From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed:
Where great additions swell' (2) and virtue none,
It is a dropped honour: good alone
Is good, without a name; vileness is so:
The property by what it is should go,
Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;
In these to nature she's immediate heir,
And these bred honour: that is honour's scorn,
Which challenges itself as honour's born,
And is not like the sire: honours thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive,
Than our foregoers. The mere word's a slave,
Debauch'd on every tomb; on every grave,
A lying tyrant, and as old is dumb,
Where dust, and damn'd oblivion, is the tomb
Of honour's bones indeed. What should be said?
If thou canst like this creature as a maid,
I can create the rest. Virtue, and she
Is her own dower; honour, and wealth from me.

Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.

King. Thou wrong'st thyself, if thou shouldst strive to choose.

Hel. That you are well restor'd, my lord, I am glad.
Let the rest go.

King. My honour's at the stake, which to defend,(3)
I must produce my power. Here, take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift,
That dost in vile misprision shake up
My love, and her desert; that canst not dream,
We, poising us in her defective scale,
Shall weigh thee to the beam; that will not know,
It is in us to plant thine honour, where
We please to have it grow. Check thy contempt:
Obey our will, which travels in thy good:
Believe not thy disdain, but presently
Do thine own fortunes that obedient right,
Which both thy duty owes, and our power claims,
Or I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the staggers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate.
Loos'd upon thee in the name of justice,
Without all terms of pity. Speak: thine answer.

Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord, for I submit
My fancy to your eyes. When I consider
What great creation, and what dole of honour,
Flicks where you bid it, I find that she, which late
Was in my noblest thoughts most base, is now
The praised of the king; who, so emmolded,
Is, as 'twere, born so.

King. Take her by the hand,
And tell her, she is thine; to whom I promise
A counterpoise, if not to thy estate,
A balance more replete.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune, and the favour of the king,
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem expedient on the now born(4) brief,
And be performed to-night: the solemn feast
Shall more attend upon the coming space,
Expecting about the ban's. As thou lovest her,
Thou love'st to me religious, else, does err.

[Exit King, Bertram, Helena, Lords, and Attendants.

Laf. Do you hear, monsieur? a word with you.

Par. Your pleasure, sir?

Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation!—My lord? my master?

Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?

Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. My master?

Laf. Are you companion to the Count Roissillon?

Par. To any count; to all counts; to what is man.

Laf. To what is count's man: count's master is of another style.

Par. You are too old, sir: let it satisfy you, you are too old.

Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which title age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries,(5) to be a pretty wise fellow: thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel: it might pass; yet the scars, and the ban-erets about thee, did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden. I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not;
yet art thou good for nothing but taking up, and that thou'rt scarce worth.

Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,

Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which it—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee.
Give me thy hand.

Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.

Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.

Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.

Laf. Yes, good faith, every drachm of it; and I will not bate thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. E'en as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o'the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scar, and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say, in the default, he is a man I know.

Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.

Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my 1 Not in f. s. 2 swell us. 3 defeat: in f. s. 4 The old copies bore. 5 Dining in your company twice.

poor doing eternal: for doing I am past, as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave. [Exit.
Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me, sev'ry, old, filthy, scurvy lord!—Well I must be patient; there is no fettering of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age, than I would have of—I'll beat him: an if I could but meet him again.
Re-enter LAFEU.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married: there's news for you; you have a new mistress.
Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: he is my good lord; whom I serve above is my master.

Laf. Who? God?

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is, that's thy master. Why dost thou garter up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger I'd beat thee: methinks, thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate: you are a vagabond, and no true traveller. You are more saucy with lords and honourable personnages, than the condition of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you. [Exit.

Enter BERTRAM.

Par. Good, very good; it is so then:—good, very good. Let it be concealed a while.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What is the matter, sweetheart?

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn, I will not bed her.

Par. What? what, sweet heart?

Ber. O, my Paroles, they have married me! I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot. To the wars!

Ber. There's letters from my mother: what the import is, I know not yet.

Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy! to the wars! He wears his honour in a box, unseen, That hags his kissey-wissey here at home, Spending his manly marrow in her arms, Which should sustain the bound and high curvet Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions! France is a stable, we, that dwell in 't, jades; Therefore, to the wars!

Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house, Acquaint my mother with my fate to her, And wherefore I am fled; write to the king That which I durst not speak. His present gift Shall furnish me to those Italian fields, Where noble fellows strike. War is no strife To the dark house, and the detested wife.

Par. Will this capriccio hold in thee, art sure?

Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me.

I'll send her straight away: to-morrow I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.

Par. Why, these balls bound, there's noise in it: 'tis hard.

A young man married is a man that's marr'd: Therefore away, and leave her: bravely go; The king has done you wrong: but, hush! 'tis so.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Room in the Same

Enter HELENA and CLOWN.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly: is she well?

Clo. She is not well; but yet she has her health: she's very merry; but yet she is not well: but thanks be given, she's very well, and wants nothing for the world; but yet she is not well.

Hel. If she be very well, what does she all, that she's not very well?

Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things

Hel. What two things?

Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!

Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to head them on; and to keep them on, have them still.—O, my knave! How does my old lady?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles, and I her money, I would she did as you say.

Par. Why, I say nothing.

Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing. To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title, which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away! thou 'rt a knave.

Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knave thou 'rt a knave; that is, before me thou 'rt a knave: this had been truth, sir.

Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool: I have found thee.

Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir, or were you taught to find me?

Par. Go to, I say: I have found thee: no more; I found thee, a witty fool.3

Clo. The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure, and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, faith, and well fed.—Madam, my lord will go away to-night; A very serious business calls on him. The great prerogative and rite of love, Which as your due time claims, he does acknowledge, But puts it off to a compulsory restraint; Whose want, and whose delay, is strewn with sweets, Which they distil now in the embred time, To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy, And pleasure drown the brink.

Hel. What's his will else?

Par. That you will take your instant leave o' the king, And make this haste as your own good proceeding, Strengthen'd with what apology you think May make it probable need.

Hel. What more commands he?

Par. That having this obtain'd, you presently Attend his farther pleasure.

Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.

Par. I shall report it so.

Hel. I pray you.—Come, sirrah. [Exit.
SCENE V.—Another Room in the Same

Enter LAFFKU and BERTRAM.

Laf But, I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approbation.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warrantied testimony.

Laf. Then my dial goés not true. I took this lack for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sworn against his experience, and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes. I pray you, make us friends:
I will pursue the amity.

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. [To BERTRAM] These things shall be done, sir.

Laf. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O! I know him well. Ay, sir; he, sir, is a good workman, a very good tailor.

Ber. [Aside to PAROLLES.] Is she gone to the king?

Par. She is.

Ber. Will she away to-night?

Par. As you'll have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, cast my treasure,
Given order for our horses; and to-night,
When I should take possession of the bride,
End, ere I do begin.

Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner: but one that lies three-thirds and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothing with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten.—God save you, captain.

Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into 't, boots and spurs all, like him that leaped into the custard,2 and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me: there can be no kernel in this light nut: the soul of this man is his clothes: trust him not in matter of hearty consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their natures.—Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you, than you have or will deserve at my hand: but we must do good against evil. [Exit.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

BER. I think so.

Par. Why, do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well; and common speech
Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my elegy.

Enter HELENA.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you,
Spoke with the king, and have procured his leave
For present parting; only he desires
Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.

You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor docs
The ministration and required office
On my particular: prepar'd I was not
For such a business: therefore am I found
So much unsought. This drives me to entreat you,
That presently you take your way for home;
And rather muse than ask why I entreat you,
For my respects are better than they seem:
And my appointments have in them a need,
Greater than shows itself, at the first view,
To you that know them not. This to my mother.

[Giving a letter.]

'T will be two days ere I shall see you: so,
I leave you to your wisdom.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall
With true observance seek to eke out that,
Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd
To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:
My haste is very great. Farewell: hie home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,3
Nor dare I say, 'tis mine, and yet it is,
But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does voueh mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something, and scarce so much:—nothing
indeed—
I would not tell you what I would, my lord—'faith, yes;
Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.

Ber. I pray you stay not, but in haste to horse.

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.
Where are my other men? monsieur, farewell!3 [Exit.

Ber. Go thou toward home; where I will never come,
Whilst I can shake my sword, or hear the drum.—
Away! and for our flight.

Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exeunt.
SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my truth, I take your young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing; meditate ruff; and sing; ask questions, and sing; pick his teeth; and sing; I know a man that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter.

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel, since I was at court. Our old ling and our Isbels o' the country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o' the court; the trains of my Cupid's knocked out, and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here?

Clo. E'en that you have there. [Exit.

Count. [Reads.] I have sent you a daughter-in-law: she hath recovered the keng, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear, I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

"Your unfortunate son, "BEETRAM."

This is not well: rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king!
To pluck his indignation on thy head,
By the misprizing of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire!

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam! yonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort: your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is standing to; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come will tell you more; for my part, I only hear your son was run away.

Enter Helena and two French Gentlemen.

Fr. Gen. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone; for ever gone.

Fr. Gen. Do not say so.

Count. Think upon patience — Pray you, gentlemen,—
I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither, on the start,
Can woman unto 't:—where's my son, I pray you?

Fr. Gen. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence:
We met him thitherward; for thence we came,
And, after some despatch in hand at court,
Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam: here's my passport.

[Reads.] "When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband: but in such a then I write a never."

This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

Fr. Gen. Ay, madam, and for the contents' sake, are sorry for our pains.

Count. I pr'ythee, lady, have a better cheer;
If thou engrossest all the griefs as' thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety. He was my son,
But I do wash his name out of my blood,
And thou art all my child.—Towards Florence is he?

Fr. Gen. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier?

Fr. Gen. Such is his noble purpose; and, believe t,
The duke will lay upon him all the honour
That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

Fr. Gen. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

Hel. [Reads.] "Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

'T is bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

Fr. Gen. 'T is but the boldness of his hand, haply,
Which his heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!
There's nothing here that is too good for him,
But only she; and she deserves a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And call her hourly mistress. Who was with him?

Fr. Gen. A servant only, and a gentleman
Which I have some time known.

Count. Parolles, was it not?

Fr. Gen. Ay, good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement.

Fr. Gen. Indeed, good lady,
The fellow has a deal of that too much,
Which 'hoves' him much to leave."

Count. Y' are welcome, gentlemen.

I will entreat you, when you see my son,
To tell him, that his sword can never win
The honour that he loses: more I'll entreat you
Written to bear along.

Fr. Gen. We serve you, madam,
In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies.

Will you draw near?

[Exeunt Countess and French Gentlemen.

HELENA. "Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France."

Nothing in France, until he has no wife!

Thou shalt have none, Rousillon, none in France;

Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is 't I
That chase thee from thy country, and expose

Those tender limbs of thine to the event

Of the non-sparing war? and is it!

That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou

Was shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark

Of snaky muskets? O! you leaden messengers,

That ride upon the volant speed of fire.

Fly with false aim; wound the still-piercing air

That sings with piercing, do not touch my lord!

Whoever shoots at him, I set him there;

Whoever charges on his forward breast,

I am the caitiff that do hold him to it;

And, though I kill him not, I am the cause

His death was so effect'd. Better were,

I met the ravening lion when he roard

With sharp constraint of hunger; better 't were

That all the miseries which nature gives

Were mine at once. No, come thou home, Rousillon,

Whence honour but of danger wins a scar;

As oft it loses all: I will be gone.

My being here it is that holds thee hence:

Shall I stay here to do it? no, no, although

The air of paradise did fan the house,

And angels offer'd all: I will be gone,

That pitiful rumour may report my flight,

To consolise thine ear. Come, night: end, day;

For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit.

FLORISH. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Parolles, Lords, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

DUKE. The general of our horse thou art; and we,

Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence

Upon thy promising fortune.

BARTER. Sir, it is

A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet

We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake,

To th' extreme edge of hazard.

DUKE. Then go thou forth,

And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm,

As thy auspicious mistress! [Exit.

BARTER. This very day,

Great Mars, I put myself into thy file:

Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove

A lover of thy drum, hater of love. [Exit.

SCENE IV. Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and her Steward.

COUNTESS. Alas! and would you take the letter of her?

Might you not know, she would do as she has done,

'Ye sending me a letter? Read it again.

STEWART. [Reads.] 'I am Saint Jaques' pilgrim, thither gone.

Ambitious love hath so in me offended,

That bare-foot plod I the cold ground upon,

With sainted vow my faults to have amended.

Write, write, that from the bloody course of war,

My dearest master, your dear son, may he:

Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far

His name with zealous fervour sanctify.

His taken labours bid him me forgive:

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth

From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,

Where death and danger dog the heels of worth:

He is too good and fair for death and me,

Whom I myself embrace, to set him free."

COUNT. Ah, what sharp stings are in her midstest words!—

Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much,
As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her,

I could have well diverted her intents,

Which thus she hath prevented.

STEWART. Pardon me, madam:

If I had given you this at over-night,

She might have been o'erta'en; and yet she writes,

Pursuit would be but vain.

COUNT. What angel shall

Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive,

Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear,

And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath

Of greatest justice.—Write, write, Rinaldo,

To this unworthy husband of his wife:

Let every word weigh heavy of her worth,

That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief

Though little he do feel it, set down sharply.

Despatch the most convenient messenger.—

When, haply, he shall hear that she is gone,

He will return: and hope I may, that she,

Hearing so much, will spend her foot again,

Led hither by pure love. Which of them both

Is dearest to me, I have no skill or sense

To make distinction.—Provide this messenger.

My heart is heavy, and mine age is weak;

Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Without the Walls of Florence.

A Tucket afar off. Enter an old Widow of Florence, Diana, Violanta, Mariana, and other Citizens.

WIDOW. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city

We shall lose all the sight.

DIA. They say, the French count has done most honourable service.

WIDOW. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander, and that with his own hand he slew the Duke's brother. We have lost our labour; they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

MARIANA. Come; let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honour of a maid is her name, and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

DIA. I have told my neighbour, how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

MARIA. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles, a filthy officer he is in those suggestions' for the young earl.—Beware of them, Diana; their promises, entertainments, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that drossy succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope, I need not advise you further; but I hope, your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no farther danger known, but the modesty which is so lost.

DIA. You shall not need to fear me.

Enter Helena in the dress of a Pilgrim.

WIDOW. I hope so.—Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house; thither they send one another.

I'll question her.—God save you, pilgrim! Whither are you bound?
SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter BERTRAM, and the two Frenchmen.

Fr. Env. Nay, good my lord, put him to't: let him have his way.

Fr. Gent. If your lordship find him not a hindering, hold me no more in your respect.

Fr. Env. On my life, my lord, a bubble. Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived in him?

Fr. Env. Believe it, my lord: in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most noble coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality, worthy your lordship's entertainment.

Fr. Gent. It were fit you knew him, lest reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might, at some great and trusty business in a main danger, fail you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

Fr. Gent. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

Fr. Env. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him: such I will have, whom, I am sure, he knows not from the enemy. We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination, if he do not, for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

Fr. Gent. O! for the love of laughter, let him fetch off his drum: he says he has a stratagem for 't. When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in 't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter PAROLLES.

Fr. Env. O! for the love of laughter, hinder not the honour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.
Ber. How now, monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

Fr. Gent. Aye, on 't! let it go; 't is but a drum.

Par. But a drum! Is 't but a drum? A drum so lost!—There was an excellent command, to charge in upon our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers!

Fr. Gent. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service: it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success; some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might; but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered. But that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer. I would have that drum or another, or hie jacet.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach to 't, monsieur, if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this inscrutament of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit: if you speed well in it, the Duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what farther becomes his greatness, even to the utmost yiable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now shuffle in it.

Par. I'll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and by midnight look to hear farther from me.

Ber. May I be hold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord: but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know thou art valiant, and to the possibility of thy soldierhip will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Fr. Gent. But you say, she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault. I spoke with her but once and found her wondrous cold: but I sent to her, by this same coxcomb that we have 't the wind, Tokens and letters which she did re-send; and this is all I have done. She's a fair creature Will you go see her?

Fr. Gent. With all my heart, my lord.

SCENE VII.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you misdirect me that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure you farther, but I shall lose the grounds I work upon.

Wid. Though my estate be fall'n, I was well born, Nothing acquainted with these businesses, And would not put my reputation now In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you. First, give me trust, the count he is my husband, And what to your sworn counsel I have spoken, Is so, from word to word; and then you cannot, By the good aid that I of you shall borrow, Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you; For you have show'd me that, which well approves You are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold, And let me buy your friendly help thus far, Which I will over-pay, and pay again, When I have found it. The count he woos your daughter, Lays down his wanting siege before her beauty, Resolved to carry her; let her, in fine, consent, As we'll direct her how 't is best to bear it. Now, his important? blood will nought deny That she 'll demand: a ring the county wears, That downward hath succeeded in his house From son to son, some four or five descents Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds In most rich choice; yet, in his idle fire To buy his will, it would not seem too dear, Howe'er repented after.

Wid. Now I see The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You saw it lawful then. It is no more, But that your daughter, ere she seems as won, Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter; In fine, delivers me to fill the time, Herself most chaustly absent. After this, To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded. Instruct my daughter how she shall persevere, That time and place, with this decent so lawful, May prove coherent. Every night he comes, With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us, To chide him from our ears, for he persists As if his life lay on't.

Hel. Why then, to-night Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed, Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed, And lawful meaning in a lawful act; Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact. But let's about it.

[Exit.}

1 Run him down till he foams at the mouth. 2 Play. 3 Impertinent.
ACT IV.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] You shall hear one anon.
Par. A drum, now, of the enemy’s!

Fr. Env. Throca movensus, cargo, cargo, cargo. All. Cargo, cargo, villainada par corbo, cargo.
Par. O! ransom, ransom!—Do not hide mine eyes.

They seize and blindfold him

1 Sold. Boskos thromuluido boskos.
Par. I know you are the Muskos’ regiment; and I shall lose my life for want of language. If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me: I will discover that which shall undo the Florentine.

1 Sold. Boskos vauvauvo:—I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue.

Kerelybonto.—Sir,
Betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards are at thy bosom.
Par. O!
1 Sold. O! pray, pray, pray.—
Menka revania dulche.
Fr. Env. Ocorlibulchus volivorcho.
1 Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet, and, heedwink’d as thou art, will lead thee on To gather from thee: haply, thou may’st inform Something to save thy life.
Par. O! let me live,
And all the secrets of our camp I’ll show,
Their force, their purposes: nay, I’ll speak that Which you will wonder at.
1 Sold. But wilt thou faithfully?
Par. If I do not, damn me.
1 Sold. Acordo linta.—
Come on! thou art granted space.
[Exit with Parolles guarded]

Fr. Env. Go, tell the count Rousillon, and my brother,
We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffled,
Till we do hear from them.
2 Sold. Captain, I will.
Fr. Env. A’ will betray us all unto ourselves: Instruct me that.
2 Sold. So I will, sir.
Fr. Env. Till then, I’ll keep him dark, and safely lock’d.

SCENE II.—Florence, A Room in the Widow’s House.

Enter Bertram and Diana.
Ber. They told me that your name was Fontibell.
Dia. No, my good lord, Diana.
Ber. Titled goddess, And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, In your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light not your mind, You are too maiden, but a monument: When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stone; And now you should be as your mother was, When your sweet self was got.
Dia. She then was honest.
Ber. So should you be.

Dia.
My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you owe to your wife.

Bel. No more o' that: I pr'ythee, do not strive against my vows. I was compell'd to her; but I love thee By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever Do thee all rights of service.

Dia. Ay, so you serve us, Till we serve you; but when you have our roses, You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves, And mock us with our bareness.

Bel. How have I sworn?

Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth, But the plain single vow, that is vow'd true. What is not holy, that we swear not by, But take the highest to witness: then, pray you, tell me, If I should swear by Jove's great attributes, I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my oaths, When I did love you ill? this has no holding, To swear by him, whom I protest to love, That I will work against him. Therefore, your oaths Are words, and poor conditions, but unseal'd, At least, in my opinion.

Bel. Change it, change it. Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy, And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts, That you do charge men with. Stand no more off, But give thyself unto my sick desires. Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever My love, as it begins, shall so persevere.

Dia. I see, that men make hopes in such a suit That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.

Bel. I' ll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power To give it from me.

Dia. Will you not, my lord?

Bel. It is an honour longing to our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors, Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world In me to lose.

Dia. Mine honour's such a ring: My chastity's the jewel of our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors, Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world In me to lose. Thus, your own proper wisdom Brings in the champion, honour, on my part Against your vain assault.

Bel. Here, take my ring: My house, mine honour, yea, my life be thine, And I'll be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber window: I'll order take my mother shall not hear. Now will I charge you in the band of truth, When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed, Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me. My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them, When back again this ring shall be deliver'd: And on your finger, in the night, I'll put Another ring; that what in time proceeds May taken to the future our past deeds. Adieu, till then; then, fail not. You have won A wife of me, though there my hope be none.

Bel. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven and me! You may so in the end, My mother told me just how he would woo, As if she sat in 's heart: she says, all men Have the like oaths. He had sworn to marry me, When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him, When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braid, Marry that will, I live and die a maid: Only, in this disguise, I think 't no sin, To cozen him, that would unjustly win. [Exit SCENE III.—The Florentine Camp. Enter the two Frenchmen, and two or three Soldiers.

Fr. Gent. You have not given him his mother's letter.

Fr. Env. I have delivered it an hour since: there is something in 't that stings his nature, for on the reading it he changed almost into another man.

Fr. Gent. He has much worthy blain laid upon him, for shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a lady.

Fr. Env. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly within you.

Fr. Gent. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

Fr. Env. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman, here in Florence, of a most chaste renown, and this night he flashes his will in the spoil of her honour; he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

Fr. Gent. Now, God delay our rebellion: as we are ourselves, what things are we!

Fr. Env. Merely our own traitors: and as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflows himself.

Fr. Gent. Is it not most damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to night.

Fr. Env. Not till after midnight, for he is dictated to his hour.

Fr. Gent. That approaches apace: I would gladly have him see his companion* anatomized, that he might take a measure of his own judgment, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.

Fr. Env. We will not meddle with him till he come, for his presence must be the whip of the other.

Fr. Gent. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?

Fr. Env. I hear there is an overture of peace.

Fr. Gent. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

Fr. Env. What will count Rousillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?

Fr. Gent. I perceive by this demand you are not altogether of his council.

Fr. Env. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great deal of his act.

Fr. Gent. Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house; her pretence is a pilgrimage to saint Jacques le Grand, which holy undertaking with most austere sanctimony she accomplished; and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

Fr. Env. How is this justified?

Fr. Gent. The stranger* part of it by her own letters, which make her story true, even to the point of her death; her death itself, which could not be her office to say, is some, and faithfully confirmed by the stories of the place.
Fr. Env. Hath the count all this intelligence?
Fr. Gent. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.
Fr. Env. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.
Fr. Gent. How mightily, sometimes, we make us comforts of our losses.
Fr. Env. And how mightily, some other times, we drown our gain in tears. The great dignity, that his valour hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.
Fr. Gent. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues.

Enter a Servant.

How now? where's your master?
Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.
Fr. Env. They shall be no more needful there, if they were more than they can commend.

Enter Bertram.

Fr. Gent. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartness. Here's his lordship now.—How now, my lord! is't not after midnight?
Ber. I have to-night despatched sixteen businesses, a mouth's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have cong'd with the duke, done my adieu with his nearest, buried a wife, mourned for her, writ to my lady mother I am returning, entertained my convoy; and between these many parcels of despatch effected many nicer needs: the last was the greatest, but that have not ended yet.
Fr. Env. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.
Ber. I mean the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier? Come, bring forth this counterfeit medal; he has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophet.
Fr. Env. Bring him forth. [Execut Soldiers.] He has sat i'the stocks all night, poor gallon knave.
Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?
Fr. Env. I have told your lordship already; the stocks carry him. But, to answer you as you would be understood, he weeps, like a wench that had shed her milk. He hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance, to this very instant disaster of his sitting i'the stocks, and what think you he hath confessed?
Ber. Nothing of me, has he?
Fr. Env. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Re-enter Soldiers, with Parolles.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled? he can say nothing of me: hush! hush!
Fr. Gent. Hoodman comes.—Portotartarossa.
1 Sold. He calls for the tortures: what will you say without 'em?
Par. I will confess what I know without constraint: if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more.
1 Sold. Bosko chimireko.
Fr. Gent. Boblibindo chieturmuro.
1 Sold. You are a merciless general.—Our general bills you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.
1 Sold. "First, demand of him how many horse the duke is strong." What say you to that?
Par. Five or six thousand: but very weak and unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.
1 Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?
Par. Do. I'll take my sacrament on't, how and which way you will.
1 Sold. All's one to him.
Ber. What a past-saving slave is this!
Fr. Gent. Ye are deceived, my lord: this is monsiour Parolles, the gallant militarist, (that was his own phrase) that had the whole theoretick of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger.
Fr. Env. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down,—for I'll speak truth.
Fr. Gent. He's very near the truth in this.
Ber. But I con'm him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.
Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. I humbly thank you, sir. A truth's a truth:
the rogues are marvellous poor.
1 Sold. "Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot." What say you to that?
Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio a hundred and fifty, Sebastian so many, Corambo so many, Jacques so many: Guittian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratii, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chitopher, Vauxmond, Bentii, two hundred fifty each: so that the muskete, rotten and sound, upon my life amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.
Ber. What shall be done to him?
Fr. Gent. Nothing, but let him have thanks.—Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down. "You shall demand of him, whether one captain Dumaine be in't the camp, a Frenchman: what his reputation is with the duke, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in wars; or whether he thinks, it were not possible with well-weighing sums of gold to corrupt him to a revolt." What say you to this? what do you know of it?
Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: demand them singly.
1 Sold. Do you know this captain Dumaine?
Par. I know him: he was a boaster's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the sheriff's fool with child; a dumb innocent, that could not say him, nay. [Dumaine lifts up his hand in anger.
Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though I know, his brains are forfeit to the next tile that fails.
1 Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Florence's camp?
Par. Upon my knowledge he is, and boney.
Fr. Gent. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.
1 Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine, and writ to me this other day to turn

1 An allusion to blind man's buff.—Knight. 2 I.e. give these words to Bertram. 3 Hook by which it was attached. 4 Ours.
him out o' the band I think, I have his letter in my pocket.
1 Sold. Marry, we'll search.
Par. In good sadness, I do not know: either it is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other letters, in my tent.
1 Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper: shall I read it to you?
Par. I do not know if it be it, or no.
Ber. Our interpreter does it well.
Fr. Gent. Excellently.
1 Sold. [Reads.] "Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold."
Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurements of one count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very ruttish. I pray you, sir, put it up again.
1 Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.
Par. My meaning in 't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whale to virginity, and devours up all the fry it finds.
Ber. Damnable, both-sides rogue!
1 Sold. [Reads.] "When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it;
After he scores, he never pays the score:
Half won is match well made; match, and well make it:
He ne'er pays after debts; take it before,
And say, a soldier, Dian, told thee this.
Men are to mells with, boys are not to kiss:
For count of this, the count's a fool. I know it,
Who pays before, but not where he does owe it.
"Thine, as he vow'd thee in thine ear,
"Parolles?"
Ber. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in's forehead.
Fr. Env. This is your devoted friend, sir; the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.
Ber. I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.
1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by our general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.
Par. My life, sir, in any case! not that I am afraid to die; but that my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature. Let me live, sir, in a dungeon, 'tis the stocks, or any where, so I may live.
1 Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely: therefore, once more to this captain Dumatine. You have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valour: what is his honesty?
Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister; for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus. He professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking them he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool. Drunkenness is his best virtue; for he will be swine-drunk, and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.
Fr. Gent. I begin to love him for this.
Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him! for me he is more and more a cat.
1 Sold. What say you to his expertise in war?
Par. Faith, sir, he has led the drum before the English tragedians,—to bellie him, I will not,—and more of his soldiers he know not; except, in that country, he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the doubling of files: I would do the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certain.
Fr. Gent. He hath out-villain'd villainy so far, that the rarity redeems him.
Ber. A pox on him! he's a cat still.
1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revolt.
Par. Sir, for a quart d' eau he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.
1 Sold. What's his brother, the other captain Dumaine?
Fr. Env. Why does he ask him of me?
1 Sold. What's he?
Par. E'en a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat he out-runs any lackey; marry, in coming on he has the cramp.
1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?
Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, count Rousillon.
1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.
Par. [Aside.] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count. Have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush, where I was taken?
1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die. The general says, you, that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die. Come, head-smans; off with his head.
Par. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death!
1 Sold. That shall you; and take your leave of all your friends. [Unraveling him.] So, look about you: know you any here?
Ber. Good-morrow, noble captain.
Fr. Env. God bless you, captain Parolles.
Fr. Gent. God save you, noble captain.
Fr. Env. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Laffin? I am for France.
Fr. Gent. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalf of the count Rousillon? an I were not a very coward, I'd compel it of you; but fare you well.
[Exit Bertram, Frenchmen, &c.
1 Sold. You are undone, captain; all but your scarlet, that has a knot on't yet.
Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?
1 Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were, that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare you well, sir; I am for France too: we shall speak of you there. [Exit
Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great, 'T would burst at this. Captain I'll be no more: But I will eat, and drink, and sleep as soft As captain shall: simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart, Let him fear this; for it will come to pass.
That every braggart shall be found an ass.
Rust, sword! cool, blushes! and Parolles, live
Safest in shame! being fool’d, by foolery thrive!
There’s place and means for every man alive.
I’ll after them. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Florence. A Room in the Widow’s House.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong’d you,
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety: ’fore whose throne, ’tis needful,
Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneel.
Time was I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude
Through thiny Tartar’s bosom would peep forth
And answer, thanks. I duly am informed,
His grace is at Marseilles, to which place
We have convenient convey. You must know,
I am supposed dead: the army breaking,
My husband hies him home; where, heaven aiding,
And by the leave of my good lord the king,
We’ll be before our welcome.

Dian. Gentle madam,
You never had a servant, to whose trust
Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nor you, mistress,
Ever a friend, whose thoughts more truly labour
To recompense your love: doubt not, but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter’s dower,
As it hath fated her to be my motive,
And helper to a husband. But O, strange men!
That can so sweet use make of what they hate,
When saucy trusting of the eoz’en thoughts
Defles the pitchy night! so lust doth play
With what it loathes, for that which is away.
But more of this hereafter.—You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions, yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

Dian. Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet, I pray you:
But with the world! the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our waggon is prepar’d, and time reviles us:
“All’s well that ends well! still the fine’s the crown;
What’er the course, the end is the renown.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Countess, Laf., and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no; your son was mislaid with a snipt-taffeta fellow there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbooked and doughty youth of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour. And you son here at home, more advanced by the king, than by that red-tailed humpback I speak of.

Count. I would I had not known him. It was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman, that ever nature had praise for creating: she had partaken of my ease, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. ’Twas a good lady, ’t was a good lady: we may pick a thousand salades, ere we light on such another herb.

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the salad, or, rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not pot-herbs, you know; they are nose-herbs.

Clo. I am no great Neuchadnezzar, sir; I have not much skill in grass.

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself, a knave, or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman’s service, and a knave at a man’s.

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bandle, sir, to do her service.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and fool.

Clo. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who’s that? a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith, sir, a’ has an English name; but his phisnomy is more hotter in France, than there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The black prince, sir; alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there’s my purse. I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of: serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire; and the master I speak of, ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world; let the nobility remain in’s court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some, that humble themselves, may; but the many will be too chilth and tender, and they’ll be for the flowery way, that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be a-heap’d of thee;
And I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways: let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon ’em, sir, they shall be jades’ tricks, which are their own right by the law of nature.

[Exit.

Laf. A shrewd knave, and an unhappy.

Count. So a’ is. My lord, that’s gone, made himself much sport out of him: by his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauciness; and, indeed, he has no place, but runs where he will.

Laf. I like him well; ’t is not amiss. And I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good lady’s death, and that my lord, your son, was upon his return home, I moved the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which, in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-graceful remembrance, did first propose. His highness hath promised me to do it; and to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter. How does your ladyship like it?

Count. With very much content, my lord; and I wish it happily effect't.

SCENE I.—Marseilles. A Street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting, day and night,
Must wear your spirits low: we cannot help it; But, since you have made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. In happy time,
Enter a Gentleman, a Stranger.
This man may help me to his majesty’s ear,
If he would spend his power.—God save you, sir.

Gent. And you.
Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

Gent. I have been sometimes there.
Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen
From the report that goes upon your goodness;
And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues, for which
I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What’s your will?
Hel. That it will please you,
To give this poor petition to the king,
And aid me with that store of power you have,
To come into his presence.

Gent. The king’s not here.
Hel. Not here, sir?

Gent. Not, indeed:
He hence remov’d last night, and with more haste
Than is his use.

Wid. Lord, how we lose our pains!
Hel. All’s well that ends well yet,
Though time seem so adverse, and means unprofitable.
I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Rousillon;
Whither I am going.
Hel. I do beseech you, sir,
Since you are like to see the king before me,
Commend the paper to his gracious hand;
Which, I presume, shall render you no blame,
But rather make you thank your pains for it.
I will come after you, with what good speed
Our means will make us mean.

Gent. This I’ll do for you.
Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thanked;
Whate’er falls more.—We must to horse again:—
Go, go, provide.
[Exeunt.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O, madam! yonder’s my lord your son with a patch of velvet on his face: whether there be a scar under it, or no, the velvet knows; but ’tis a goodly patch of velvet. His left cheek is a check of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

Hel. A scar nobly got; or a noble scar, is a goodly livery of honour; so, belike, is that.

Clo. But it is your carbonadoed face.

Hel. Let us go see your son, I pray you: I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

Clo. ‘Tis faith, there’s a dozen of ’em, with delicate fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head, and nod at every man.
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. The inner Court of the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Clown, and Parolles, ill-favoured.

Par. Good monsieur Lavatch, give my lord Lafan this letter. I have ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes;
but I am now, sir, muddied in fortune’s mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, fortune’s displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune’s buttering. Pr’ythee, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir: I spake but by a metaphor.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose: or against any man’s metaphor. Pr’ythee, get thee farther.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh! pr’ythee, stand away: a paper from fortune’s close-stool to give to a nobleman! Look, here he comes himself.

Enter Lafan.

Par. My lord, I am a man whom fortune hath ruinously scratched.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? ’tis too late to pare her nails now. Whereas have you played the knave with fortune, that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady, and would not have knives thrive long under her? There’s a quart d’ecreux for you. Let the justices make you and fortune friends;
I am for other business.

Par. I beseech your honour to hear me one single word.

Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall ha’; save your word.

Par. My name, my good lord, is Parolles.

Laf. You beg more than one word. then,—Cox! my passion! give me your hand.—How does your drum?

Par. O, my good lord! you were the first that found me.

Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lovt

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Lafeu, Lords, Gentlemen, Guards, &c.

King. We lost a jewel of her, and our esteem Was made much poorer by it: but your son, As mad in folly, lacked the sense to know Her estimation home.

Count. ‘Tis past, my liege; And I beseech your majesty to make it Natural rebellion, done i’ the blaze of youth: When oil and fire, too strong for reason’s force, O’erbear it, and burns on.

King. My honour’d lady, I have forgiven and forgotten all, Though my revenges were high bent upon him, And watch’d the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say.—But first I beg my pardon,—the young lord Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady, Offence of mighty note, but to himself The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife, Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive; Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn’d to serve Humbly call’d mistress.

King. Praising what is lost Makes the remembrance dear. —Well, call him hither. We are reconcil’d, and the first view shall kill All repetition.—Let him not ask our pardon: The nature of his great offence is dead, And deeper than oblivion we do bury The lensing reliefs of it: let him approach, A stranger, no offender; and inform him, So’t is our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit Gentleman.

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoke? Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me,

That set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on’t.

King. I am not a day of season, For thou may’st see a sunshine and a hail In me at once; but to the brightest beams Distracted clouds give way: so stand thou forth: The time is fair again.

Ber. My high repented blames, Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole; Not one word more of the consumed time, Let’s take the instant by the forward top— For we are old, and on our quick’st decees Tli’ inaudible and noiseless foot of time Stals, ere we can effect them. You remember The daughter of this lord.

Ber. Admiringly.

My liege, at first.

I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart

Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:

Where the impression of mine eye infixed,

Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,

Which warp’d the line of every other favour,

Scorn’d a fair colour, or express’d it stolen,

Extended or contracted all proportions,

To a most hideous object. Thence it came,

That she, whom all men prais’d, and whom myself,

Since I have lost, have lov’d, was in mine eye

The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excuse’d:

That thou didst love her strikes some scorns away From the great compt. But love, that comes too late, Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,

To the great sender turns a sore offence,

Crying, that’s good that’s gone. Our rash faults Make trivial price of serious things we have,

Not knowing them, until we know their grave:

Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,

Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust;

Our own love, waking, cries to see what’s done,

While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.

Be this sweet Helen’s knell, and now forget her.

Send for thy amorous token for fair Maudlin:

The main consents are had; and here we’ll stay To see our widow’s second marriage-day.

Laf. Which better than the first, O dear heaven, bless!

Or, are they meet, in me, O nature, cease?

Come on, my son, in whom my horse’s name Must be digested, give a favour from you,

To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,

That she may quickly come.—By my old beard, And every hair that’s on’t, Helen, that’s dead,

Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,

The last time ere she took her leave at court,

I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,

While I was speaking, oft was fasten’d to’t.—

This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,

I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood Necessitied to help, that by this token I would relieve her. Had you that craft to reave her Of what should steady her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign,

However it pleases you to take it so,

The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,

I have seen her wear it; and she reckon’d it At her life’s rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceiv’d: my lord, she never saw it.

In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,

Wrapp’d in a paper, which contained the name Of her that threw it. Noble she was, and thought I stood engag’d; but when I had subserib’d To mine own fortune, and inform’d her fully I could not answer in that course of honour As she had made the overture, she ceas’d; In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the ring again.
King. Plutus himself.
That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine,¹
Hath not in nature's mystery more secrets.
Than I have in this ring, 'twas mine, 'twas Helen's,
Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted with 't yourself,
Confess 't was hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She call'd the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her fingers,
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
Where you have never come, or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour,
And mak'st conjunctural fears to come into me,
Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove That thou art so inhuman—'t will not prove so;—
And yet I know not:—thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead;—which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe.
More than to see this ring.—Take him away.—

[Guards seize BERTRAM.

My fore-past proofs, how'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little.—Away with him!
We'll sift this matter farther.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit BERTRAM, guarded.

Enter the Gentleman, a Stranger.²

King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thoughts.

Gent. Gracious sovereign,
Whether I have been to blame, or no, I know not:
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath, for four or five removes, come short
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor suppliants, who by this, I know,
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage; and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads.] "Upon his many protestations to marry me, when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the count Rousillon a widower:
his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him.
He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice. Grant it me, O king! in you it best liest; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone."[DONA CAPILLET.

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and tell him: for this, I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafon,
To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these suitors.—
Go speedily, and bring again the count.

[Exit Gentleman, and some Attendants.

I am afraid, the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatched.

Count. Now, justice on the doers!

Re-enter BERTRAM, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, for, wives are monsters to you;³
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry.—What woman's that?

Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow, and DIANA.

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine,
Derived from the ancient Capilet. [Kneeling.

My suit, as I do understand, you know,
And therefore know how far I may be pitied.

Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer under this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedy.

King. Come hither, country.⁴ Do you know these women?

Ber. My lord, I neither can, nor will deny
But that I knew them. Do they charge me farther?

Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife?

[Rising.

Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.

Dia. If you shall marry
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine:
You give away myself, which is known mine;
For I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me,
Either both, or none.

Laf. [To BERTRAM.] Your reputation comes too short for my daughter: you are no husband for her.

Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desolate creature.
Whom sometime I have laugh'd with. Let your highness
Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour,
Than so to think that I would sink it here. [friend;

King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to Tell your deeds gain them: fairer prove your honour
Than in my thought it lies.

Dia. Good my lord,
Ask him upon his oath, if he does think
He had not my virginity.

King. What say'st thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent, my lord
And was a common gamester to the camp.

Dia. He does me wrong, my lord: if I were so,
He might have bought me at a common price:
Do not believe him. O! behold this ring,
Whose high respect, and rich validity,
Did lack a parallel; yet, for all that,
He gave it to a commoner o' the camp,
If I be one.

Count. He blushes, and 't is his.

Of six preceding ancestors, that gem
Conferred by testament to the sequent issue,
Hath it been ow'd and worn. This is his wife.
That ring's a thousand proofs.

King. Menthought, you said,
You saw one here in court could witness it.

Dia. I did, my lord, but loth am to produce
So bad an instrument: his name's Parolles.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be.

King. Find him, and bring him hither.

Ber. What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave,
With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debauch'd,
Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth.
Am I or that, or this, for what he'll utter,
That will speak any thing?

King. She hath that ring of yours
Ber. I think, she has: certain it is, I lik'd her,
And boarded her i' the wanton way of youth.
She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancy's course
Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine,
Her infinite cunning;⁵ with her modern grace,

¹ An allusion to the Alchemists. ² Enter a Gentleman; in f. e. ³ A "toll" was paid for the privilege of selling a horse at a fair.
⁴ This word is inserted in place of "sin" in Lord F. Egerton's MS. annotated folio, 1623. ⁵ Not in f. e. ⁶ count; in f. e. ⁷ Not in f. e. — Old copies: hit (the old form of it). ⁸ In suit coming; in f. e.
Subdued me to her rate; she got the ring,
And I had that, which any inferior might
At market-price have bought.

Dia. I must be patient:
You, that turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May justly diet me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband)
Send for your ring; I will return it home,
And give me mine again.

Ber. I have it not.

King. What ring was yours, I pray you?

Dia. Sir, much like
The same upon your finger.
King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of late.
Dia. And this was it I gave him, being a-bed.

King. The story then goes false,—you threw it him
Out of a casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth.

Enter Parolles.

Ber. My lord. I do confess, the ring was hers.

King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.

Is this the man you speak of?

Dia. Ay, my lord.

King. Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge you,
Not fearing the displeasure of your master,
(Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off)
By him, and by this woman here, what know you?

Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honorable gentleman: tricks he hath had in him, which gentleman have.

King. Come, come, to the purpose. Did he love this woman?

Par. 'Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?

King. How, I pray you?

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.

King. How is that?

Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.

King. As thou art a knave, and no knave.

What an equivocal companion is this!

Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.

Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty orator.

Dia. Do you know, he promised me marriage?

Par. 'Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou know'st?

Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her, and talked of Satan, and of baim, and of forries, and I knew not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things that would derive me ill will to speak of: therefore, I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst Say they are married. But thou art too fine
In thy evidence; therefore, stand aside.

This ring, you say, was yours?

Dia. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.
If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower,
Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower;
For I can guess, that by thy honest aid
Thou kept'st a wife herself, thyself a maid.—

Of that, and all the progress, more and less,
Resolvedly more leisure shall express:
All yet seems well; and if it end so meet,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

EPILOGUE BY THE KING.

The king's a beggar, now the play is done.
All is well ended, if this suit be won,
That you express content; which we will pay,
With strife to please you, day exceeding day:
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;
Your gentle hails lend us, and take our hearts.

SCENE, a City in Illyria; and the Sea-coast near it.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Curio, Lords. Music playing. 1

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on:
Give me excess of it; that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again—it had a dying fall:
O! it came o'er my ear like the sweet south, 2
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing, and giving odour.—Enough! no more:
[Music ceases.

'T is not so sweet now, as it was before.
O! spirit of love! how quick and fresh art thou,
That, notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity 3 and pitch soe'er,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute! so full of shapes is fancy,
That it alone is high-fantastical.

Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord?

Duke. What, Curio?

Cur. The hart.

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have.
O! when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she pors'd the air of pestilence:
That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'en since pursue me. —How now! what news from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:—
The element itself, till seven years' heat.
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloestress, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this, to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh
And last in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O! she that hath a heart of that fine frame,

1 Musicians attending: in f.e. 2 The old copies read: sound; Pope made the change. 3 Not in f.e. 4 Value. 5 My thoughts
Vio. What is his name?

Cap. Orsino.

Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him: He was a bachelor then.

Cap. And so is now, or was so very late; For but a month ago I went from hence, And then 'twas fresh in murmur, (as, you know, What great ones do the less will prattle of) That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.

Vio. What's she?

Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count That did some twelvescore since; then leaving her In the protection of his son, her brother, Who shortly also died: for whose dear love, They say, she hath abjur'd the company, And sight of men.

Vio. O! that I serv'd that lady, And might not be deliver'd to the world, Till I had made mine own occasion mellow, What my estate is.

Cap. That were hard to compass, Because she will admit no kind of suit, No, not the duke's.

Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain, And though that nature with a beauteous wall Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits With this thy fair and outward character. I pr'ythee, (and I'll pay thee bounteously) Conceal me what I am, and be my aid For such disguise as happy shall become The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke: Thou shalt present me as an examinee to him. It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing, And speak to him in many sorts of music, That will allow me very worth his service. What else may hap to time I will commit; Only, shape thou thy silence to my wit.

Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be: When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.

Vio. I thank thee. Lead me on. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in OLIVIA’S House.

Enter SIR TOBY BELCH, and MARIA.

SIR TOBY. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to her.

MAR. By my troth, sir Toby, you must come in earlier o'clock: your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

SIR TOBY. Why, let her except before excepted.

MAR. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

SIR TOBY. Confine? I'll confine myself no finer than I am. These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too: an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

MAR. That quaffing and drinking will undo you; I heard my lady talk of it yesterday, and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here to be her wooer.

SIR TOBY. Who? Sir Andrew Ague-cheek?

MAR. Ay, he.

SIR TOBY. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

MAR. What's that to the purpose?

SIR TOBY. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

MRS. ARY, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats: he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

SIR TOBY. Fie, that you'll say so! he plays o' the viol-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

MAR. He hath, indeed,—all most natural; for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and, but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

SIR TOBY. By this hand, they are scandrels, and substractors that say so of him. Who are they?

MAR. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

SIR TOBY. With drinking healths to my niece. I'll drink to her, as long as there is a passage in my throat, and drink in Illyria. He's a coward, and a coistrel, that will not drink to my niece, till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top. What, wench! Castellano vulgo,* here comes Sir Andrew Ague-face.

Enter SIR ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.

SIR ANDREW. Sir Toby Belch! how now, sir Toby Belch?

SIR TOBY. Sweet sir Andrew.

SIR ANDREW. Bless you, fair shrew.

MAR. And you too, sir.

SIR TOBY. Accost, sir Andrew, accost.

SIR ANDREW. What's that?

SIR TOBY. My niece's chamber-maid.

SIR ANDREW. Good mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

MAR. My name is Mary, sir.

SIR ANDREW. Good mistress Mary Accost,—

SIR TOBY. You mistake, knight: accost is from her, board her, woo her, assail her.

SIR ANDREW. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of accost?

MAR. Fare you well, gentlemen.

SIR TOBY. An thou let her part so, sir Andrew, would thou mightest never draw sword again!

SIR ANDREW. An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

MAR. Sir, I have not you by the hand.

SIR ANDREW. Marry, but you shall have here's my hand.

MAR. Now, sir, thought is free. I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

SIR ANDREW. Wherefore, sweet heart? what's your metaphor?

MAR. It's dry, sir.

SIR ANDREW. Why, I think so: I am not such an ass, but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

MAR. A dry jest, sir.

SIR ANDREW. Are you full of them?

MAR. Ay, sir. I have them at my fingers' ends; marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren. [Exit MARIA.]

SIR TOBY. O knight! thou lack'st a cup of canary. When did I see thee so put down?

SIR ANDREW. Never in your life, I think; unless you see canary put me down. Methinks, sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian, or an ordinary man has, but I am a great eater of beef, and, I believe, that does harm to my wit.

SIR TOBY. No question.

SIR ANDREW. An I thought that, I'd forswear it. I'll ride home to-morrow, sir Toby.

1 Old eds. sight, and company. 2 Fine, brave. 3 From lewer, a mongrel kind of hawk. 4 A large top was formerly kept in parishes or towns, for the use of the public. 5 Sir Toby's mistake, says Verplanck, for eel—Put on a grave face. 6 This word is set io n. * This was considered a sign of debility.
Sir To. Pourquoi, my dear knight?
Sir And. What is pourquoit? do or not do? I would had bestowed that time in the tongues, that I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting. O, had I but followed the arts!
Sir To. Then hadst thou an excellent head of hair. Sir And. Why, that would have mended my hair? Sir To. Past question; for, thou seest, it will not cut by nature.
Sir And. But it becomes me well enough, does't not? Sir To. Excellent: it hangs like flax on a distaff, and I hope to see a housewife take thee between her legs, and spin it off.
Sir And. ' Faith, I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby: your niece will not be seen; or, if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me. The count himself, here hard by.
Sir To. She 'lone o' the count: she 'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, years, nor wit; I have heard her swear it. Tut, there's life in 't, man.
Sir And. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow of the strangest mind i the world: I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether.
Sir To. Art thou good at these kick-shaws, knight? Sir And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters: and yet I will not compare with an old man.
Sir To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight? Sir And. ' Faith, I can cut a caper.
Sir To. And I can cut the butt to't.
Sir And. Ay, and I think I have the back-trick, simply as strong as any man in Illyria. [Dances fantastically.
Sir To. Whereare are these things hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before them? are they like to take dust, like Mistress Mull's picture? why dost thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig: I would not so much as make water, but in a sink-a-pace. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.
Sir And. Ay, 't is strong, and it does indifferent well in a dun-coloured stock. Shall we set about these revels?
Sir To. What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurus?
Sir And. Taurus? that's sides and heart.
Sir To. No, sir, it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper. [Sir And. dances again.]
Sir To. Ha! higher: ha, ha!—excellent!

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vio. You either fear his humour or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love.

Is he inconstant, sir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe me.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Vio. Thank you. Here comes the count.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Duke. Stand you awhile aloof. [Curio. &c. retire.

Cesario.

Thou know'st no less but all: I have unclasp'd To thee the book even of my secret soul; Therefore, good youth, address thy guilt unto her: Be not denied access, stand at her doors, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow, Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duke. Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds. Rather than make unprofited return.

Vio. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?

Duke. O! then unfold the passion of my love; Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith: It shall become thee well to act my woes; She will attend it better in thy youth. Than in a nuncio of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. Dear mad, believe it For they shall yet belie thy happy years, That say thou art a man: Diana's lip Is not more smooth, and rubious; thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill, and sound, And all is summable a woman's part, I know, thy constellation is right apt For this affair.—Some four, or five, attend him: All, if you will, for I myself am best, Though least in company.—Prosper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord To call his fortune thine.

Vio. I'll do my best, To woo your lady: [Aside.] yet, O, barbarous strife! Who'er I woo myself would be his wife. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria, and Clown.

Mar. Nay; either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse. My lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me: he that is well hanged in this world needs to fear no colours.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good better answer I can tell thee where that saying was born of, I fear no colours.

Clo. Where, good mistress Mary?

Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent: or, to be turned away, is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage and for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute, then?

Clo. Not so neither; but I am resolved on two points. Mar. That, if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Clo. Aipt, in good faith: very apt. Well, go thy way: if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o' that. Here comes my lady: make your excuse, wisely; you were best.

[Exit.
Enter Olivia, and Malvolio.

Clo. Wit, ain’t thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools: and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapalus? Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit.—God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, you’re a dry fool; I’ll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself, if he mend, he is no longer dishonest: if he cannot, let the better mend him. Any thing that’s mended is but patched: virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin: and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true eneckold but calamity, so beauty’s a flower.—The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take away you.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree!—Lady, et-culus non facit monachum: that’s as much as to say, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexterously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna. Good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness I’ll bide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourn’st thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother’s death.

Clo. I think, his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother’s soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes; and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for twopenny that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal: I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he’s out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gained. I protest, I take these wise men, that crow so at these set kind of fools, to be no better than the fools’ amories.

Oli. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts, that you deem cannon-bullets. There is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now, Mercury endue thee with leasing, for thou speakest well of fools.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentle man much desires to speak with you.

Oli. From the count Orsino, is it?

Mar. I know not, madam: it is a fair young man and well attended.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you: he speaks nothing but madman. Fie on him! [Exit Maria.] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the count, I am sick, or not at home: what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit Mal-volio.] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldest son should be a fool, whose skull Jove cravm with brains: for here comes one of thy kin, that has a most weak pia materia.

Enter Sir Toby Belch.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk.—What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman! What gentleman?

Sir To. ‘Tis a gentleman here.—A plague o’ these pickle-herings!—How now, sot?

Clo. Good sir Toby,—

Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy?

Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery! There’s one at the gate.

Oli. Ay, marry; what is he?

Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not: give me faith, say I. Well, it’s all one. [Exit.

Oli. What’s a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a drown’d man, a fool, and a madman: one draught above heat makes him a fool, the second mads him, and a third drowns him.

Oli. Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o’ my eoz, for he’s in the third degree of drink; he’s drown’d; go, look after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit Clo.]

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, you’d young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick: he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you. I told him you were asleep; he seems, to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? he’s fortified against any denial.

Oli. Tell him, he shall not speak with me.

Mal. He has been told so; and he says, he’ll stand at your door like a sheriff’s post, or be the supporter to a bench, but he’ll speak with you.

Oli. What kind of man is he?

Mal. Why, of man kind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner: he’ll speak with you, will you, or no.

Oli. Of what personage, and yeares is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before it is a peascod, or a coding when it’s almost an apple: ’tis with him e’en standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favoured, and he speaks very shrivelsly: one would think, his mother’s milk were scarce out of him.

Oli. Let him approach. Call in my gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlemwoman, my lady calls [Exit.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Re-enter Maria.

Oli. Give me my veil; come, throw it o’er my face. We’ll once more hear Orsino’s embassy.

Enter Viola.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, which is she?

Oli. Speak to me; I shall answer for her. Your will?

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her; I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustin no scorn; I am very compitable even to the least minister usage.

Oli. Whence came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question’s out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart; and yet, by the very fangs of malice I swear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am.

Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to bestow, is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission. I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in’t: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas! I took great pains to study it, and ’tis poetical. Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard, you were saucy at my gates, and allowed your approach, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: ‘tis not that time of moon with me to lose one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabber; I am to hull here a little longer.—Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind: I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage. I hold the olive in my hand: my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you?

Vio. The rudeness that hath appear’d in me, have I learn’d from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead: to your ears, divinity; to any other’s, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone. We will hear this divinity. [Exit Maria.] Now, sir; what is your text?

Vio. Most sweet lady,—

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?

Vio. In Orsino’s bosom.

Oli. In his bosom! In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Oli. O! I have read it: it is heresy. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.

Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? you are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and show you the picture. Look you, sir; such a one I am at this present: is’t not well done? [Unveiling.

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Oli. ’Tis in grain, sir: it will endure wind and weather.

Vio. ’Tis beauty truly blent, whose red a, white Nature’s own sweet and cunning hand laid on.

Lady. you are the cruellest she alive, If you will lead these graces to the grave, And leave the world no copy.

Oli. O! sir, I will not be so hard-hearted. I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle, and utensil, labelled to my will; as, item, two lips indifferent red: item, two grey eyes with lids to them: item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see what you are: you are too proud:

But, if you were the devil, you are fair.

My lord and master loves you: O! such love Should be but recompens’d, though you were crown’d The nonpareil of beauty!

Oli. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, fertile tears,

With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oli. Your lord doth know my mind; I cannot love him:

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,

Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;

In voices well divulg’d, free, learn’d, and valiant,

And in dimension, and the shape of nature,

A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him.

He might have took his answer long ago.

Vio. If I did love you in my master’s flame,

With such a suffering, such a deadly life,

In your denial I would find no sense:

I would not understand it.

Oli. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,

And call upon my soul within the house;

Write loyal cantons of contemned love,

And sing them loud even in the dead of night;

Halloo your name to the reverberate hills,

And make the babbling gossip of the air

Cry out, Olivia! O! you should not rest

Between the elements of air and earth,

But you should pity me.

Oli. You might do much. What is your parentage?

Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman.

Oli. Get you to your lord:

I cannot love him. Let him send no more,

Unless, perchance, you come to me again.

To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well:

I thank you for your pains. Spend this for me [Offering her purse.

Vio. I am no feed’st, post, lady; keep your purse:

My master, not myself, lacks recompense.

Love make his heart of flint that you shall love,

And let your fervor, like my master’s, be

Plac’d in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty. [Exit.

Oli. What is your parentage?

"Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:

I am a gentleman.”—I’ll be sworn thou art:

Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit,

Do give thee five-fold blazon.—Not too fast:—soft!

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no. My stars shine darkly over me: the malignity of my fate might, perhaps, distemper yours; therefore, I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone. It was a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No, sooth, sir. My determinate voyage is more extravagancy; but I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in: therefore, it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Roderigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom, I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been pleased, would we had so ended! but, you, sir, altered that; for some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas, the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not with self-estimation wander so far to believe that; yet thus far I will boldly publish—she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair. She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O, good Antonio! forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for your love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness; and I am yet so near the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the count Orsino’s court; farewell.

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino’s court, Else would I very shortly see thee there; But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Viola; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?

Would I, or not: tell him, I’ll none of it. Desire him not to flatter with his lord, Nor hold him up with hopes: I am not for him. If that the youth will come this way to-morrow, I’ll give him reasons for’t. Hie thee, Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Exeunt.

Vio. Even now, sir: on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir: you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away your- self. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him. And one thing more: that you be never so hardly to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord’s taking of this: receive it so.

Vio. She took no ring of me! I’ll none of it.

Mal. Come, sir; you peevishly threw it to her, and her will is, it should be so returned: if it be worth stooping for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it.

Exit.

Vio. I left no ring with her: what means this lady? Fortune forbid my outside have not charm’d her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, That, methergh, her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speak in starts distractedly. She loves me, sure: the cunning of her passion Invites me in this churlish messenger. None of my lord’s ring? why he sent her none. I am the man:—if it be so, as’t is, Poor lady, she were better love a dream. Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness, Wherein the pregnant enemy does much. How easy it is, for the proper false In women’s waken hearts to set their forms! Alas! your frailty is the cause, not we, For such as we we made, if such we be. How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly; And I, poor monster, fond as much on him; And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. What will become of this? As I am man, My state is desperate for my master’s love; As I am woman, now, alas the day! What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe! O time! thou must untangle this, not I; It is too hard a knot for me t’ untie.

Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in Olivia’s House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek.

Sir To. Approach, sir Andrew: not to be a-bed after midnight is to be up betimes; and diligere surgere. thou know’st.—

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not; but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

Sir To. A false conclusion: I hate it as an unfilled can. To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Does not our life consist of the four elements?

1 Foolish. 2 Own. 3 with such estimable wonder overfast believe that: In f. s. the: In f. e. 4 Suit. 5 diligere surgere salutum. a wum est. As a sage quoted in Lily’s Latin Grammar.
Sir And. 'Faith, so they say; but, I think, 'tis rather consists of eating and drinking.
Sir To. Thou art a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink.—Marian, I say!—a stoop of wine!

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, 'tis faith.
Clo. Here, now, my hearts! Did you never see the picture of we three? 2

Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let 's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. 3 I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spakest of Pigrogromites, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Quenibus: 't was very good, i' faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy lemon; hadst it? Clo. I did impetrate thy gratuity: for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock: my lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sir And. Excellent! Why this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir To. Come on: there is sixpence for you; let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of us, too: if one knight give away sixpence so will I give another: go to, a song. 4

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

Sir To. O, mistress mine! where are you roaming?
O! stay, for here's your true love's coming,
That can sing both high and low.
Trip no farther, pretty sweeting;
Journeys end in lovers' meeting.
Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, i' faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? 'tis not hereafter:
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What's to come is still unsure;
In delay there lies no plenty;
Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, i' faith.
Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagon. But shall we make the velkin dance indeed? Shall we rouse the night? I'm a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am a dog at a catch.

Clo. By 'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our catch be, "Thou Knave." 5

Clo. "Hold thy peace, thou knave," knight? I shall be constrain'd in't to call the knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrain'd one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins, "Hold thy peace."

Clo. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good i' faith. Come, begin.

[They sing a catch.

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a catterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward, Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady's a Catalian; we are politicians: Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsey; 6 and three merry men be we. 7 Am not I consanguineous? am I not of her blood? Tilly-valley, lady! 8 There dwelt a woman in Babylon, lady, lady. 107

[Singing.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be disposed and so do I too: he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. O! the twelfth day of December?—

[Singing.

Mar. For the love o' God, peace.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your cozie's 11 catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time, in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches Stick up. 12

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though she harbour you as her kinsman, she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanours, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. "Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone." 13

[Singing.

Mar. Nay, good sir Toby.

Clo. "His eyes do show his days are almost done."

[Singing.

Mal. Is't even so?

Sir To. "But I will never die."

Clo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. "Shall I bid him go?"

Clo. "What an if you do?"

Sir To. "Shall I bid him go, and spare not?"

Clo. "O! no, no, no, no, you dare not."

Sir To. Out o' tune. 14—Sir, ye lie. Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale? 15

Clo. Yes, by saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot i' the mouth too.

Sir To. Thou 'rt i' the right.—Go, sir: rub your chain with crumbs. 16—A stoop of wine, Maria!

Mal. Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favour at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule: she shall know of it by this hand.

[Exit.

Mar. Go shake your cars.

Sir And. 'T were as good a deed as to drink when a... man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then,
to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.
Sir To. Do't, knight: I'll write thee a challenge, or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.
Mar. Sweet sir Toby, he patient for to-night. Since that youth of the count's was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let no alone with him: if I do not gull him into a, nowword's, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. I know, I can do it.
Sir To. Possess us, possess us: tell us something of
Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.
Sir And. O! if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog.
Sir To. What! for being a Puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?
Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.
Mar. The devil a Puritan that he is, or any thing constant, but a time pleaser; an affectioned ass, that cons state without look, and utters it by great swarths;
the best persauded of himself; so eramnd, as he thinks,
with excellence, that it is his ground of faith, that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.
Sir To. What wilt thou do?
Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly persauded. I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.
Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.
Sir And. I have't in my nose, too.
Sir To. He shall think, by the letter that thou wilt drop, that it comes from my niece, and that she is in love with him.
Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that colour.
Sir And. And your horse, now, would have made him an ass.
Mar. Ass I doubt not.
Sir And. O! 't will be admirable.
Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know, my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter: observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell. [Exit.
Sir To. Good night, Penthilesia.
Sir And. Before me, she's a good wench.
Sir To. She's a beagle, true-bred, and one that adores me: what of that?
Sir And. I was adored once too.
Sir To. Let's to bed, knight.—Thou hadst need send for more money.
Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.
Sir To. Send for money, knight: if thou hast her not i't the end, call me cut².
Sir And. If I do not, never trust me; take it how you will.
Sir To. Come, come: I'll go burn some sack: 't is too totally to go to bed now. Come, knight; come, knight.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Duke. Give me some music. [Music.¹]—Now, good morrow, friends.—

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song, we heard last night;
Methought, it did relieve my passion much,
More than light airs, and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced tunes²:
Come; but one verse.

Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.

Duke. Who was it?

Cur. Feste, the jester, my lord: a fool, that the lady Olivia's father took much delight in. He is about the house.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while —Music again.

Come hither, boy; if ever thou shalt love, [To Viola in the sweet pangs of it remember me;
For such as I am all true lovers are:
Unstaid and skittish in all motions else,
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is belov'd.—How dost thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where Love is throw'd.

Duke. Thou dost speak masterly.
My life upon't, young though thou art, thine own
Hath stay'd upon some favour² that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?

Vio. A little, by your favour.

Duke. What kind of woman is't?

Vio. Of your complexion.

Duke. She is not worth thee, then. What years i'faith?

Vio. About your years, my lord.

Duke. Too old, by heaven. Let still the woman take
An elder than herself: she wears she to him,
So sways she level in her husband's heart:
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord.

Duke. Then, let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;
For women are as roses, whose fair flower,
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.

Vio. And so they are: alas! that they are so;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!

Re-enter Curio, and Clown.

Duke. O, fellow! come, the song we had last night.—
Mark it, Cesario; it is old, and plain:
The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids, that weave their thread with bones
Do use to chant it: it is silly sooth,
And dally with the innocenc of love,
Like the old age.

Clo. Are you ready, sir?

Duke. Ay, pr'ythee, sing.

[Music.-

THE SONG.

Clo. Come away, come away, death,
And in sad cypress let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a foul cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
O! prepare it:
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be strewn;
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:
A thousand thousand sights to save,
Lay me, O! where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there.

Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure then.

Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. I give thee now leave to leave me.

Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee, and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffata, for thy mind is a very epa!—I would have men of such constance put to sea, that their business might be everything, and their intent every where: for that 's it, that always makes a good voyage of Nothing.—Farewell.

Duke. Let all the rest give place.—[Exeunt Curio and Attendants.

Once more, Cesario,
Get thee to yond's same sovereign cruelty:
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands:
The parts that fortune hath bestowed upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune;
But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks her in, attracts my soul.

Vio. But, if she cannot love you, sir?
Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Vio. Sooth, but you must.
Say, that some lady, as perhaps there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her;
You tell her so; must she not then be answer'd?

Duke. There is no woman's sides
Can bide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart; no woman's heart
So big to hold so much; they lack retention.
Alas! their love may be call'd appetite,
No motion of the liver, but the palate,
That suffers surfeit, cloyment, and revolt;
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much. Make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know,—
Duke. What dost thou know?

Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history?

Vio. A blank, my lord. She never told her love,
But let conceit, like a worm! the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought:
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She eat like penitence on a monument.

Smiling at grief. Was not this love, indeed?
We men may say more, swear more; but, indeed,
Our shows are more than will, for still we prove
Much in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?
Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house,
And all the brothers too; and yet I know not.—

Sir, shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.

To her in haste: give her this jewel; say,
My love can give no place, hide no deny.

SCENE V.—OLIVIA'S GARDEN.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir To. Come thy ways, signior Fabian.

Fab. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scraple of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

Sir To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly, rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame?

Fab. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out o' favour with my lady about a bear-baiting here.

Sir To. To anger him, we'll have the bear again, and we will fool him black and blue:—shall we not,
Sir Andrew?

Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Here comes the little villain.—How now, m' metal of India?

Mar. Get ye all three into the box-tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder i' the sun, praising behaviour to his own shadow, this half hour.
Observe him, for the love of mockery; for, I know, this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! [The men hide themselves.]
Lie thou there; [drops a letter] for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. [Exit Maria.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me, she did affect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any else that follows her. What should I think on't?

Sir To. Here's an over-weaning rogue!

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!

Sir And. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue.

Sir To. Peace! I say.

Mal. To be count Malvolio.

Sir To. Ah, rogue!

Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir To. Peace! peace!

Mal. There is example for't: the lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir And. Fie on him, Jezebel.

Fab. O, peace! now he's deeply in: look, how imagination blows him.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state.

Sir To. O, for a stone bow* to hit him in the eye!

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown, having come from a day-bed, where I have left Olivia sleeping:—

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!

Fab. O, peace! peace!

Mal. And then to have the honour* of state; and after a demurs travel of regard,—telling them, I know my place, as I would they should do theirs,—to ask for my kinsman Toby—

Sir To. Bolts and shackles!

Fab. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient state make out for him. I frown the while; and, perhance wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel.
Toby approaches; court'sies there to me.
Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us by th'ears', yet peace!

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control.

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips then?

Mal. Saying, "Cousin Toby, my fortunes, having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech."—Sir To. What, what?

Mal. "You must amend your drunkenness."

Sir To. Out, scab!

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Mal. Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight."

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. "One sir Andrew."

Sir And. I knew 'twas I; for many do call me fool.

Mal. [Seeing the letter.] What employment have we here?

Fab. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

Sir To. O, peace! and the spirit of humours intimate reading aloud to him!

Mal. [Taking up the letter.] By my life, this is my lady's hand! these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir And. Her C's, her U's, and her T's: Why that?

Mal. [Reads.] "To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes:" her very phrases!—By your leave, wax—Soft!—I и the impressure her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady. To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [Reads.] "Jove knows, I love;

But who?

Lips do not move;

No man must know."

"No man must know."—What follows? the number's altered.—"No man must know:"—if this should be thee. Malvolio?

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock!"

Mal. [Reads.] "I may command, where I adore;

But silence, like a Lucrece knife,

With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore:

M. O, A, I, doth sway my life."

Fab. A fustian riddle.

Sir To. Excellent wench, say I.

Mal. "M. O, A, I, doth sway my life."—Nay, but first, let me see,—let me see,—let me see.

Fab. What a dish of poison has she dressed him!

Sir To. And with what wing the stammy! checks its at it!

Mal. "I may command where I adore." Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal* capacity. There is no obstruction in this.—And the end,—what should that alphabetical position portend? if I could make that resemble something in me.—Softly!—M. O, A, I.—

Sir To! O, ay, make up that. He is now at a cold scent.

Fab. Sower* will ery upon't, for all this, though it be not as rank as a fox.

Mal. M.—Malvolio:—M., why that begins my name.

Fab. Did not I say, he would work it out? the cur is excellent at faults.

Mal. M.—But then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.

Fab. And O! shall end, I hope.

Sir To. Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cry, O!

Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fab. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you.

Mal. M, O, A, I:—this simulation is not as the former:—and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft! here follows prose.—[Reads.] "If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my stars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness: some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. Thy fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them. And, to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slouch, and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants: let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. She thus advises thee, that signs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou desirest to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee."

The fortunate-unhappy."

Day-light and champagne* discovers not more: this is open. I will be proud, I will read politic authors, I will baffle sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-device* the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me, for every reason excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did command my yellow stockings of late; she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove, and my stars be praised!—Here is yet a postscript. [Reads.] "Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling: thy smiles become thee well; therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I pry'thee."—Love, I thank thee.—I will smile: I will do every thing that thou wilt have me."

[Exit.

Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophy.

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir And. So could I too.

Sir To. And ask no other dowry with her, but such another jest.

Sir And. Nor I neither.

Enter Maria.

Fab. Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Sir To. Will thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And. Or o' mine either?

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip,* and become thy bond-slave?

Sir And. I' faith, or I either?

Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream, that when the image of it leaves him he must run mad.

Mar. Nay, but say true: does it work upon him?

Sir To. Like aqua-vite with a midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport mark his first approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors; and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon her, which will now be so unsuitable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt

If you will see it, follow me.
Sir To. To the gates of Tartarus, thou most excellent devil of wit!
Sir And. I'll make one too. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—OLIVIA'S Garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown playing on pipe and tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music. Dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clo. No, sir; I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clo. No such matter, sir: I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the curch.

Vio. So thou may'st say, the king lives by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or, the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

Clo. You have said, sir.—To see this age!—A sentence is but a cheveroll glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!

Vio, Nay, that's certain: they, that dally nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton. [sir.

Clo. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name,
Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, sir, her name's a word; and to dally with that word, might make my sister wanton. But, indeed, words are very rascals, since bonds disgraced
them.

Vio. Thy reason, man?

Clo. Truth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and carest for nothing.

Clo. Not so, sir, I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the lady Olivia's fool?

Clo. No, indeed, sir; the lady Olivia has no folly:
she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands, as pilchards are to herring, the husband's the bigger. I am, indeed, not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I saw thee late at the count Orsino's.

Clo. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb, like the sun: it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with you master, as with my mistress: I think I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold; there's expenses for thee. [Giving money.

Clo. New Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard.

Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee: I am almost sick for one, though I would not have it grow on my chin.
Is thy lady within?

Clo. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together, and put to use.

Clo. I would play lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Vio. I understand you, sir: 'tis well begg'd.

[Giving more.

10 So the old copies, which Tyrwhitt changed to "men. folly-fall'n"
O! by your leave, I pray you:

but you never speak again of him;

But, would you undertake another suit,

I had rather hear you to solace that,

Than music from the spheres.

Vio. Dear lady,—

Oli. Give me leave, beseech you. I did send,

After the last enchantment you did here,

A ring in chase of you: so did I abuse

Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you.

Liker your hard construction must I sit,

To force that on you, in a shamefaced cunning,

Which you knew none of yours: what might you think?

Have you not set mine honour at the stake,

And baited it with all thy unmanzled thoughts [ing

That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiv-

Enough is shown; a cypris, not a bosom,

Hides my heart. So, let me hear you speak.

Vio. I pity you.

Oli. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No, not a grasse; for 'tis a vulgar proof,

That very oft we pity enemies.

Oli. Why, then, methinks, 't is time to smile again.

O world, how apt the poor are to be proud!

If one should be a prey, how much the better

To fall before the lion, than the wolf? [Clock strikes.

The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.—

Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you;

And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,

Your wife is like to reap a proper man.

There lies your way, due west.

Vio. Grace, and good disposition 'tend your ladyship.

You'll nothing; madam, to my lord by me?

Oli. Stay: [pr'ythee, tell me, what then think'st of me.

Vio. That you do think you are not what you are.

Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.

Vio. Then think you right: I am not what I am.

Oli. I would, you were as I would have you be!

Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am?

I wish it might; for now I am your fool.

Oli. O! what a deal of scorn looks beautiful in the contempt and anger of his lip!

A murderous guilt shows not itself more soon

Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon.

Cesario, by the roses of the spring,

By maidhood, honour, truth, and every thing,

I love thee so, that, maugre all my pride,

Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide.

Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,

For, that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause;

But rather, reason thus with reason fetter:

Love sought is good, but given unsought is better.

Vio. By innocence I swear, and by my youth,

I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth.

And that no woman has; nor never none

Shall mistress be of it, save I alone.

And so adieu, good madam: never more

Will I my master's tears to ye deplore.

Oli. Yet come again: for thou, perhaps, may'st move

That heart, which now abhors, to like his love. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Age-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir And. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

Sir To. Thy reason, dear venom: give thy reason.

Fab. You must needs yield your reason, sir Andrew

Sir Aud. Marry, I saw your niece do more favours to the count's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon me: I saw it the orchard.

Sir To. Did she see thee the while, old boy? tell me that.

Sir And. As plain as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

Sir And. 'Slight! will you make an ass o' me?

Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.

Sir To. And they have been grand jury-men since before Noah was a sailor.

Fab. She did show favour to the youth in your sight only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver.

You should then have accosted her, and with some excellent jests, fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baulked: the double gift of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sailed into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt,

either of valour, or policy.

Sir And. An't be any way, it must be with valour, for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist* as a politician.

Sir To. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour: challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places: my niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commen-tation with woman, than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, sir Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curt and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent, and full of invention; tantam him with the license of ink: if thou thou'st him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Warc in England, set 'em down. Go, about it.

Let there be gall enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter. About it.

Sir And. Where shall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee at the cubiculo. Go.

[Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, sir Toby.

Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him; but you'll not deliver it.

Sir To. Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think, oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. For sir Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look, where the youngest wren of nine comes.

Mar. If you desire the sleek, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yours! gull Malvolio is He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered?
Marc. Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school i' the church.—I have dogged him like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him: he does smile his face into more lines than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies. You have not seen such a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hurrying things at him. I know, my lady will strike him: if she do, he'll smile, and take 't for a great favour.
Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.
Seb. I would not, by my will, have troubled you; but, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.
Ant. I could not stay behind you: my desire,
More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth;
And not all love to see you, (though so much,
As might have drawn one to a longer voyage)
But jealousy what might befall your travel,
Being skilless in these parts: which to a stranger,
Unguided, and unfriendèd, often prove
Rough and unpleasant: my willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your pursuit.
Seb. My kind Antonio,
I can no other answer make, but, thanks,
And thanks, still thanks, and very of good turns
Are shuffling off with such uncourtly pay;
But, were my wealth, as is my conscience, firm,
You should find better dealing. What's to do?
Shall we go see the relics of this town?
Ant. To-morrow, sir: best first go see your lodging.
Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night.
I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes.
With the memorials, and the things of fame.
That do renown this city.
Ant. 'Would, you'd pardon me:
I do not without danger walk these streets.
Once, in a sea-fight 'gainst the country's galleys
I did some service; of such note, indeed,
That, were I ta'en here, it would scarce be answer'd.
Seb. Belike, you slew great number of his people.
Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature,
Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrel,
Might well have given us bloody argument.
It might have since been answer'd in repaying
What we took from them; which, for traffick's sake,
Most of our city did: only myself stood out;
For which, if I be lapped in this place,
I shall pay dear.
Seb. Do not then, walk too open.
Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir: here's my purse.
In the south suburbs, at the Elephant,
Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet,
Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your knowledge,
With viewing of the town: there shall you have me.
Seb. Why do you purse?
Ant. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase: and your store.
I think, is not for idle markets, sir.

Seb. I'll be your purse-bearer, and leave you for an hour.
Ant. To the Elephant.—
Seb. I do remember. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Olivia's Garden.
Enter Olivia and Maria.
Oli. I have sent after him: he says, he'll come.
How shall I feast him? what bestow of him?
For youth is bought more oft than begg'd, or borrow'd.
I speak too loud.—
Where is Malvolio?—he is sad, and civil.
And suits well for a servant with my fortunes.
Where is Malvolio?
Marc. He's coming, madam; but in very strange manner.
Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?
Marc. No, madam; he does nothing but smile: your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come, for sure the man is tainted in 's wits.
Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria.]—I am as mad as he,
If sad and merry madness equal be.—
[Enter Malvolio and Maria.

How now, Malvolio?
Mal. Sweet lady, ha, ha! [Smiles ridiculous.
Oli. Smil'st thou? I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.
Mal. Sad, lady? I could be sad. This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that? if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet hath it, "Why, please one, and please all?"
Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?
Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow* in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.
Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?
Mal. To bed? ay, sweet-heart, and I'll come to thee.
Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so, and kiss thy hand so oft?
Marc. How do you, Malvolio?
Mal. At your request! Yes; nightingales answer daws.
Marc. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?
Mal. "Be not afraid of greatness?—T was well writ.
Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?
Mal. "Some are born great,"—
Oli. Ha?
Mal. "Some achieve greatness,"—
Oli. What say'st thou?
Mal. "And some have greatness thrust upon them"
Oli. Heaven restore thee!
Mal. "Remember, who commended thy yellow stockings;"—
Oli. Thy yellow stockings?
Mal. "And wished to see thee cross-gartered."
Oli. Cross-gartered?
Mal. "Go to: thou art made, if thou desirest to be so."—
Oli. Am I made?
Mal. "If not, let me see thee a servant still."
Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

1 A map engraved for Lutschoten's Voyages, a translation of which was published in 1598. A portion, showing its many lines, is engraved on "Knights' Epitome of Shakespeare." 2 The words "still thanks," are not in F. & S. 4 "smile," in F. 5 The word "cross-gartered," is not in F. 6 "Enter Malvolio" in F. 7 "There was an old ballad-tune, called "Black and Yellow."
Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the count Orsino is returned. I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.

Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him. I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.

[Exit OLIVIA and MARIA.

Mal. Oh, ho! do you come near me now? no worse man than sir Toby to look to me? This concurs directly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him: for she incites me to that in the letter. "Cast thy humble sloth," says she;—be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants,—let thy tongue tang with arguments of state,—put thyself into the trick of singularity:—and consequently sets down the manner how; as, a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have lined her: but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful. And when she went away now. "Let this fellow be looked to!" fellow, not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no inerudious or unsafe circumstance—What can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me, and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the door of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter MARIA, with SIR TOBY BELCH, and FABIAN.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils in hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possess him, yet I'll speak to him.

Fab. Here he is, here he is.—How is 't with you, sir? how is 't with you, man?

Mal. Go off; I discard you: let me enjoy my privacy: go off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! did not I tell you?—Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ha! does she so?

Sir To. Go to, go to: peace! peace! we must deal gently with him; let me alone.—How do you, Malvolio? how is 't with you? What man! defy the devil: consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Do you know what you say?

Mar. La, you an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart. Pray God, he be not bewitched!

Fab. Carry his water to the wise woman.

Mar. Marry, and it shall be done to-morrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

Mal. How now, mistress?

Mar. O lord!

Sir To. Pr'ythee, hold thy peace: this is not the way. Do you not see you move him? let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is roused, and will not be roughly used.

Sir To. Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?

Mal. Sir!

Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan. Hang him, foul collier!

Mar. Get him to say his prayers; good sir Toby, get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers, minx! Mar. No, I warrant you; he will not hear of godliness.

skill, fury, and impiety. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece. Give them way, till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exit Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria. Re-enter Olivia, with Viola.

Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone. And laid mine honour too uncharily on't. There's something in me that reproves my fault, but such a headstrong potent fault it is, That it but mocks reproof.

Vio. With the same behaviour that your passion bears, Go off my master's griefs.

Oli. Here wear this jewel for me: 'tis my picture. Refuse it not, it hath no tongue to vex you; And, I beseech you, come again to-morrow. What shall you ask of me, that I will deny, That, honour say'd, may upon asking give? Vio. Nothing but this; your true love for my master. Oli. How with mine honour may I give him that, Which I have given to you?

Vio. I will acquit you.

Oli. Well, come again to-morrow. Fare thee well: A fiend like thee might bear my soul to hell. [Exit. Re-enter Sir Toby Belch, and Fabian.

Sir To. Gentleman, God save thee.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir To. That defeance thou hast, betake thee to't of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not; but thy intercessor, full of despatch, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Dismount thy tack: be yare in thy preparation, for thy assault is quick, skilful, and deadly.

Vio. You mistake, sir: I am sure, no man hath any quarrel to me. My remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

Sir To. You'll find it otherwise. I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath, can furnish man withal.

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir To. He is a knight, dubbed with unhatch'd rapier, and on carpet consideration, but he is a devil in a private brawl: souls and bodies hath he divorced three, and his inincenence at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre. Hob, nob, is his word; 'tis, or take 't.

Vio. I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men, that put quarrels purposely on other, to taste their value; belike, this is a man of that quick.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury: therefore, get you on, and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me, which with as much safety you might answer him: therefore, on, strip your sword stark naked; for meddle you must, that's certain, or foreswear to wear iron about you.

Vio. This is as unevil, as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit Sir Toby Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know, the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement, but nothing of the cir cumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, deadly, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk to wards him? I will make your peace with him, if can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't: I am one, that would rather go with sir priest, than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exit. Re-enter Sir Toby, with Sir Andrew hanging back.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil, I have not seen such a firago. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stuck in. with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. They say, he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir And. Pox on't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on't; an I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Capulet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion. Stand here: make a good show on't. This shall end without the perdiction of souls. [Aside.] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola, unwittingly.

I have his horse [To Fab.] to take up the quarrel. I have persuaded him, the youth's a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; [To Sir Toby] and pants, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There's no remedy, sir: [To Viola] he will fight with you for your oath sake. Marry, he hath better betought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of: therefore, draw for the supposition of his vow: he protests, he will not hurt you.

Vio. [Aside.] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, sir Andrew, there's no remedy: the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you; he cannot by the duello avoid it; but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath!

Vio. I do assure you, 'tis against my will. [They draw, and go back from each other.]

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Put up your sword.—If this young gentleman Have done offence, I take the fault on me;

If you offend him, I for him defy you. [Drawing

Sir To. You, sir? why, what are you?

Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more. Than you have heard him brag to you he will.
Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.[Drawing.

Enter Officers.

Fab. O, good sir Toby, hold! here come the officers.
Sir To. I'll be with you anon.
Vio. Pray, sir; put your sword up, if you please.
Sir And. Marry, will I, sir:—and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word. He will bear you easily, and raiseth well.

1 Off. This is the man: do thy office.

2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of Count Orsino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir.

1 Off. No, sir, no jot: I know your favour well, though now you have no sea-cap on your head.
Take him away: he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I must obey.—[To VIOL. ] This comes with seeking you.
But there's no remedy: I shall answer it.
What will you do? Now my necessity
Makes me to ask you for my purse. It grieves me
Much more for what I cannot do for you,
Than what betails myself. You stand amaz'd,
But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.

Vio. What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have show'd me here,
And part, being prompted by your present trouble,
Out of my lean and low ability,
I'll lend you something. My having is not much:
I'll make division of my present with you.
Hold, there's half my coffr.

Ant. Will you deny me now?
Is't possible, that my deserts to you
Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,
Lest that it make me so unsound a man,
As to upbraid you with those kindnesses
That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none;
Nor know I you by voice, or any feature.
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying vaineys, babbling drunkenness,
Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption
Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O, heavens themselves!

2 Off. Come, sir: I pray you, go. [See here, Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth, that you sland'red one half out of the jaws of death;
Reliev'd him with such sanctity of love,
And to his image, which, methought, did promise
Most veritable' worth, did I devotion.

1 Off. What's that to us? The time goes by: away
Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god!—
Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.
In nature there's no blemish, but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind:
Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous evil
Are empty trunks, o'erflourish'd by the devil.

1 Off. The man grows mad: away with him!

Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. [Exeunt Officers, with Antonio.

Vio. Methinks, his words do from such passion fly,
That he believes himself; so do not I.
Prove true, imagination, O! prove true,
That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you!

Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian.
We'll whisper o'er a couplet or two of most sage saws.
Vio. He nam'd Sebastian: I my brother know
Yet living in my glass; even such, and so,
In favour was my brother; and he went
Still in this fashion, colour, ornament,
For him I imitate. O! if it prove,
Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love! [Exit.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare. His dishonesty appears, in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward: religious in Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again, and beat him.
Sir To. Do; cuff him soundly, but never dry thy sword.

Sir And. An I do not,— [Exit.

Vio. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money' t will be nothing yet.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Cla. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to, go to; thou art a foolish fellow:
Let me be clear of thee.

Cla. Well held out, faith! No, I do not know you; nor am I sent to you by my lady to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not master Cesario: nor this is not my nose neither.—Nothing, that is so, is so.

Seb. I pr'ythee, vent thy folly somewhere else; Thou know'st not me.

Cla. Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubberly world will prove a scockney. I pr'ythee now, ungird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady. Shall against him, if there be any law in Illyria. Though I struck him first; yet it's no matter for that.

Sob. Let go thy hand.
Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed.
Come on.
Sob. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now?
If thou dar'st tempt me farther, draw thy sword.
Sir To. What, what! Nay then, I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.

[They draw and fence.]

Enter OLIVIA.

Oli. Hold, Toby! on thy life, I charge thee, hold!
Sir To. Madam—
Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch!
Fit for the mountains, and the barbarous caves,
Where manners never were preach'd. Out of my sight—
Be not offended, dear Cesario.—
Rudesby, be gone!—I pr'ythee, gentle friend, [Exit Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.
Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil, and unjust extent
Against thy peace. Go with me to my house;
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby May'st smile at this. Thou shalt not choose but go;
Do not deny. Beshrew his soul for me,
He started one poor heart of mine in thee.
Sob. What relish is in this? how runs the stream?
Or I am mad, or else this is a dream.
Let fancy still my sense in Lethes steep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep.
Oli. Nay, come, I pr'ythee. Would thou'dst be ru'd by me!
Sob. Madam, I will.
Oli. O! say so, and so be. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in OLIVIA's House.

Enter MARIA and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I pr'ythee, put on this gown, and this beard: make him believe thou art sir Topas, the cura-rate: de it quickly; I'll call sir Toby the whilst.
[Exit Maria.

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in't: and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. [Putting it on.] I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor lean eough to be thought a good student; but to be said an honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as to say a careful man, and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and MARIA.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, master parson.
Clo. Bonos dies, sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gorbodune, 'That, that is, is?' so I, being master parson, am master parson,—for what is that, but that, and is, but is?
Sir To. To him, sir Topas.

[Opening a door.]

Sir To. The knave counterfeit's well; a good knave.
Mal. [Within.] Who calls there?
Clo. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit Mal-volio the lunatic.

Mal. Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

Clo. But as well? then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Mal. They have here propounded me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, ass! and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Advise you what you say: the minister is here.

[Speaking as sir Topas.]

Mal. sir Topas.—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain babble babble.

Clo. sir Topas,—

Mal. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.

Clo. sir Topas. —Marry, amen. —I will, sir, I will.

Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I say.

Clo. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am shent² for speaking to you.

Mal. Good fool, help me to some light, and some paper; I tell thee, I am as well in my wits, as any man in Illyria.

Clo. Well-a-day, that you were, sir!

Mal. By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady: it shall advantage thee more than ever the hearing of letter did.

Clo. I will help you to 't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?

Mal. Believe me, I am not: I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, I'll ne'er believe a madman, till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

Mal. Fool, I'll requite it in the highest degree: I prythee, be gone.

Clo. [Singing.] I am gone, sir, and soon, sir. I'll be with you again, with a trice, like the old vice, your need to sustain; who with dagger of loth, in his rage out his wrath, cries, Ah, ha! to the devil:

Like a mad lad, pure thy nails, dad. Adieu, goodman driver. [Exit

SCENE III.—Oliavia's Garden.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; this pearl she gave me, I do feel 't; and see 't; and though 't is wonder that envails me thus, yet 't is not madness. Where's Antonio then? I could not find him at the Elephant; yet there he was, and there I found this eredit, that he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service: for though my soul disputes well with my sense, that this may be some error, but no madness, yet doth this accident and flood of fortune so far exceed all instance, all discourse, that I am ready to distrust mine eyes, and wrangle with my reason, that persuades me to any other trust but that I am mad; or else the lady's mad: yet, if 't were so, she could not sway her house, command her followers, take, and give back, and thus despatch affairs, with such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing, as I perceive, she does. There's something in 't, that is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter Oliavia and a Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well, now go with me, and with this holy man, into the chantry by; there, before him, and underneath that consecrated roof, plight me the full assurance of your faith; that my most jealous and too doubtful soul may live at peace; he shall conceal it, whiles you are willing it shall come to note, what time we will our celebration keep according to my birth. —What do you say?

Seb. I'll follow this good man, and go with you, and, having sworn truth, ever will be true.

Oli. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine, that they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exeunt
Clo: Primo secundo tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all; the triplet, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of St. Benet, sir, may put you in mind—one, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry, sir, hulumi by your bounty, till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think, that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness; but as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. [Exit Clown.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; yet, when I saw it last, it was besmirch'd, as black as Vulcan in the smoke of war.

A bawbling vessel was he captain of; for shallow draught and bulk unpriz'd, with such scuttleful grapple did he make With the most noble bottom of our fleet; that very envious, and the tongue of lies, cried shame and honour on him. What's the matter? I Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio, that took the Phenix, and her fraught, from Candy; and this is he, that did the Tiger board, when your young nephew Titus lost his leg, Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state, in private brabbled we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side, but, in conclusion, put strange speech upon me; I know not what 't was, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate. thou salt-water thief, what foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies, whom thou, in terms so bloody, and so dear, hast made thine enemies? Ant. Orsino, noble sir, be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me: Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate.

Though, I confess, on base and ground enough, Orsino's enemy. A witcherath drew me hither: that most ingrateful boy there, by your side.

From the rude song enrag'd and famy mouth Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was, His life I gave him, and did thereto add My love, without retention, or restraint, All his in dedication: for his sake, Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town: Drew to defend him, when he was beset: Where being apprehended, his false cunning (Not meaning to partake with me in danger) Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance, and grew a twenty-years-removed thing, While one would wink; denied me mine own purse, Which I had recommended to his use.

Not half an hour before.

Vio. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Ant. Today, my lord; and for three months before, No intermission, not a minute's vacancy, both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess: now heaven walks on earth!—

But for thee, fellow; fellow, thy words are madness: Three months this youth hath tended upon me; But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Ol. What would my lord, but that he may not have, Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?

Cesario, you do not keep promise with me. Vio. Madam?

Duke. Gracious Olivia,—

Ol. What do you say, Cesario?—Good my lord,—

Vio. My lord would speak, my duty hushes me. Ol. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord,—

It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear, As howling after music.

Duke. What, to perverseness? you uneiville lady, To whose ingrate and unauspicious altars My soul the faithful'est offerings hath breath'd out, that e'er devotion tender'd. What shall I do? [Exit Ol. Even what it please my lord, that shall become Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it, like to the Egyptian thief at point of death, Kill what I love? a savage jealousy, That sometimes savours nobly.—But hear me this: Since you to non-regardance cast my faith, and that I partly know the instrument That ecosystem from my true place in your favour, Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still: But this your minion, whom, I know, you love, And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly, Him will I tear out of that cruel eye, Where he sits crowned in his master's spite,—

Come boy, with me: my thoughts are ripe in mischief: I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love, To spite a raven's heart within a dove. [Going.

Vio. And I, most jocund, apt, and willingly, To do you rest a thousand deaths would die. [Following.

Ol. Where goes Cesario?—

Ant. After him I love, more than I love these eyes, more than my life, more, by all men, then e'er I should love wife.

If I do feign, you witnesses above

Punish my life for tainting of my love.

Ol. Whither, my lord?—Cesario, husband, stay. Duke. Husband?

Ol. Ay, husband: can he so deny me?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah?

Vio. No, my lord, not I.

Ol. Alas! it is the baseess of thy febr, That makes thee strangle thy propriety.

Fear not, Cesario: take thy fortunes up; Be that thou know'st thou art, and then art thou as great as that thou fear'st,—O, welcome, father! [Re-enter Attentant with the Priest.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence, Here to unfold (though lately we intended To keep in darkness, what occasion now Reveals before 'tis ripe) what thou dost know; Hath newly past between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract and a eternal bond of love, Confirmd by mutual joinder of your hands, Attested by the holy close of lips, Strengthen'd by interchange of your rings; And all the ceremony of this compact Seal'd in my function, by my testimony:
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave
I have travelled but two hours.

_Duke._ O, thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow.

_Have that own trip shall be thine overthrow?_
Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

_Vio._ My lord, I do protest,—

_Oli._
Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew AGLICE-CHEEK, with his head broken.

_Sir And._ For the love of God, a surgeon! send one presently to Sir Toby.

_Oli._ What's the matter?

_Sir And._ He has broke my head across, and has given sir Toby a bloody coccomb too. For the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

_Oli._ Who has done this, sir Andrew?

_Sir And._ The count's gentleman, one Cesario. We took him for a coward, but he's the devil incendiate.

_Duke._ My gentleman, Cesario?

_Sir And._ Od's lifelings! here he is.—You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by sir Toby.

_Vio._ Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you:
You drew your sword upon me, without cause;
But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

_Sir And._ If a bloody coccomb be a hurt, you have hurt me: I think you set nothing by a bloody coccomb.

Enter Sir Toby BELCH, drunk._led by the Clown._

_Here comes sir Toby halting; you shall hear more;
but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

_Duke._ How now, gentleman; how is't with you?

_Sir To._ That's all one: he has hurt me, and there's the end on't.—Sot, didst see Dick surgeon, sot?

_Clo._ O! he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour ago: his eyes were set at eight if the morning.

_Sir To._ Then he's a rogue, and a passy-measures pavin.² I hate a drunken rogue.

_Oli._ Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

_Sir And._ I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

_Sir To._ Will you help? An ass-head, and a coccomb, and a knave! a thin-faced knave, a gull!

_Oli._ Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

_[Exeunt Clown, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew._

Enter Sebastian (all start).

_Seb._ I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman;
But had it been the brother of my blood,
I must have done no less with wit and safety.
You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you:

_Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows We made each other but so late ago._

_Duke._ One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons;
A natural perspective,¹ that is, and is not!

_Seb._ Antonio! O, my dear Antonio!

_Have how the hours rack'd and torture'd me,
Since I have lost thee?

_Ant._ Sebastian are you?

_Seb._ Fear'st thou that, Antonio?

_Have you made division of yourself?—

An apple cleft in two is not more twin Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

_Oli._ Most wonderful!

_Seb._ Do I stand there? I never had a brother;
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and everywhere. I had a sister.

_Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd._

_[To VIO.]_ Of charity, what kin are you to me?

_What countryman? what name? what parentage?_

_Vio._ Of Messaline: Sebastian was my father;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suited to his watery tomb.
If spirits can assume both form and suit
You come to fright us

_Seb._ A spirit I am indeed;
But am in that dimension grossly clad,
Which from the womb I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the rest goes even,
I should my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And say,—thrice welcome, drowned Viola!

_Vio._ My father had a mole upon his brow.

_Seb._ And so had mine.

_Vio._ And died that day, when Viola from her birth
Had number'd thirteen years.

_Seb._ O! that record is lively in my soul.
He finished, indeed, his mortal act
That day that made my sister thirteen years.

_Vio._ If nothing lets to make us happy both,
But this my masculine usurp'd attire,
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere, and jump,
That I am Viola: which to confirm,
I'll bring you to a captain's in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help
I was preserv'd to serve this noble count.
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady, and this lord.

_Seb._ So comes it, lady, _[To OLIVIA.]_ you have been mistook;
But nature to her bias true¹ in that.
You would have been contracted to a maid,
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceived:
You are betroth'd both to a maid and man.

_Duke._ Be not amazed; right noble is his blood.—
If this be so, as yet the glass seems true,
I shall have share in this most happy wreck.
_Boy, [To VIOLA.]_ thou hast said to me a thousand times,
Thou never should'st love woman like to me.

_Vio._ And all those sayings will I over-swear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orb'd continent, the fire
That severs day from night.

_Duke._ Give me thy hand;
And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.

_Vio._ The captain, that did bring me first on shore,
Hath my maid's garments: he, upon some action,
Is now in durance at Malvolio's suit,
A gentleman, and follower of my lady's.

_Oli._ He shall enlarge him.—Fetch Malvolio hither:
And yet, alas! now I remember me,
They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.
A most distracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banish'd his.

_[Re-enter Clown, with a letter._

_How does he, sirrah?_

_Clo._ Truly, madam, he holds Beechub at the stave's end. as well as a man in his case may do. He has here writ a letter to you: I should have given it you to-day morning; but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much when they are delivered.

Oli. Open it, and read it.
Clo. Look then to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman:—[Reads.] "By the Lord, madam,—"

Oli. How now? art thou mad?
Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow for.

Oli. Pr'ythee, read I' thy right wits.
Clo. So do, madonna; but to read his right wits, is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princess, and give ear.

Oli. Read it you, sirrah. [To FABIAN.]
Fab. [Reads.] "By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I doubt, not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speak out of my injury.

The madly-used Malvolio!"

Oli. Did he write this?
Clo. Ay, madam.
Duke. This savours not much of distraction.
Oli. See him deliver'd, Fabian: bring him hither. [Exit FABIAN.]

My lord, so please you, these things further thought on, To think me as well a sister as a wife, One day shall crown the alliance, and so please you, Here at my house, and at my proper cost.

Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your offer.— [To VIOLA.] Your master quits you; and for your service done him, So much against the mettle of your sex, So far beneath your soft and tender breeding, And since you call'd me master for so long, Here is my hand; you shall from this time be Your master's mistress.

Oli. A sister; you are she.
Re-enter FABIAN, with MALVOLIO,2 with straw about him, as from prison.

Duke. Is this the madman?
Oli. Ay, my lord, this same.
How now, Malvolio?
Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong;
Notorious wrong.
Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you, peruse that letter: You must not now deny it is your hand, Write it, if you can, in hand, or phrase; Or say, 'tis not your seal, nor your invention: You can say none of this. Well, grant it then, And tell me, in the modesty of honour, Why you have given me such clear lights of favour, Bade me come smiling, and cross-garter'd to you, To put on yellow stockings, and to frown Upon sir Toby, and the lighter people? And, acting this in an obdient hope, Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd, Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest, And made the most notorious geck and gull, That e'er invention play'd on? tell me why.

Oli. Alas! Malvolio, this is not my writing,

Though, I confess, much like the character; But, out of question, 'tis Maria's hand: And now I do bethink me, it was she First told me thou wast mad; thou'scam'rist in smiling And in such forms which here were preimpos'd Upon thee in the letter. Pr'ythee, be content: This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee: But when we know the grounds and authors of it, Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge Of thine own cause.

Fab. Good madam, hear me speak; And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come, Taint the condition of this present hour, Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not, Most freely I confess, myself, and Toby, Set this device against Malvolio here, Upon some stubborn and un courteous parts We had conceived against him. Maria writ The letter at sir Toby's great importance; In recompense whereof she hath married her. How with a sportful malice it was follow'd, May rather pluck on laughter than revenge, If that the injuries be justly weigh'd, That have on both sides past.

Oli. Alas, poor soul, how have they baffled thee! Clo. Why "some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them." I was one, sir, in this interlude; one sir Topas, sir, but that 's all one. —"By the Lord, fool, I am not mad;" —But do you remember? "Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he's gagg'd:" And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenge.

Mal. I'll be reveng'd on the whole pack of you. [Exit.

Oli. He hath been most notoriously abus'd.
Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace.
He hath not told us of the captain yet; When that is known and golden time convenes, A solemn combination shall be made Of our dear souls;—mean time, sweet sister, We will not part from hence. — Cesario, come; For so you shall be, while you are a man, But when in other habits you are seen, Orsino's mistresse, and his faney's queen. [Exeunt.

Clown sings, to pipe and lutor.

When that I was and a little tiny boy, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, A foolish thing was but a toy, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, 'Gainst knives and thieves men shut their gate, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wife, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, By swaggering could I never thrive, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, With toss-pots still 11 had drunken head, For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world begun, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, But that's all one, our play is done, And we'll strive to please you every day.

Act I.

Scene I.—Sicilia. An Antechamber in Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you should chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the king of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves; for, indeed,—

Cam. Beseech you,

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—(I know not what to say.)—We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods, and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities, made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been so royally attorney'd, with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies, that they have seemed to be together, though absent, shook hands, as over a vast, and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

The doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd
That any did. Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits n'er been higher rear'd
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven
Boldly "not guilty?" the imposition clear'd.

Her. By this we gather,
You have tripp'd since.

Pol. O! my most sacred lady,
Temptations have since then been born to's; for
In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl.
Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot!

Of this make no conclusion, lest you say,
Your queen and I are devils: yet, go on;
Th' offences we have made you do, we'll answer;
If you first sim'd with us, and that with us
You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not Within any, but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet? [Coming forward
Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leon. At my request he would not,
Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok'st
To better purpose.

Her. Never?

Leon. Never, but once.

Her. What? have I twice said well? when was't
before?

I pr'ythee, tell me. Cram's with praise, and make's
At fat as tame things: one good deed, dying tongueless.
Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that.
Our praises are our wages: you may ride's
With one soft kiss a thousand furbelows, ere
With spur we clear's an acre. But to the good'—
My last good deed was to entreat his stay:
What was my first? it has an elder sister,
Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace!
But once before I spoke to the purpose: When?
Nay, let me have't; I long.

Leon. Why, that was when
Three crabb'd months had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clap* thyself my love: then didst thou utter
"I am yours for ever."

Her. It is Grace, indeed.—

Her. Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice:
The one for ever car'd a royal husband,
The other for some while a friend.

[Giving her hand to Polixenes
Leon. Too hot, too hot! [Aside
To mingle friendship far is muggling bloods.
I have foment condol's on me;—my heart dances,
But not for joy,—not joy.—This entertainment
May a free face put on; derive a liberty
From heartiness, from bounty's fertile bosom.
And well become the agent: 'tis may, I grant;
But to be paddling palms, and pinching fingers,
As now they are; and making practis'd smiles,
As in a looking-glass;—and then to sigh, as 'twere
The mort'd* o' the deer; O! that is entertainment
My bosom likes not, nor my brows.—Mamillius,
Art thou my boy?

Mam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. I' feeks?

Why, that's my ba'wock.11 What! hast smut'd thou

---
They say, it is a copy out of mine.
Come, captain,
We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain.
And yet the steer, the heifer, and the calf,
Are all call'd neat.——Still virginal!

[Observing Polixenes and Hermione.]

Upon his palm? — How now, you wanton calf! Art thou my calf?

Mam. Yes, if you will, my lord.

Leon. Thou want'st a rough pash, and the shoots that I have,
To be full, like me:—yet, they say, we are Almost as like as eggs: women say so,
That will say any thing: but were they false
As our dead black, as wind, as waters; false
As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine; yet were it true
To say this boy were like me.——Come, sit page,
Look on me with your walkin' eye: sweet villain!
Most dear'st! my collop!——Can thy dam?—may'st be Affection? thy intention stabs the is centre;
Thou dost make possible things not so held,
Communic'st with dreams:——how can this be?——
With what's unreal thou conceive art,
And fellow'st nothing. Then, 't is very eredent,
Thou may'st co-join with something; and thou dost,
And that beyond commission; and I find it,
And that to the infection of my brains,
And hardening of my brows.

Pol. What means Sicilia?

Her. He something seems unsettled.

Pol. How, my lord?

Leon. What cheer? how is't with you, best brother?

[ Holding his forehead.]

Her. As if you held a brow of much distraction
Are you mov'd, my lord?

Leon. No, in good earnest.——
How sometimes nature will betray its folly, —
Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines [To them.]
Of my boy's face, my thoughts I did recollect
Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreath'd,
In my green velvet coat; my dagger muzzled,
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous.
How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentleman.—Mine honest friend,
Will you take eggs for money?

Mam. No, my lord; I'll fight.

Leon. You will? why, happy man be his dole!——

My brother,
Are you so fond of your young prince, as we
Do seem to be of ours?

Pol. If at home, sir, he's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:
Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all.
He makes a July's day short as December;
And with his varying childliness cures in me
Thoughts that would thick my blood.

Leon. So stands this squire
Oftend with me. We two will walk, my lord,
And leave you to your graver steps.—Hermione,
How thou lovest us, show in our brother's welcome:
Let what is dear in Sicily, be cheap.
Next to thyself, and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us,
We are yours in the garden: shall 's attend you there?

Leon. To your own best dispose you: you'll be found,
Be you beneath the sky.——[Aside] I am longing now,
Though you perceive me not how I give line,
Go to, go to!
How she holds up the neb, the bill to him;
And arms her with the boldness of a wife
To her allowing husband. Gone already!

[Exit Polixenes, Hermione, and Attendants.]

Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd one!——
Go play, boy, play:——thy mother plays, and I
Play too, but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave: contempt and censour
Will be my knell.—Go play, boy, play.——There have been,
Or I am much deceive'd, eucold's ere now:
And many a man there is, (even at this present,
Now, while I speak this) holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been studi'd in's absence;
And his pond fish'd by his next neighbour, by Sir Smile, his neighbour. Nay, there's comfort in't,
Whiles other men have gates, and those gates open'd,
As mine, against their will. Should all despair
That have revolted wives, the tenth of mankind
Would hang themselves. Physic for't there is none:
It is a bawdy planet, that will strike
Where 'tis predominant; and 't is powerful, think it,
From east, west, north, and south: be it concluded,
No barricado for a belly: know it;
It will let in and out the enemy,
With bag and baggage. Many a thousand on's
Have the disease, and feel 't not.—How now, boy?

Mam. I am like you, they say.

Leon. Why, that's some comfort.——
What! Camillo there?

Cam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Go play, Mamillius. Thou 'rt an honest man.

[Exit Mamillius.]

Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer.

Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold:
When you cast out, it still came home.

Leon. Didst note it?
Cam. He would not stay at your petitions; made
His business more material.

Leon. Didst perceive it?

They're here with me always, whispering, rounding.

Sicilia is a——so forth. 'Tis far gone,
When I shall gust it last.——How came 't, Camillo,
That he did stay?

Cam. At the good queen's entreaty.

Leon. At the queen's, be't: good should be pertinent
But so it is, it is not. Was this taken
By any understanding pate but thine? For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in More than the common blocks: — not noted, is 't,
But of the finer natures? by some severals,

Cam. Business, my lord? I think, most understand
Bohemia stays here longer.
Leon. Ha?
Cam. Stays here longer.
Leon. Ay, but why?
Cam. To satisfy your highness, and the entreaties
Of our most gracious mistress.
Leon. Satisfy
The entreaties of your mistress?—satisfy?—
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils, wherein, priest-like, thou
Hast cleans'd my bosom: from thee departed
Thy penitent return'd: but we have been Deceiv'd in thy integrity, deceiv'd
In that which seems so.
Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!
Leon. To bide upon 't,—thou art not honest; or,
If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a coward,
Which hoax's honesty behind, restraining
From course requir'd: or else thou must be counted
A servant grafted in my serious trust,
And therein negligent; or else a fool,
That egest a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And tak'st it all for jest.
Cam. My gracious lord,
I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful:
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Amongst the infinite doings of the world,
Sometime puts forth. In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I were wilful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, it was a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. These, my lord,
Are such allow'd imprimities, that honesty
Is never free of: but, beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me: let me know my trespass
By its own visage; if I then deny it,
'T is none of mine.
Leon. Have not you seen, Camillo,
(But that's past doubt; you have, or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn) or heard,
(For, to a vision so apparent, rumour
Cannot be mute) or thought, (for cogitation
Resides not in that man that does not think it)
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess,
Or else be impudently negative,
To have nor eyes, nor ears, nor thought, then say,
My wife's a hobbyhorse; deserves a name
As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to
Before her troth-pilgrimage: say 't, and justify 't.
Cam. I would not be a slander-by, to hear
My sovereign mistress cloathed so, without My present vengeance taken. Shew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this: which to reiterate, were sin
As deep as that, though true.
Leon. Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning check to heeke? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughter with a sigh? (a note inflamible
Of breaking honesty) horsing foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift?
Hours, minutes, noon, midnight? and all eyes blind
With the pin and web, but theirs, theirs only,
That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing?
Why, then the world, and all that is in 't, is nothing;
The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these nothing
If this be nothing.
Cam. Good my lord, be cur'd
Of this disease'd opinion, and betimes;
For 't is most dangerous.
Leon. Say, it be; 't is true.
Cam. No, no, my lord.
Leon. It is; you lie, you lie.
I say, thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee;
Promounce thee a gross base, a mindless slave, or else a hoveryng temporizer, that
Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil,
Inclin' to them both: Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass.
Cam. Who does infect her?
Leon. Why lie, that wears her like a medal, hanging
About his neck, Bohemia: who—if I
Had servants true about me, that bare eyes
To see alike mine honour as their profits,
Their own particular thrills, they would do it at
Which should undo more doing: ay, and thou,
His cup-bearer,—whom I from meaner form
Have benach'd, and rear'd to worship, who may'st see Plainly, as heaven sees earth, and earth sees heaven,
How I am galled,—mightest bespice a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink,
Which draught to me were cordial.
Cam. Sure, my lord, I could this, and that with no rash potion,
But with a lingering dram, that should not work
Maliciously, like poison; but I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.
I have lov'd thee.
Leon. Make that thy question, and god et!
Dost think, I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation? sully
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
(Which to preserve is sleep; which, being spotted,
Is goads, thorns, nettles, tail of wasps,)
Give scandal to the blood o' the prince, my son,
(Who, I do think is mine, and love as mine)
Without ripe moving to't? Would I do this?
Could man so brench?
Cam. I must believe you, sir:
I do; and will fetch off Bohemia for 't,
Provided, that when he's remov'd, your highness
Will take again your queen, as yours at first,
Even for your son's sake; and thereby for sealing
The injury of tongues, in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.
Leon. Thou dost advise me,
Even so as I mine own course have set down.
I'll give no blemish to her honour, none.
Cam. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia,
And with your queen. I am his cup-bearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.
Leon. This is all:
Do 't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do 't not, thou split'st thine own.
Cam. I 'll do 't, my lord.
Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advis'd me. [Exit.

Cam. O, miserable lady! — But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes; and my ground to do 't
Is the obedience to a master; one,
Who, in rebellion with himself, will have
All that are his so too. — To do this deed,
Promotion follows; if I could find example
Of thousands that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I 'd not do 't; but since Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one, evillany itself forswear 't. I must Forsake the court: to do 't, or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star, reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange. Methinks,
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak? —
Good-day, Camillo.

Cam. Hail, most royal sir!

Pol. What is the news? the court?
Cam. None rare, my lord.

Pol. The king hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some provinace, and a region
Loved as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment, when he,
Waiting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me, and
So leaves me to consider what is breeding
That changes thus his manners.
Cam. I dare not know, my lord.

Pol. How! dare not? do not! Do you know, and dare not,
Be intelligient to me? 'T is thereabouts;
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your chang'd complaisances are to me a mirror,
Which shows me mine chang'd too; for I must be
A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter'd with 't.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper; but I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you, that yet are well.

Pol. How caught of me?
Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I have look'd on thousands, who have spied the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo, —
As you are certainly a gentleman; thereto
Clerk-like, experienced, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle. — I beseech you,
If you know aught which does behove my knowledge
Thereof to be informed, imprison it not
In ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer.

Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well?
I must be answer'd.—Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man
Which honour does acknowledge, whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine, — that thou declare
What incidency thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;

If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you;
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Therefore, mark my counsel,
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd, as I mean to utter it, or both yourself and I
Cry, "lost," and so good-night.

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I am appointed him to murder you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo?
Cam. By the king.

Pol. For what?

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he swears,
As he had seen 't, or been an instrument
To vice you to 't — that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly.

Pol. O! then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly, and my name
Be yok'd with his that did betray the Best!
Turn then my freshest reputation to
A savour, that may strike the dullest nostril
Where I arrive; and my approach be shunn'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great'st infection
That e'er was heard, or read!

Cam. Swear this though over
By each particular star in heaven, and
By all their influences, you may as well
Forbid the sea for to obey the moon,
As, or by oath, remove, or counsel, shake,
The fabric of his folly, whose foundation
Is pil'd upon his faith, and will continue
The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow?

Cam. I know not; but, I am sure, 'tis safer to Avoid what 's grown, than question how 't is born.
If therefore you dare trust my honesty,
That lies enclos'd in this trunk, which you
Shall bear along impaw'd, away to-night.
Your followers I will whisper to the business;
And will, by twos and threes, at several posterns, Clear them o' the city. For myself, I'll put
My fortunes to your service, which are here
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain;
For, by the honour of my parents, I
Have utter'd truth, which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer
Than one condemned by the king's own mouth,
Thereon his execution sworn.

Pol. I do believe thee;
I saw his heart in's face. Give me thy hand:
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My ships are ready, and My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago. — This jealousy
Is for a precious creature: as she's rare,
Must it be great; and, as her person's mighty,
Must it be violent; and as he does conceive
He is dishonour'd by a man which ever Profess'd to him, why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Fear o'ershades me:
Good expedition be my friend; heaven comfort!
The gracious queen, part of his dream, but nothing
Of his ill-taken suspicion! Come, Camillo:
I will respect thee as a father; if Thou bear'st my life off hence. Let us avoid.

Cam. It is in mine authority to command
The keys of all the posterns. Please your heightness
To take the urgent hour. Come, sir: away!

[Exeunt]
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord: Shall I be your play-fellow?

Mam. No, I'll none of you.

1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mam. You'll kiss me hard, and speak to me as if I were a baby still.—I love you better.

2 Lady. And why so, my lord?

Mam. Not for because Your brows are blacker: yet black brows, they say, Become some women best, so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semi-circle, Or a half-moon made with a pen.

2 Lady. Who taught this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of women's faces.—Pray now, What colour are your eyebrows?

1 Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's nose That has been blue, but not her eyebrows.

2 Lady. Hark ye, The queen, your mother, rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a fine new prince, One of these days, and then you'd wanton with us, If we should have you.

1 Lady. She is spread of late Into a goodly bulk: good time encounter her!

Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you? Come, sir; now I am for you again: pray you, sit by us, And tell us a tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, shall 't be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter. I have one of sprites and gobins.

Her. Let's have that, good sir. Come on; sit down:—come on, and do your best To fright me with your sprites: you're powerful at it.

Mam. There was a man.—

Her. Nay, come, sit down; then on.

Mam. Dwelt by a church-yard.—I will tell it softly; You'd crickets shall not hear it.

Her. Come on then, And give't me in mine ear.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train? Camillo with him?

1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them: never Saw I men scour so on their way. I eyed them Even to their ships.

Leon. How bless'd am I [Aside.]

Her. n my just censure! in my true opinion!—

Alack, for lesser knowledge!—How accur'd, In being so blest!—There may be in the cup A spider steep'd, and one may drink a part, And yet partake no venom, for his knowledge Is not infected; but if one present The abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides, With violent heists.—I have drunk, and seen the spider. Camillo was his help in this, his pander.— There is a plot against my life, my crown:

All's true that is mistrusted:—that false villain, Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him. He has discover'd my design, and I Remain a pinch'd thing; yes, a very trick! For them to play at will.—How came the posterns [To them.

So easily open?

1 Lord. By his great authority; Which often hath no less prevail'd than so, On your command.

Leon. I know 't too well.— Give me the boy [To Hermione.] I am glad, you did not nurse him: Though he does bear some signs of me, yet you Have too much blood in him.

Her. What is this? sport?

Leon. Bear the boy hence; he shall not come about her.

Away with him: and let her sport herself With that she's big with; for 'tis Polixenes Has made thee swell thus.

Her. But, I'd say he had not, And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying, How'er you lean to the hayward.

Leon. You, my lords, Look on her, mark her well: be but about To say, 'she is a goodly lady,' and The justice of your hearts will thereto add, "T is pity she's not honest, honourable" Praise her but for this her without-door form, (Which, on my faith, deserves high speech) and straight The shrug, the hum, or ha (these petty brands, That calumni doth use,--O, I am out!— That mercy does, for calumny will sear Virtue itself)—these shrugs, these hams, and ha's, When you have said, "she's goodly," come between Ere you can say "she's honest." But be't known, From him that has most cause to grieve it should be, She's an adultress.

Her. Should a villain say so, The most replenish'd villain in the world, He were as much villain: you, my lord, Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady; Polixenes for Leontes. O, thou thing! Which I'll not call a creature of thy place, Lest barbarism, making me the precedent, Should a like language use to all degrees, And mannerly distinction leave out Betwixt the prince and beggar!—I have said She's an adultress: I have said with whom: More, she's a traitor: and Camillo is A foedary with her, and one that knows What she should shame to know herself, But with her most vile principal, that she's A bed swerver, even as bad as those That vulgar'se give bold'st titles; ay, and privy To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life, Privy to none of this. How will this grieve you, When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You thus have publish'd me? Gentle my lord, You scarce can right me thoroughly then, to say You did mistake.
Leon. No; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A school-boy's top.—Away with her to prison!
He, who shall speak for her, is afar off guilty,
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient, till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable—Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are, the want of which vain dew,
Perchance, shall dry your piths; but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here, which burns
Worse than tears drown. Beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me;—and so
The king's will be performed.

Leon. Shall I be heard? [To the Guards.
Her. Who is 't that goes with me?—Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for you see,
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know, your mistress
Has deserv'd prison, then aloud in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace.—Adieu, my lord:
I never wish'd to see you sorry: now,
I trust, I shall.—My women, come: you have leave.

Leon. Go, do our bidding: hence!

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

1 Lord. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice
Prov'd violence; in the which three great ones suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. For her, my lord,
I dare my life lay down, and will do 't, sir,
Please you, I accept it, that the queen is spotless
I the eyes of heaven, and to you: I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep me stable where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her;
Then when I see, and see her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false,
If she be.

Leon. Hold your peace!

1 Lord. Good my lord,

Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves.
You are abus'd, and by some putter-on,
That will be damn'd for 't; would I knew the villain,
I would lamback him. Be she honour-lawn'd,—
I have three daughters: the eldest is eleven,
The second, and the third, nine, and some five;
If this prove true, they'll pay for 't: by mine honour,
I'll gild them all: fourteen shall they not see,
To bring false generations: they are co-heirs,
And I had rather gibl myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease! no more.
You smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose; but I do see 't, and feel 't,
As you feel doing thus, and see withal
The instruments that feel.

Ant. If it be so,
We need no grave to bury honesty
There's not a grain of it the face to sweeten
Of the whole dunghy earth.

Leon. What! lack I credit?

1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord,
Upon this ground; and more it would content me
To have her honour true, than your suspicion,
Be damn'd for 't how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we—Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Our prerogative
Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness
Imparts this; which, if you (or stupidly,
Or seeming so in skill) cannot, or will not,
Relish a truth like us, inform yourselves,
We need no more of your advice: the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on 't, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture.

Leon. How could that be?
Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wert born a fool. Camillo's flight,
Added to their familiarity,
(Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation
But only seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to the deed) doth push on this proceeding
Yet, for a greater confirmation,
(For in an act of this importance 't were Most piteous to be wild) I have despatch'd in post,
To sacred Delphes, to Apollo's temple,
Cleomenes and Dion, whom you know
Of stuff'd sufficiency. Now, from the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel ha',
Shall stop, or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied, and need no more Than what I know, yet shall the oracle
Give rest to the minds of others; such as he,
Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth. So have we thought it good,
From our free person she should be confin'd,
Lost that the treachery of the two fled hence
Be left her to perform. Come, follow us:
We are to speak in public; for this business
Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside.] To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter PAULINA and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison,—call to him:

[Exit an Attendant

Let him have knowledge who I am.—Good lady!
No court in Europe is too good for thee,
What dost thou then in prison?—Now. good sir,
Re-enter Attendant, with the Jailor.

You know me, do you not?

Jailor. For a worthy lady,
And one whom much I honour.

Paul. Pray you then,
Conduct me to the queen.

Jailor. I may not, madam: to the contrary
I have express commandment.

Paul. Here's ado,
To lock up honesty and honour from
Th' access of gentle visitors!—Is't lawful, pray you,
To see her women? any of them? Emilia?

Jailor. So please you, madam,
To put apart these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.
Paul. I pray now, call her.—[Exeunt Attend.]

Jailor. And, madam, must be present at your conference. [Exit Jailor.]

Paul. Well, be’th so, pr’rythee. Here’s such ado to make no stain a stain, As passes colouring. [Enter Jailor, with Emilia.]

Dear gentlewoman, How fares our gracious lady? Emil. As well as one so great, and so forlorn, May hold together. On her frowns, and griefs, (Which never tender lady hath borne greater) She is, something before her time, deliver’d.

Paul. A boy? Emil. A daughter; and a goodly babe, Lusty, and like to live: the queen receives Much comfort in’t, says, “My poor prisoner, I am innocent as you.”

Paul. I dare be sworn: These dangerous, unsane, tunes the king, besireth them! He must be told on’t, and he shall: the office Becomes a woman best; I’ll take’t upon me.

If I prove honey-mouth’d, let my tongue blister, And never to my red-look’d anger be The trumpet any more.—Pray you, Emilia, Command my best obedience to the queen: If she dares trust me with her little babe, I’ll show’t the king, and undertake to be Her advocate to the loud’st. We do not know How he may soften at the sight of the child: The silence often of pure innocence Persuades, when speaking falls.

Paul. Most worthy madam, Your honour, and your goodness, are so evident, That your free undertaking cannot miss A thriving issue: there is no lady living So meet for this great errand. Please your ladyship To visit the next room, I’ll presently Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer, Who, but to-day, hammer’d of this design, But durst not tempt a minister of honour, Lest she should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia, I’ll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it, As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted I shall do good.

Emil. Now, be you blest for it! I’ll to the queen.—Please you, come something nearer.

Jailor. Madam, if’t please the queen to send the babe, I know not what I shall incur to pass it, Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir: The child was prisoner to the womb, and is, By law and process of great nature, thence Freed and enfranchis’d; not a party to The anger of the king, nor guilty of, If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Jailor. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon mine honour, I Will stand betwixt you and danger. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace. Enter Leonatus, Antigonus, Lords, and other Attendants.

Leon. Nor night, nor day, nor rest. It is but weak.

Emil. To bear the matter thus, mere weakness. If

---in f.e. 2 This word is not in f.e. 3 Not in f.e. 4 Encouraging.

The cause were not in being, part o’ the cause, She, th’ adulteress; for the harlot king Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank And level of my brain, plot-proof; but she I can hook to me: say, that she were gone, Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest Might come to me again.—Who’s there? 1

Leon. How does the boy? 1

Emil. Leon. He took good rest to-night 'Tis hop’d, his sickness is discharg’d.

Leon. To see his nobleness

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother, He straight declin’d, droop’d, took it deeply, Fasten’d and fix’d the shame on’t in himself, 'Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep, And downdraft languish’d.—Leave me solely:—go, See how he fares. [Exit Attend.—Fie, fie! no thought of him— The very thought of my revenges that way Recoil upon me: in himself too mighty, And in his parties, his alliance:—let him be, Until a time may serve: for present vengeance, Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes

Laugh at me: make their pastime at my sorrow: They should not laugh, if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power, [Enter Paulina, behind, with a Child.

1 Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me. Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, Than the queen’s life? a gracious innocent soul, More free than he is jealous.

Ant. That’s enough.

1 Attten. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; com¬ manded

None should come at him. Paul. I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you,— That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh At each his needless heavings, such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking: I Do come with words as medicinal as true, Honest as either, to purge him of that humour, That presses him from sleep.

About some gossips for your highness. Leon. How?— Away with that audacious lady. Antigonus, Icharg’d thee, that she should not come about me: I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord, On your displeasure’s peril, and on mine, She should not visit you.

Leon. What! canst not rule her? Paul. From all dishonesty he can: in this, (Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me for committing honour) trust it, He shall not rule me.

Ant. Lo, you now! you hear. When she will take the rein, I let her run; But she’ll not stumble.

Paul. Good my liege, I come,— And, I beseech you, hear me, who professes Myself your loyal servant, your physician, Your most obedient counsellor, yet that dares Less appear so in comforting your evils,
ANT. Hang all the husbands
That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself
Hardly one subject.

Leon. Once more, take her hence.
Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord
Can do no more.

Leon. I'll ha' thee burn'd.
Paul. I care not
It is an heretic that makes the fire,
Not she which burns in't. I'll not call you tyrant;
But this most cruel usage of your queen
(Not able to produce more accusation
Than your own weak h'ing'd fancy) something savours
Of tyranny, and will ignite make you,
Yes, scandalous to the world.

Leon. On your allegiance,
Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant,
Where were her life? She durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her!

Paul. I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone.
Look to your babe, my lord: 't is yours: Jove send her
A better guiding spirit! — What need these hands? —
You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies,
Will never do him good, not one of you.
So, so: — farewell; we are gone.

[Exit Leon. Thou, traitor, hast set thy wife to this.
My child? away with 't! — even thou, that hast
A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence,
And see it instantly consum'd with fire:
Even thou, and none but thou. Take it up straight.
Within this hour bring me word 't is done,
(And by good testimony) I'll seize thy life,
With what thou else call'st thine. If thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so;
The bastard-brains with these my proper hands
Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire,
For thou set'st on thy wife.

Ant. I did not, sir:
These lords, my noble fellows, if they please,
Can clear me in 't.

1 Lord. We can; my royal liege,
He is not guilty of her coming hither.

Leon. You're liars all.

1 Lord. Beseech your highness, give us better credit
We have always truly serv'd you, and beseech you
So to esteem of us; and on our knees we beg,
(As recompense of our dear services,
Past, and to come) that you do change this purpose;
Which, being so horrible, so bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue. We all kneel.

Leon. Am I a feather for each wind that blows?
Shall I live on, to see this bastard kneel
And call me father? Better burn it now,
Than curse it then. But, be it; let it live:—
It shall not neither. — You, sir, come you hither;

[To Antigonus

Yon, that have been so tenderly officious
With lady Margery, your midwife, there,
To save this bastard's life,— for 't is a bastard,
So sure as thy beard's grey; — what will you adventure
To save this brat's life?

Ant. Any thing, my lord,
That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose: at least, thus much;
I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,
To save the innocent; any thing possible.

Leon. It shall be possible. Swear by this sword
Thou wilt perform my biddings.
In more than this deed doth require!—And blessing
Against this cruelty fight on thy side,
Poor thing, condemn'd to loss!  [Exit with the Child
Leon.
No; I'll not rear
Another's issue.
1 Atten. Please your highness, post
From those you sent to the oracle are come
An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion,
Being well arriv'd from Delphos, are both landed,
Hasting to the court.
1 Lord. So please you, sir, their spe
Hath been beyond account
Leon. Twenty-three days
They have been absent: 'tis good speed, foretels.
The great Apollo suddenly will have
The truth of this appear. Prepare you, lords:
Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most disloyal lady; for, as she hath
Been publicly accuss'd, so shall she have
A just and open trial. While she lives,
My heart will be a burden to me. Leave me,
And think upon my bidding. [Exit]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street in some Town.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cleo. The climate's delicate, the air most sweet,
Fertile the isle, the temple much surpassing
The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report,
For most it caught me, the celestial habits,
(Methinks, I so should term them) and the reverence
Of the grave wavers. O, the sacrifice!
How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly!
It was it the offering!

Cleo. But, of all the burst
And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing.

Dion. If th' event o' the journey
Prove as successful to the queen.—O, be 't so!
As it hath been to us rare, pleasant, speedy,
The time is worth the use on 't.

Cleo. Turn all to the best! These proclamations,
So forceful are upon Hermione,
I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it
Will clear, or end, the business: when the oracle,
(Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up)
Shall the contents discover. something rare;
Even then, will rush to knowledge.—Go, fresh horses;
And gracias be the issue. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Court of Justice.

Enter Leontes, Lords, and Officers.

Leon. This session (to our great grief we pronounce)
Even push'd 'gainst our heart: the party tried
The daughter of a king: our wife, and one
Of us too much belov'd. Let us be clear'd
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in justice, which shall have due course, speech 3 The words 'to her trial,' not in f. e. 4 Own

To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so uncurrent I
Have strayed, 'd not appear that it came jot beyond
The bound of honour, or, in fact, or will,
That way inclining, harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin.
Cry. "Fie!" upon my grave.

Leon. I ne'er heard yet,
That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less immoderation to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first.

Her. That's true enough:
Though it is a saying, sir, not due to me.

Leon. You will not own it.

Her. More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
With whom I am accus'd I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honour he requir'd,
With such a kind of love as might become
A lady like me; with a love, even such,
So and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude
To you, and toward your friend, whose love had spoke,
Even since it could speak from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not what it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wet no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You know of his departure, as you know
What you have undertaken to do in's absence.

Her. Sir,
You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.

Leon. Your actions are my dreams:
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it.—As you were past all shame,
(Those of your fact are so) so past all truth,
Which to deny concerns more than avails; for as Thy brat hath been cast out, like to itself,
No father owning it, (which is indeed,
More criminal in thee than it) so thou
Shalt feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats:
The bug, which you would fright me with, I seek.
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy,
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence
I am barr'd, like one infectious. My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast.
The innocent milk in its most innocent mouth,
Haled out to murder: myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet: with immodest hatred,
The child-bed privilege denied, which long
To women of all fashion: lastly, hurried
Here to this place, 'tis the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore, proceed.
But yet hear this; mistake me not.—No: life,
I prize it not a straw; but for mine honour,
(Which I would free) if I shall be condemn'd
Upon surmises, all proofs sleeping else
But what your jealousies awake, I tell you,
'T is rigour, and not law.—Your honours all,
